His miracles were notorious, and admitted by all. His followers became so numerous that they were to be found in all countries. In Rome, in the reign of Claudius, a statue was erected in his honor.

Clement of Rome, speaking of Simon Magus, says that:

"He wishes to be considered an exalted person, and to be considered 'the Christ.' He claims that he can never be dissolved, asserting that he will endure to eternity. "

Montanus was another person who evidently believed himself to be an Angel-Messiah. He was called by himself and his followers the "Paraclete," or "Holy Spirit" (Lardner's Works, vol. viii. p 593)

Socrates, in his Ecclesiastical History, tells us of one Buddhas (who lived after Jesus):

> "Who afore that time was called Terebynthus, which went to the coasts of Babylon, inhabited by Persians, and there published of himself many false wonders : that he was born of a virgin, that he was bred and brought up in the mountains, etc."

He was evidently one of the many fanatics who believed themselves to be the Paraclete or Comforter, the "Expected One."

Another one of these Christ was Apollonius. This remarkable man was born a few years before the commencement of the Christian era, and during his career, sustained the role of a philosopher, religious teacher and reformer, and a worker of miracles. He is said to have lived to be a hundred years old. From the history of his life, written by the learned sophist and scholar, Philostratus, we glean the following:

Before his birth a god appeared to his mother and informed her that he himself should he born of her. At the time of her delivery, the most wonderful things happened.' All the people of the country acknowledged that he was the "Son of God." As he grew in stature, his wonderful powers, greatness of memory, and marvelous beauty attracted the attention of all. A great part of his time was spent, when a youth, among the learned doctors; the disciples of Plato, Chrysippus and Aristotle. When he came to man's estate, he became an enthusiastic admirer and devoted follower of Pythagoras. His fame soon spread far and near, and wherever he went he reformed the religious worship of the day. He went to Ephesus, like Christ Jesus to Jerusalem, where the people flocked about him. While at Athens, in Greece, he cast out an evil spirit from a youth. As soon as Apollonius fixed his eyes upon him, the demon broke out into the most angry and horrid expressions, and then swore he would depart out of the youth. He put an end to a plague which was raging at Ephesus, and at Corinth he raised a dead maiden to life, by simply taking her by the hand and bidding her arise. The miracles of Apollonius were extensively believed, by Christians as well as others, for centuries after his time. In the fourth century Hierocles drew a parallel between the two Christs -Apollonius, and Jesus - which was answered by Eusebius, the great champion of the Christian church.

In it he admits the miracles of Apollonius, but attributes them to sorcery.

Apollonius was worshiped as a god, in different countries, as late as the fourth century. A beautiful temple was built in honor of him, and be was held in high esteem by many of the Pagan emperors. Eunapius, who wrote concerning him in the fifth century, says that his history should have been entitled "The Descent of a God upon Earth."

It is as Albert Reville says:

“The universal respect in which Apollonius was held by the whole pagan world, testified to the deep impression which the life of this Supernatural Being had left indelibly fixed in their minds; an expression which caused one of his contemporaries to exclaim, We have a God living among us."

A Samaritan, by name Menander, who was contemporary, with the apostles of Jesus, was another of these fanatics who believed himself to be the Christ. He went about performing miracles, claiming that be was a Savior, "sent down from above from the invisible worlds, for the salvation of mankind" (Eusebius, Eccl. Hist., lib. 3, ch. xxiii). He baptized his followers in his own name. His influence was great, and continued for several centuries.

Justin Martyr and other Christian Fathers wrote against him.

Manes evidently believed himself to be "the Christ," or "he who was to come." His followers also believed the same concerning him. Eusebius, speaking of him, says:

”He presumed to represent the person of Christ; he proclaimed himself to be the Comforter and the Holy Ghost, and being puffed up with this frantic pride, chose, as if he were Christ, twelve partners of his new-found doctrine, patching into one heap false and detestable doctrines of old, rotten, and rooted out heresies, the which he brought out of Persia" (Eusebius, Eccl. Hist., lib. 7, ch. xxx).

The word Manes, says Usher in his Annals, has the meaning of Paraclete or Comforter or Saviour. This at once lets us into the secret, a new incarnation, an Angel-Messiah, a Christ, born from the side of his mother, and put to a violent death, flayed alive, and lung up, or crucified, by a king of Persia. This is the teacher with his twelve apostles on the rock of Gualior.

Du Perron, in his Life of Zoroaster, gives an account of certain prophecies to be found in the sacred books of the Persians. One of these is to the effect that, at successive periods of time, there will appear on earth certain "Sons of Zoroaster," who are to be the result of immaculate conceptions. These virgin-born gods will come upon earth for the purpose of establishing the law of God. It its also asserted that Zoroaster, when on earth, declared that in the “latter days" a pure virgin would conceive, and bear a son, and that as soon as the child was born a star would appear, blazing even at noonday, with undiminished splendor. This Christ is to be called Sosiosh. He will redeem mankind, and subdue the Devs, who have been tempting and leading men astray ever since the fall of our first parents.

Among the Greeks the same prophecy was found. The Oracle of Delphi was the depository, according to Plato, of an ancient and secret prophecy of the birth of a "Son of Apollo," who was to restore the reign of justice and virtue on the earth (Plato in Apolog. Anac., ii. p. 189)

Those who believed in successive emanations of AEons from the Throne of Light, pointed to the passage in the Gospels where Jesus is made to say that he will be succeeded by the Paraclete or Comforter. Mohammed was believed by many to be this Paraclete, and it is said that he too told his disciples that another Paraclete would succeed him. From present appearances, however, there is some reason for believing, that the Mohammedans are to have their ancient prophecy set at naught by the multiplicity of those who pretend to be divinely appointed to fulfill it. The present year was designated as the period at which this great reformer was to arise, who should be almost, if not quite, the equal of Mohammed. His mission was to be to purify the religion from its corruptions; to overthrow those who had usurped its control, and to rule, as a great spiritual caliph, over the faithful. According to accepted tradition, the prophet himself designated the line of descent in which his most important successor would be found, and even indicated his personal appearance. The time having arrived, it is not strange that the man is forthcoming, only in this instance there is more than one claimant. There is a “holy man" in Morocco who has allowed it to be announced that he is the designated reformer, while cable reports show that a rival pretender has appeared in Yemen, in southern Arabia, and his supporters, sword in hand, are now advancing upon Mecca, for the purpose of proclaiming their leader as caliph within the sacred city itself.

History then relates to us the indisputable fact that at the time of Jesus of Nazareth an Angel-Messiah was expected, that many persons claimed, and were believed to be, the "Expected One," and that the reason why Jesus was accepted above all others was because the Essenes - a very numerous sect - believed him to be the true Messiah, and came over to be his followers in a body.

It was because there were so many of these Christs in existence that some follower of Jesus ,but no one knows who, wrote as follows:

"If any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ, or, lo, he is here; believe him not; for false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect" (Mark, xiii. 21-22).

The reasons why Jesus was not accepted as the Messiah by the majority of the Jews was mainly for two reasons:

1. Because the majority expected a daring and irresistible warrior and conqueror, who, armed with greater power than Caesar, was to come upon earth to rend the fetters in which their hapless nation had so long groaned, to avenge them upon their haughty oppressors, and to re-establish the kingdom of Judah; and this Jesus - although he evidently claimed to be the Messiah -did not do.

2. Besides this the kingdom was to come through righteousness and Israel, expected to be a Holy Nation of Priests, had to merit the Kingdom and her King. Israel's failure in this regard meant the Messianic prophecies were not fulfilled and the Davidic King redeemer would not succeed. The understanding of such is available to you at:

Tacitus, the Roman historian, says

> " The generality had a strong persuasion that it was contained in the ancient writings of the priests, that at that very time the east should prevail : and that some one, who should come out of Judea, should obtain the empire of the world ; which ambiguities foretold Vespasian and Titus. But the common people (of the Jews), according to the influence of human wishes, appropriated to themselves, by their interpretation, this vast grandeur foretold by the fates, nor could be brought to change their opinion for the true, by all their adversities."

Suetonius, another Roman historian, says:

> " There had been for a long time all over the east a constant persuasion that it was recorded in the fates (books of the fates, or foretellings), that at that time some one who should come out of Judea should obtain universal dominion. It appears by the event, that this prediction referred to the Roman emperor ; but the Jews, referring it to themselves, rebelled."

This is corroborated by Josephus, the Jewish historian, who says:

"That which chiefly excited them (the Jews) to war, was an ambiguous prophecy, which was also found in the sacred books, that at that time some one, within their country, should arise. that should obtain the empire of the whole world. For this they had received by tradition, that it was spoken of one of their nation; and many wise men were deceived with the interpretation. But, in truth, Vespasian's empire was designed in this prophecy, who was created emperor (of Rome) in Judea."

As the Rev. Dr. Geikie remarks, the central and dominant characteristic of the teaching of the rabbis, was the certain advent of a great national Deliverer - the Messiah - but not a God from heaven.

For a time Cyrus appeared to realize the promised Deliverer, or, at least, to be the chosen instrument to prepare the way for him, and, in his turn, Zerubabel became the center of Messianic hopes. In fact, the national mind had become so inflammable, by constant brooding on this one theme, that any bold spirit, rising in revolt against the Roman power, could find an army of fierce disciples who trusted that it should be he who would redeem Israel (Geikie, The Life Of Christ, vol. i. p. 79).

The "taxing " which took place under Cyrenius, Governor of Syria (A. D. 7), excited the wildest uproar against the Roman power. The Hebrew spirit was stung into exasperation; the puritans of the nation, the enthusiasts, fanatics, the zealots of the law, the literal constructionists of prophecy, appealed to the national temper, revived the national faith, and fanned into flame the combustible elements that smoldered in the bosom of the race. The Messianic hope was strong in these people; all the stronger on account. of their political degradation. Born in sorrow, the anticipation grew keen in bitter hours. That Jehovah would abandon them could not be believed.

The thought would be atheism. The hope kept the eastern Jews in a perpetual state of insurrection. The cry "Lo here, lo there! " was incessant. Claimant after claimant of the dangerous supremacy of the Messiah appeared, pitched a camp in the wilderness, raised the banner, gathered a force, was attacked, defeated, banished, or crucified; but the frenzy did not abate.

The last insurrection among the Jews, that of Bar-Cochba, "Son of the Star," revealed an astonishing frenzy of zeal. It was purely a Messianic uprising. Judaism had excited the fears of the Emperor Hadrian, and induced him to inflict unusual severities on the people. The effect of the violence was to stimulate that conviction to fury. The night of their despair was once more illumined by the star of the east. The banner of the Messiah was raised. Potents, as of old, were seen in the sky; the clouds were watched for the glory that should appear. Bar-Cochba seemed to fill all the popular idea of the deliverer. Miracles were ascribed to him; flames issued from his mouth. The vulgar imagination made haste to transform the audacious fanatic into a child of David. Multitudes flocked to his standard. The whole Jewish race throughout the world was in commotion. The insurrection gained head. The heights about Jerusalem were seized and occupied, and fortifications were erected; nothing but the "host of angels" was needed to insure victory.

The angels did not appear; the Roman legions did. The " Messiah," not proving himself a conqueror, was held to have proved himself an impostor, the "son of a lie" (Frothingham, Cradle of the Christ).

The impetuous zeal with which the Jews rushed to the standard of this Messianic impostor, in the 130th year of the Christian era, demonstrates the true Jewish character, and shows how readily any one who made the claim, was believed to be " He who should come." Even the celebrated Rabbi Akiba sanctioned this daring fraud. Akiba declared that the so-called prophecy of Balaam: "a star shall rise out of Jacob, "was accomplished. Hence the impostor took his title of Bar-Cockabas, or Son of the Star; and Akiba not only publicly anointed him " KING OF THE JEWS," and placed an imperial diadem upon his head, but followed him to the field at the head of four-and-twenty thousand of his disciples, and acted in the capacity of master of his horse.

In the absence of the fulfillment of the Jewish prophecies in the Jewish Scriptures, faith in Jesus as the Messiah waned, especially in the failure of him to reappear before the destruction of the Temple as well as the war of 135 A.D. Those who yet believed on the meek and benevolent Jesus, and whose number was very small, were of that class who believed in the doctrine of the Angel-Messiah, first heard of among them when taken captives to Babylon. The Davidic Messiah did not appear. Hopes were split between the yet coming of the Biblical Messiah with those of the Angel-Messiah of the Essene-Christians. These believed that just as Buddha appeared at different intervals, and as Vishnu appeared at different intervals, the avatars appeared among the Jews. Adam, and Enoch, and Noah, and Elijah or Elias, might in outward appearance be different men, but they were really the self-same divine person successively animating various human bodies! This is clearly seen from the statement made by the writer of the Gospel of Matthew (xvii:9-13) that the disciples of Jesus supposed John the Baptist was Elias.

The prevailing opinion of the Rabbis and the people alike, in Jesus' day, was, that the Messiah would simply be a great prince, who should found a kingdom of matchless splendor. With a few, however, like the Essene-Christians, the conception of the Messiah's kingdom was pure and lofty...Daniel, and all who wrote after him, painted the "Expected One," as a heavenly being. He was the "messenger," the "Elect of God," appointed from eternity, to appear in due time, and redeem his people (Geike, Life of Christ, vol. 1, pp. 80-81). In the book of Daniel, by some supposed to have been written during the captivity, by others as late as Antiochus Epiphanies (B.C.E. 175), the restoration of the Jews is described in tremendous language, and the Messiah is portrayed as a supernatural personage, in close relation with Jehovah himself. In the book of Enoch, supposed to have been written at various intervals between 144 and 120 B.C.E., and to have been completed in its present form in the first half of the second century that preceded the advent of Jesus, the figure of the Messiah is invested with supernatural abilities. He is called "The Son of God," "whose name was spoken before the Sun was made;" "who existed from the beginning in the presence of God," that is, was pre-existent. At the same time his human characteristics are insisted on. He is called "Son of Man," even "Son of Woman," "The Anointed," or "The Christ," "The Righteous One" (Frothingham,The Cradle of the Christ, p. 20).

JESUS AS AN AVATAR

Christ Jesus was the avatar of the ninth age, Christ Cyrus was the avatar of the eighth. Of the hero of the eighth age it is said: "Thus said the Lord to his Anointed (i.e., His Christ), his Messiah, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden to subdue nations.'" The eighth period began about the Babylonish captivity, about six hundred years before Christ Jesus.

The ninth began with Christ Jesus, making in all eight cycles before Jesus.

"What was known in Judea more than a century before the birth of Jesus Christ cannot have been introduced among Buddhists by Christian missionaries. It will become equally certain that the bishop and church-historian, Eusebius, was right when be wrote, that he considered it highly probable that the writings of the Essenic Therapeuts in Egypt had been incorporated into our Gospels, and into some Pauline epistles" (Bunsen, The Angel-Messiah, p. 17).

Well there you have it in summary form: How the Jewish Messiah, thought by many to be Jesus, was later interpreted as a Phythagorean-Buddhist-Iranian sun-godman and how the concepts were later blurred as we find today in the writings of the New Testament as quotes from a forged and adulterated Old Testament which was purposefully mistranslated by the Greek-Jewish Essenes of Alexandria to further their authority for their corporate body. With the crucifixion of Jesus these "beliefs" were applied to him following his death and with the conversion of this corporate body into the early Jewish Messianic Movement these "Essenic beliefs" would later divide the conservative Pharisees from the Essenes. The separatist movement would gather steam as the documents of this sect and their teachings highly influenced the Greeks who were coming to the faith as well as their intellectuals which were again influenced by the Alexandrian religious thought. For further information on the subject of the connection between Essenism and Christianity, the reader is referred to Taylor's Diegesis, Bunsen's Angel-Messiah, and the works of S. F. Dunlap.

THE RELIGIOUS SYNTHESIS THAT WAS THE FOUNDATION FOR ESSENE RELIGIOUS BELIEFS...& THE ORIGIN OF GENTILE CHRISTIANITY

It never ceases to amaze me in my studies the overall failure of Christian commentators to be acquainted with the evolution of the Essenes and their doctrines, dogmas, philosophies from generation to generation. It seems as if the vast majority of writers on the Essenes read Josephus, Philo, or Pliny and believe these accounts are a realistic and total view of this theologically complex group of apocalyptists. An unbiased study of the Essenes will show that this group grew by gradual stages, from a Judaizing program at the beginning into an esoteric cult of celibate-communist apocalytpists at the end some two-hundred years later. Serious investigation into these Essenes will reveal how they were able to create in secrecy the elements, which, according to accepted Christian history, were proclaimed for the first time to an astonished public by John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth.

It is only by looking at the Essene movement and tracing its evolution by comparing the doctrines within their writings can we see for certain how the theological views of this "sect" changed over two-hundred years!

By 143 B.C.E., the Zadokites had become known definitely as the Sadducees; and the Chasidim, splitting into two parties, had become known as the Pharisees and the Essenes. The Essenes could be looked upon as "ultra-strict" Pharisees. The Sadducees became identified with the rich and successful; the Pharisees became the popular leaders; and the Essenes gradually evolved into an esoteric communion of celibate communists.

As stated above, it is a shame that so few have endeavored to trace the evolution of these Essenes (Holy Ones) from their pristine, pre-Chasidic beginnings as a Zadokite reaction against Hellenization among the Jews, into the frozen, rigid, esoteric, and celibate-communist mystery-cult which they had become in the days of Philo and Josephus. Until this is done then it is very difficult to look at the writings left from this group of individuals and discern that many of their "religious doctrines" originated outside of normative Judaism and find their points of origin in the Pythagorean, Buddhist, and Iranian religious culture.

It would be this Essenic group of Greek-Jews of Alexandria, Egypt who would be responsible for the purposeful gross mistranslation and corrupton of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek. The Septuagint, their final production, ended up as an adulterated and fraudulent creation that fostered the religious views of the sect and which would serve as the foundation for the Greek Old Testament which would be used not only by the Christian Church but Jews who no longer had the ability to read Hebrew.

There is evidence which indicated that, about 70 B.C.E. or soon thereafter, an Essene prophet known as the Teacher of Righteousness had been put to death by the Jewish authorities because of doctrinal, ritualistic, and organizational heterodoxy; that, in due course, his followers declared that he was God himself, appearing as a man in Jerusalem, and that his death was an atoning sacrifice for the elect; that he arose from the grace and returned to heaven; and that he would send a representative in a few years who would be precisely the kind of Messiah that was proclaimed for Jesus by his followers. There is a strong indication that if Jesus was not at one time affiliated with the Essenes, that he was strongly influenced by them and their doctrines; yet at times we find Jesus' individuality and diversion from some of the Essene tenants. Many feel that Jesus was persuaded that he was himself the Messiah expected by the Essene Community, that he left it and preached the Gospel to the public; and that finally, in a revised concept of his own mission, re-enacted the role and the passion of the slain Teacher, and proclaimed that in his eschatological role he would appear as the last judge and the all-powerful Son of Man.

The book of Acts attests that the core of the pristine Christian communion consisted of individual Essenes who defected to the "Jesus Movement" soon after Jesus' crucifixion; that soon after Jesus' death and later after the destruction of Jerusalem these Essene Priests came over in large numbers and constituted the Christian-Essene communion known as the Ebionites; and, finally, that many of the multifarious primitive Gnostic communions, which flourished during the early centuries of this era, bear the indelible imprint of Essene origin and influence.

Those who speak of "our Judeo-Christian tradition or culture" are laboring under a serious misconception. Ours is not the social, political, or economic system reflected in the Mosaic Law or the Yahweh prophets, which existed in Palestine following David and Solomon; and western life is separated by an even more impassable gulf from the ethics, political economy, and religious discipline set forth in the Essene and Synoptic Scriptures. Our culture is based substantially upon Graeco-Roman antecedents. The Essenes absorbed their basic ideology originally from Zoroastrianism and later from Greek-mystery sources, particularly Pythagoreanism. The Essenes group, originally a return to Torah movement, would evolve into a group that would reject Judaism in toto; and except for certain Buddhist accretions, Jesus and the pristine church reproduced the Essene pattern faithfully. Since, however, this form of Christianity was wholly unacceptable in the pagan world, it was Hellenized in the Pauline literature and the Fourth Gospel, both of which reflect Stoic influence; these eventually became the essential foundation for that reconstruction or restitution of Christianity known as the Protestant Reformation. Ancient Hellenized Christianity itself did not long survive; for the soon-to-be victorious Catholic Church, in order to establish itself as a theocracy, absorbed their most salient elements from the great pagan cults which were its competitors.

Answer for yourself: Why, then, does it continue as the dominant religion of the western world?

Neither inertia or surrender to the past nor yet the power of vested and venerable institutions can explain the power of the Christian religion. For the dominance of Christianity in the western world finds its momentum from the fact that Paul and the writer of the Fourth Gospel Hellenized the pristine Essene evangel, then it was paganized by Catholicism, and then the Protestant Reformation revolutionized, not only the religious, but also the political and economic structure of northern Europe. The broad appeal of Christianity stems from the fact that it a synthesis of the most important doctrines which had already been developed in the great pre-Christian cultures over a period of centuries. Had this not been so, it would simply have been a restrictive creed and would, like many others, soon have vanished from the stage of history.

The central elements in the Synoptic Gospels as derived from Essene theology are:

1. The divine, atoning, and sacrificial savior, who gives his own life to redeem that of his communicants and who, by rising from the grave, is empowered to confer divinity and immortality upon them also
2. An ethical system which makes every one economically and politically equal in a social order where want and injustice are forever abolished, and in which the family, based on sex and procreation, is replaced by the larger family of the celibate saints
3. An eschatological doctrine, according to which the redeemed will enjoy everlasting happiness in communion with each other in a kingdom of righteousness, from which all others will be banished into everlasting torture
4. The promise of an imminent Parousia when the savior will reappear in power to conduct the Last

Judgment and institute the everlasting celibate-communal kingdom of heaven on earth, which will then belong to the saints in perpetuity.

5. The redeemed were to be healed of all their physical and other maladies for time and eternity

What escapes the understanding of 99.9 % of all Christians is that the immediate source of these concepts was the Essene society and the pagan influences to which they had yielded over two-hundred years. Behind them the ultimate origins of these above religious concepts must be traced to the mystery-cults and the major religions of the pre-Christian world.

What follows is a detailed and semi-chronological view of the development of this religious synthesis of which I speak. Staring with Egyptian religion and the religious myth of Osiris, one can easily trace the "evolution" of religious ideas through the succeeding nations and world powers unto its final metamorphosis by the Essenes and the proto-Christian community. Today the western world is influenced by such a religious synthesis which can be shown clearly to be the evolution of sun-worship in its many disguises. Anyone who looks at Gentile Christianity and believes it to be a Divine and unique revelation from God in Heaven would do well to read the following set of articles for such a notion could not be further from the truth.

TRACING THE EVOLUTION OF ESSENE RELIGIONS BELIEFS AS WE EXAMINE THE BOOK OF ENOCH...THE MAIN ESSENE RELIGIOUS WRITING

As demonstrated above, and elsewhere on this website, the Essenes of the first century were a far cry from normative Judaism. Through the articles coming next we trace, in the the Essene's main religious document, the evolution of Essenic religious beliefs as they move further away from Biblical Judaism and more toward Zoroastrian, Pythagorean, Greek and Buddhist beliefs. Of special interest will be the sequential development and enlargement of the Essene doctrines regarding the Messiah. It will be easy as we read the sequential development of these Messianic beliefs to discern the heavy Zoroastrian and Pythagorean religious influence upon the Essenes who fused the Davidic Messiah with the solar-myth saviors of the Gentiles.

Let us now move on to the study of the Book of Enoch to see these things for ourselves.

HERESIES ADOPTED BY THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH....THOSE WHO GAVE YOU THE NEW TESTAMENT NO LESS

Constantly we at Bet Emet are not understood when being critical of much of what the New Testament teaches. We understand such misunderstanding because most of our readers have not had the opportunity to read and study to the level we have over the last 15 years where we discovered much that forced we make changes in our religious belief system. Simply we found, based upon our studies, that much of the New Testament, especially in doctrinal positions, was a replacement of the actual beliefs of a Rabbi named Yeshua who lived in the first century. A cursory reading of the New Testament does not always provide such an understanding, for most read it as if it is "inspired, infallible, and inerrant." Upon just a little personal study into this area and when using good sources one quickly can see that they have deceived in this crucial area of their life.

Understand such a false trust and belief in the New Testament by most Christians today is not based upon the reader's individual study, but rather upon the hearsay he has picked up by listening to others express such trust in the New Testament. The sad fact of the matter is that those who say such things have never done their homework to the depth necessary to see the problems inherent in accepting the New Testament as authoritative.

The New Testament was never meant to be a replacement book for the Jewish Scriptures, but sadly has become that today for the vast majority of non-Jewish believers in God.

Doctrine, when found in the New Testament, to be true must conform to the Word of God.....THE OLD TESTAMENT: "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isaiah 8:20)

Answer for yourself: Do you believe the above statement by Isaiah the prophet? If you do not, then you need to read no further for this study will not have benefit you for you since you have in reality no substance for your authority. One then believes what he wants and not what was intrusted to Holy men of old preserved and handed down to others who paved the way for the Messiah to come.

Thus if we find doctrines in the New Testament which contradict the Jewish Scriptures...such doctrines are to be understood as fables and lies. To fail to do so contradicts Isaiah the Prophet as well as Moses.

Before you read the following...understand that those who gave you the following man-made doctrines are the same ones who gave you the NEW TESTAMENT that has ended up replacing the Bible Jesus used…the Old Testament as taken from the Jewish Tankah (the true Masoretic Text).

Can we trust the Holy Spirit to have led these early anti-Semitic Catholics into all truth, and should we trust their collection of writings called the New Testament when they, in many places, contradict Moses and Jesus?

We at Bet Emet cannot, and we offer no man apologies.

Just understand that when you read the New Testament, with all its additions, purposeful misquotes of the Jewish Scriptures, changes, deletions and doctrinal creationism over the early centuries of the Gentile Church, these were the doctrines behind the men who did it!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

The Papacy is of pagan origin. The title of pope or universal bishop, was first given to the bishop of Rome by the wicked emperor Phocas. Gregory 1, then bishop of Rome, refused the title, but his successor, Boniface III, first assumed title "pope." 610

Jesus did not appoint Peter to the headship of the apostles and forbade any such notion. Note:-- Nor is there any mention in Scripture, nor in history, that Peter ever was in Rome, much less that he was pope there for 25 years; Clement, 3rd bishop of Rome, remarks that there is no real 1st century evidence that Peter ever was in Rome."

The kissing of the Pope's feet. It had been a pagan custom to kiss the feet of emperors. The Word of God forbids such practices. 709

The Temporal power of the Popes. When Pepin, the usurper of the throne of France, descended into Italy, called by Pope Stephen II, to war against the Italian Lombards, he defeated them and gave the city of Rome and surrounding territory to the pope. Jesus expressly forbade such a thing, and He himself refused worldly kingship. 750

Worship of the cross, images and relics was authorized. This was by order of Dowager Empress Irene of Constantinople, who first caused to pluck the eyes of her own son, Constantine VI, and then called a church council at the request of Hadrian I, pope of Rome at that time. 788

Such practice is called simply IDOLATRY in the Bible, and is severely condemned. (Read Ex. 20:4; 3:17; Deut. 27:15; Psalm 115).

Holy Water, mixed with a pinch of salt and blessed by the priest, was authorized 850

The veneration of St. Joseph began 890

The baptism of bells was instituted by Pope John XIV 965

Canonization of dead saints, first by Pope John XV. 995

Every believer and follower of Christ is called saint in the Bible.

Fasting on Fridays and during Lent were imposed. 998

Imposed by popes said to be interested in the commerce of fish. (Bull, or permit to eat meat), some authorities say, began in the year 700. This is against the plain teaching of the Bible.

The Mass was developed gradually as a sacrifice; attendance made obligatory in the 11th century.

The celibacy of the priesthood was decreed by Pope Hildebrand, Boniface VII. Jesus imposed no such 1079 rule, nor did any of the apostles. On the contrary, St. Peter was a married man, and St. Paul says that bishops were to have wife and children.

The Rosary, or prayer beads was introduced by Peter the Hermit, in the year 1090. Copied from Hindus and Mohammedans. The counting of prayers is a pagan practice and is expressly condemned by Christ. (Matt. 6:5-13). 1090

The Inquisition of heretics was instituted by the Council of Verona in the year 1184. Jesus neve 1184 taught the use of force to spread his religion.

The sale of Indulgences, commonly regarded as a purchase of forgiveness and a permit to indulge in 1190 sin. Christianity, as taught in the Bible, condemns such a traffic and it was the protest against this traffic that brought on the Protestant Reformation in the 16th century.

The dogma of Transubstantiation was decreed by Pope Innocent III, in the year 1215. By this doctrine the priest pretends to perform a daily miracle by changing a wafer into the body of Christ, and then he pretends to eat Him alive in the presence of his people during Mass. The Bible condemns such absurdities. 1215

Confession of sin to the priest at least once a year was instituted by Pope Innocent III., in the Lateran Council. The Bible commands us to confess our sins direct to God. (Read Psa. 51:1-10; Luke 7:48; 15:21; I John 1:8-9). 1215

The adoration of the wafer (Host), was decreed by Pope Honorius. So the Roman Church worships a God made by human hands. This is plain idolatry and absolutely contrary to the spirit of the Gospel. (Read John 4:24). 1220

The Bible forbidden to laymen and placed in the Index of forbidden books by the Council of Valencia. Jesus commanded that the Scriptures should be read by all. (1229

The Scapular was invented by Simon Stock, an English monk. It is a piece of brown cloth, with the picture of the Virgin and supposed to contain supernatural virtue to protect from all dangers those who wear it on naked skin. This is fetishism. 1287

The Roman Church forbade the cup to the laity, by instituting the communion of one kind in the Council of Constance. The Bible commands us to celebrate the Passover. 1414

The doctrine of Purgatory was proclaimed as a dogma of faith by Council of Florence. There is not one word in the Bible that would teach the purgatory of priests. 1439

The doctrine of 7 Sacraments affirmed. 1439

The Ave Maria. It was completed 50 years afterward and finally approved by Pope Sixtus V, at the end of the 16th century. 1508

The Council of Trent, held in the year 1545, declared that Tradition is of equal authority with the Bible. 1545

By tradition is meant human teachings. The Pharisees believed the same way, and Jesus bitterly condemned them, for by teaching human tradition, they nullified the commandments of God.

The apocryphal books were added to the Bible also by the Council of Trent. These books were not recognized as canonical by the Jewish Church. 1546

The Creed of Pope Pius IV was imposed as the official creed 1560 years after Christ and the apostles. 1560

True Christians retain the Holy Jewish Scriptures as their creed. Hence their creed is 1500 years older than the creed of Roman Catholics.

Pope Pius IX declared the Virgin Mary to have had an Immaculate Conception. The Bible states that all men, with the sole exception of Christ, are sinners. Mary herself had need of a Savior. (Read Rom. 3:23; 5:12; Psa. 51:5; Luke 1:30,46,47). 1834

In the year 1870 after Christ, Pope Pius IX proclaimed the dogma of Papal Infallibility. This is a blasphemy and the sign of the apostasy and of the anti-christ predicted by St. Paul. Pope's title: "VICARIVS FILII DEI." -- V-5, I-1; C-100, I-1; V-S, I-1; L-50, I-1; I-1; D-500, I-l Total, 666. 1870

Pope Plus X, in the year 1907, condemned together with "Modernism", all the discoveries of modern 1907

science which are not approved by the Church

Pius IX had done the same thing in the Syllabus of 1864.

In the year 1930 Pius XI, condemned the Public Schools 1930

In the year 1931 the same pope Pius XI, reaffirmed the doctrine that Mary is "the Mother of God". 1931

This doctrine was first invented by the Council of Ephesus in the year 431. This is a heresy contrary by Mary's own words. (Read Luke 1:46-49; John 2: l-5).

In the year 1950 the last dogma was proclaimed by Pope Pins XII, the Assumption of the Virgin 1950

UNDERSTANDING THE ABOVE INFORMATION

Answer for yourself: If you have difficulty in accepting these above heresies as truth, then why do you accept their other beliefs hidden within the New Testament that violate the Laws, the Prophets and the Writings?

This knowledge as given in the above chart alone should at least make one suspicious that other such "heresies" might be contained within the New Testament which you might not at present be aware. This should spur you into your own personal study to find out if such things be so. Believe us at Bet Emet, they are there hidden beneath the contexts of many events which are displayed in the New Testament which are simply unhistorical and can be proven to be in violation of facts and evidence of history which will prove them wrong upon study.

Answer for yourself: If you have difficulty in accepting these above heresies as truth, then why would you accept their other beliefs cleverly contained in the New Testament which, without through knowledge of the Old Testament, will not be noticed as fraudulent in simple reading of the New Testament?

The Roman Church says it never changes; yet, it has done nothing else but invent new doctrines which are contrary to the Bible and the original belief system of Yeshua, and has practiced rites and ceremonies taken bodily from paganism. Some scholar has found that 75% of the rites and ceremonies of the Roman Church are of pagan origin. We trust that you desire to be a follower of Jesus/Yeshua more than a follower of your Denomination or Church and its inherited traditions!

Don't look now my Protestant friends because much of what you practice in your church comes from these pagan background...and most of you are not aware!

THE EARLY CHURCH FATHERS INCRIMINATE THEMSELVES AND THE GENTILE CHRISTIAN FAITH...AND I BET YOU NEVER KNEW THIS...DID YOU?

In Seminary I remember looking at the Library shelves that supported the multiple volumes of the Ante-Nicean Fathers. I beheld thousand and thousands of pages of their writings. I even amused myself that to read and understand such a large volume of literature would take years. It did!

What I came to admire about such writings is when you read enough of them you find that these "pro-Christian" writers often incriminated themselves with what they wrote. The following examples are for your benefit.

JUSTIN MARTYR

Eusebius, in his Church History, tells us that Justin, in his Dialogue with Trypho, says "there exists not a people, civilized or semi-civilized, who have not offered up prayers in the name of a crucified Savior to the Father and Creator of all things" (Hist. Eccl. lib i. ch. iv).

The honesty of Justin Martyr as portrayed here is the heart of the subject matter of these web pages. I intend to show you that from the beginning of time the pagan nations had their "crucified Sun-gods" and much recorded about Jesus of Nazareth in the New Testament is nothing more than the "re-telling" of the same Sun-Myths; the only difference is that now they are applied to the life of Jesus the Jew. Do you want the truth before you die? Then keep reading.

EUSEBIUS

Eusebius says that "the names of Jesus and Christ were both known and honored by the ancients" (Hist. Eccl. lib. i. ch. iv). How could this be?

Eusebius, the great champion of Christianity, admits in his book: "that which is called the Christian religion is neither new nor strange, but-if it be lawful to testify the truth-was known to the ancients"

(Hist. Eccl. lib. 2, ch. v.). How could this be?

Eusebius, who is our chief guide for the early history of the Church, confesses that he was by no means scrupulous to record the whole truth concerning the early Christians in the various works which he has left behind him (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl., ch. viii. p. 21).

Edward Gibbon, speaking of Eusebius says: "The gravest of the ecclesiastical historians, Eusebius himself, indirectly confesses that he has related what might rebound to the glory, and that he has suppressed all that could tend to the disgrace, of religion. Such an acknowledgment will naturally excite a suspicion that a writer who has so openly violated one of the fundamental laws of history has not paid a very strict regard to the observance of the other; and the suspicion will derive additional credit from the character of Eusebius, which was less tinctured with credulity, and more practiced in the arts of courts, than that of almost any of his contemporaries" (Gibbon, Rome, vol. ii., Philadelphia, 1876).

SAINT AUGUSTINE

Augustine is quoted as saying: "That in our time is the Christian Religion, which to know and follow is the most sure and certain health, called according to that name, but not according to the thing itself, of which is the name; for the thing itself which is now called the Christian Religion really was known to the ancients, nor was wanting at any time from the beginning of the human race until the time when Christ came in the flesh, from whence the true religion, which had previously existed, began to be called "Christian;" and this in our days is the Christian religion, not as having been wanting in former times, but as having in later times received this name" (Opera Augustini, vol. i. p. 12; quoted in Taylor's Diegesis, p. 42).

Now if you read these quotes you have to admit that they are very troubling to the contemporary Christian. I always heard: "Where there is smoke there is fire" [pardon the pun please]. If you find the courage to look beyond these quotes then you will find the kindling used for the paganization of Christianity by the Gentile Church whereby it become little more than another manifestation of Sun Worship. Jesus know the difference and you should as well.

TERTULLIAN

Tertullian, one of the Christian Fathers (A.D. 200), originally a Pagan, and at one time Presbyter of the Christian Church in Africa, reasons in the following manner on the evidences of Christianity: "I find no other means to prove myself to be impudent with success, and happily a fool, than by my contempt of shame, - as, for instance, I maintain that the Son of God was born. Why am I not ashamed of maintaining such a thing? Why, but because it is itself a shameful thing. I maintain that the Son of God died. Well, that is wholly credible, because it is monstrously absurd. I maintain that after having been buried he rose again; and that I take to be mainly true, because it was manifestly impossible" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 326).

For example, early Church Father Tertullian (160-220 C.E.), an "ex-Pagan" and Bishop of Carthage, ironically admits the true origins of the Christ story and of all other such god-men by stating in refutation of his critics, "You say we worship the sun; so do you" (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).

Interestingly, a previously strident believer and defender of the faith, Tertullian later renounced Christianity. (Wheless, Forgery in Christianity, p. 147).

Cardinal Newman, in his book, The Development of the Christian Religion, admits that ... "Temples, incense, oil lamps, votive offerings, holy water, church holidays and season of devotions, processions, blessing of fields, sacerdotal vestments, the tonsure (of priests and monks and nuns), images ... are all of pagan origin..." (Page 359).

HERESIES are those doctrines and practices which are contrary to the Bible. They are also called "human traditions" or "doctrines of men". Both Peter predicted and warned that in the later times "false teachers" would rise within the Church and bring in "damnable heresies" and "doctrines of devils". (Read II Peter 2:1-3). Jesus rebuked the Pharisees, for they transgressed the commandments of God by keeping their traditions. "in vain," He said, [speaking in the first person representing the Father] "they worship me by keeping for doctrines the commandments of men" (Matt. 15:3,9).

The testimony of their heresies can be found in much of the New Testament today which did not even become recognized until the fourth century.

The Word of God commands us to get out of Idolatry and pagan expressions of religious faith. All true "Christians" SHOULD desire to be faithful to the religion of Jesus as taught in the Jewish Bible.....the Jewish Scriptures...the Jewish Tanakh, and many of them can can still be detected within the New Testament with a little study. However, so much more is alien to what the true Yeshua both believed and practiced. Now is the time to study. I hope you take the challenge. Your rewards are eternally waiting....will you merit them?

ANGELS & SHEPHERDS VISIT THE INFANT SAVIOR...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

As soon as the God-begotten saviours were born into the world they were adored by shepherds from near by. In some cases they were also visited by wise men, or Magi, as the Persians and Brahmins called them, from far away. Sometimes the visitors were from even farther away, even angels leaving their heavenly ranks to wing their way to this rude tenement to adore its new born saviour.

Angels appeared to Confucius who was born in 598 BC as well as Christ. In both cases Magi also assembled to present their offerings to the infant God. Magi is used in the Apocryphal Gospels to designate the wise men who visited Christ at birth. Magi, Magic and Magician are derivations from the same root, all suggesting a wisdom correlated to the gods.

When Confucius was born five wise men from afar came to the house, celestial music was heard in the skies, and angels attended the scene. In Matthew the circumstances are the same (Mt 2:1). The only difference in the popular imagination is the number of wise men. Matthew does not say but popularly it is three. The Persian story also gives the number of Magi who visited the young saviour of that country as five.

Luke speaks of a multitude of the heavenly host praising God (Lk 2:13). Popularly the heavenly host was singing its praises so we have another way of saying that celestial music was heard. How complete the parallel!

Luke 2:13-15 13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, 14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. 15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. (KJV)

Let us not also forget the "shepherds who watched their flocks by night," who by noticing this "announcing star." The writer of the Gospel of Luke would have us believe that these shepherds likewise were awakened to the auspicious time of the birth of the Sun-King. This star had alerted them of his birth and they knew that the Savior of Mankind was about to be born. These shepherds were attendants to a "free Heavenly concert." It makes a beautiful picture.

It goes further. Confucius, like Christ, had twelve chosen disciples. He was descended from a royal house of princes, as Christ from the royal house of David, and like Christ was born poor. He had a disagreement with a monarch and retired for a long period from society into religious contemplative seclusion. He taught the same Golden Rule of doing to others as we desire them to do toward us, and other moral maxims equal in importance to anything in the Christian scriptures.

When Chrishna, the eighth avatar of India (1200 BC), was born he was inundated in flowers by angels (gods). Pipes and drums were played in the heavens, trees blossomed and pools were filled with clear water. The room was illuminated by his light, and the countenance of his father and mother shone with its brightness and glory. They had an image of him as a king and, realizing he was the preserver of the world, they began to worship him, but like the virgin Mary quickly forgot all this and soon regarded him as an ordinary infant!

It is related in the legends of Chrishna that the divine child was cradled among shepherds, to whom were first made known the stupendous feats which stamped his character with marks of the divinity. He was recognized as the promised Savior by Nanda, a shepherd, or cowherd, and his companions, who prostrated themselves before the heaven-born child. After the birth of Chrishna, the Indian prophet Nared, having heard of his fame, visited his father and mother as Gokool, examined the stars, etc., and declared him to be of celestial descent (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. pp. 129-130; Maurice, Hist. Hindostan, vol. ii. pp. 256, 257, 317; Vishnu Purana).

AEsculapius, the virgin-born Savior, was protected by goatherds (shepherds present), who, upon seeing the child, knew at once that he was divine. The voice of fame soon published the birth of this miraculous infant, upon which people flocked from all quarters to behold and worship this heaven-born child (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 150).

Many of the Grecian and Roman demi-gods and heroes were either fostered by or worshipped by shepherds. Amongst these may be mentioned Bacchus, who was educated among shepherds (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. 398), and Romulus, who was found on the banks of the Tiger, and educated by shepherds (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii. p. 213. Paris, son of Priam was educated among shepherds (Ibid. vol. i. p. 47), and AEgisthus was exposed, like AEsculapisu, by his mother, found by shepherds and educated among them (Ibid., p. 20).

In Luke's gospel an angel is reported to have saluted his mother (Lk 1:28):

> Hail, thou that art highly favored; the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women.

And in the next chapter the angel joins with the heavenly host in praising God. The same is found in the Ramayana, when Brahma and Siva, with a host of attending spirits, came to the mother of the eighth saviour and sang,

> In thy delivery, O favored among women, all nations shall have cause to exult.

The ninth avatar of India, Buddha (600 BC), is similar. On a silver plate in a cave in India is an inscription stating that a saint in the woods, at the time of the advent of Buddha, learned by inspiration that an avatar had appeared in the house of Rajah of Lailas. He flew through the air to the place beheld the new-born saviour. He declared him to be the great avatar destined to establish a new religion.

When the fame of Pythagoras (600 BC) reached Miletas and neighboring cities, their wise men came to visit him. In the Anacalypsis Magi came from the East to offer gifts at Socrates' birth, bringing gold, frankincense and myrrh, the very same offerings given to Christ. Gold, frankincense and myrrh were traditionally offered as gifts to the sun in Persia more than three thousand years ago; and in Arabia about the same time. Zoroaster of Persia (1,000 BC), says he also was visited by Magi at his earthly advent.

It seems odd that the divine Father chose to reveal the birth of his son, Jesus, to heathen idolaters hundreds of miles distant in Persia.

Answer for yourself: And why should a skill in astrology give them the privilege of seeing the world saviour at birth while people of God's own election—His Chosen—were denied the honor?

There are so many incongruities in divine revelation that it becomes knavery to dismiss them as god's mysterious ways, as Christians and Jews do. Yet both agree that God gave us reason.

Answer for yourself: So why doesn't He expect us to use reason when He chooses to reveal something to us?

SO WHAT WAS SEEN IN THE STARS ANYWAY?

Now lets examine the astrological evidence for the "three shepherds" from which these stories originated. The constellation of Orion has for millennia been recognized as a group of stars which herald the coming of winter, on Dec. 22, and the birth of the Sun (Son) God, three days later. It is the most glorious constellation in the sky! The legend of the three wise men has, for ages, been connected with the three stars in the Belt of Orion, Mintaka (the belt), Alnilam (string of pearls), and Alnitak (the girdle). These three stars (three wise men) sit proximate to the celestial equator and are easily recognizable, by all.

Answer for yourself: Can we who are "Christians" and followers of the real Yeshua be so sure that they have not been hoodwinked by anti-Semitic Gentiles who only "replayed their Sun Myths" as they played God and changed what was known once about the Rabbi from Galilee? If we can see that errors have been represented as truth in the New Testament as non-Jews changed the text of the "revelation" about Yeshua and altered the text of the documents (New Testament), then what other places could there be such gross errors as we not know it?

If you truly want the truth, and you may not, then there is so much truth to reclaim and Bet Emet stands ready to help you separate the lies from the truth in hopes your worship of the Father be in Truth and Spirit. Shalom.

THE ORDER TO BE PUT TO DEATH ...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

One would expect that an extraordinary circumstance as the birth of a God into the world must be marked with unusual incidents and fanfare. This was first exhibited by angels, shepherds, prophets, magi or "wise men," flocking around their cradles.

Besides that, one would expect the unusual display of divine power and providential care on the part of the great Father God, who was still left in heaven to save the young saviors through their infancy. But such power is threatening to the powers that be. Something had to be done to ensure the status quo. So the powers at be, not being resourceful, decide to kill the infant Savior/god-man. There is nothing new under the sun. This same story is repeated in various renditons from pagan nation to nation.

It is certainly a remarkable circumstance that so many of the infant Saviors should have been threatened with the most imminent danger of destruction, and yet in every case miraculously preserved, and thus were the Saviors saved. All of the myths of a Sun (Son) god describe some kind of threat to the life of the child god at birth. Also mentioned, is the governon or king, that sees the child as a thread to his sovereignty.

Answer for yourself: Is the same story told about Jesus only conincidence?

A jealousy seems to have existed in several instances in the mind of the tyrant king or ruler of the country that the young Saviors and prospective spiritual rulers (who were mostly of royal descent) would ultimately acquire such favor with the people, by such a display of superior power and greatness of mind, as to endanger his retaining peaceable possession of the secular throne; to express it in brief, he feared the young God would prove a rival king, and hence took measures to destroy him.

Therefore, in common with almost all of the Sun-gods, they are fated to bring ruin upon their parents or the "reigning monarch." Perseus, Oidipous, Romulus and Cyrus are doomed to bring ruin on their parents. They are exposed in their infancy on the hillside, and rescued by a shepherd. "All the solar heroes begin life in this way." Whether, like Apollo, born of the dark night (Leto), or like Oidipous, of the violet dawn (Iokaste), they are alike destined to bring destruction on their parents, as the Night and the Dawn are both destroyed by the Sun (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

ASTROLOGICAL BACKGROUND

These "destruction myths" find their origin, like most Christian doctrine, in the stars. The new Son (Son) is born in the winter as we have seen. The astrological sign of Capricorn represents the lord of Hades. This is the Cardinal sign of Winter (opposition, Satan, Saturn). Winter takes control (at the Winter Solstice on Dec. 22), and within three days of mounting his throne, he is challenged by the Sun (Son) of the Father (Sun) that he, or some other ruffians captured (at the autumnal equinox) and has finally slain at the winter solstice. So now the king (Winter, Darkness) is worried and knows that he must murder the Sun (Son) before he gains the strength of his Father (Sun). The guardians of the Sun (Son) know that he can not withstand the power of the Winter (Satan, Herod), so they shield him (Son) and hide him till his time of glory approaches (he reaches maturity) (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 34).

The Sun(Son) will be mature enough to withstand the powers of Satan after he reaches the age of thirty. This Thirty does not mean years, it means degrees of arc. The Sun is born right after the King of Darkness takes his throne, in the sign of Capricorn. This king (Herod) is determined to kill all opposition to his power within the nether world. But Capricorn (Herod) will die after thirty years(degrees), because each zodiacal sign is limited to thirty degrees of arc. Therefore after the death of Herod (Capricorn), the Sun(Son) comes out from hiding to begin his mission, he is thirty years (degrees) old. But even though the chief rival (Herod/Capricorn) of the Sun(Son) has died, the Sun is yet within the domain of Satan, under the equinoxes. He, the Sun, must face more struggles and temptations as he climbs and fights his way to his glory, at the vernal equinox (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, p. 35).

The Sun scatters the Darkness; and so the phrase went that the child was to be the destroyer of the reigning monarch, or his parent, Night. The oracles and the Magi, is was said, warned the latter of the doom which would overtake him. The newly-born babe is therefore ordered to be put to death by the sword, or exposed on the bare hilltops, as the Sun seems to rest on the Earth (Ida), at its rising. The exposure of the child in infancy represents the long rays of the morning sun resting on the hill-side (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 198).

The Sun-hero Paris is exposed on the slopes of Ida, Oidipous on the slopes of Kithairon, and AEsculapius on that of the mountain of Myrtles. This is the rays of the newly-born sun resting on the mountain-side (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i, pp. 64, 80).

In Sanskrit Ida is the Earth, and so we have the mythical phrase, the Sun at its birth is exposed on Ida-the hill-side. The light of the sun must rest on the hill-side long before it reaches the dells beneath (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 221; Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 114).

In oriental mythology, the destroying principle is generally represented as a serpent or dragon. Now, the position of the sphere on Christmas-day, the birthday of the Sun, shows the Serpent all but touching, and certainly aiming at the woman; that is, the figure of the constellation Virgo (who suckles the child Iessus in here arms). Thus we have it illustrated in the story of the snake who was sent to kill Hercules while he was yet an infant in his cradle. The history of the Savior Hercules is so similar to that of the Savior Christ Jesus, that the learned Dr. Parkhurst was forced to say:

"The labors of Hercules seem to have been originally designed as emblematic memorials of what the REAL Son of God, the Savior of the world, was to do and suffer for our sakes, bringing a cure for all our ills, as the Orphic hymn speaks of Hercules"

The "same" story can be found in Typhon, who sought the life of the infant Savior Horus.

Again, it illustrated in the story of the virgin mother Astrea, with here babe beset by Orion, and of Latona, the mother of Apollo, when pursued by the monster (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 158, 166, 168).

And last, that of the virgin mother Mary, with her babe beset by Herod. But like Hercules, Horus, Apollo, Theseus, Romulus, Cyrus, and other solar heroes, Christ Jesus has yet a long course before him. Like them, he grows up both wise and strong, and the "old Serpent" is discomfited by him, just as the sphynx and the dragon are put to flight by others.

IT IS NO DIFFERENT WHEN WE COME TO THE "CHRIST STORY"

In the case of the Christian Savior we are told that an angel, or "the angel," warned Joseph (the assumed father) to take the young Savior and God and flee with him into Egypt, because "Herod the king sought to destroy the young child's life," and had, in order to effect this end, decreed the destruction of all the children under two years old. And Joseph heeded the divine warning, and fled as directed. An angel and a dream, then, it will be observed, were the instrumentalities used to save the young Judean Savior from massacre.

And strange as it may seem, we find the same agencies had been previously employed to effect the rescue of other Saviors likewise and similarly threatened.

CHRISHNA OR CHRIST...?

In the case of Chrishna of India, in particular, the similitude is very striking in nearly every feature of the whole story.

In the first place there is the angel warning. In the Christian story we are not specifically informed how the tyrant Herod first became apprised of the birth of the Judean Savior. The Hindu story is fuller, and indicates that the angel was not only sufficiently thoughtful to warn the parents to flee from a danger which threatened to dispossess them of a divine child, and the world of a Savior, but was condescending enough to apprise the tyrant ruler (Cansa) of his danger likewise -- as we are told he heard an angel voice announcing that a rival ruler was born in his kingdom.

And hence, like Herod, he set about concocting measures to destroy him without a direct attack. Why either of them should have taken such a circuitous or roundabout way of killing an infant, when the life of the strongest man, and every man in their kingdoms, was at their instant disposal, "divine inspiration" does not inform us.

But so it was. And we must not seek to "become wise above what is written" in their bibles. Herod's decree required the destruction of all infants under two years of age (see Matt. 2:16) -- first ordering, however, "Go, and search diligently for the young child" (Matt. 2: 8).

Cansa's decree ran thus: "Let active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth, and let every boy in whom there may be found signs of unusual greatness be slain without remorse."

Now, let it be specially noticed that there is to this day in the cave temple at Elephants, in India, the sculptured likeness of a king represented with a drawn sword, and surrounded with slaughtered infants -- admitted by all writers to be much older than Christianity. Mr Forbes, in his Oriental Memories, vol. iii. p. 447, says, "The figures of the slaughtered infants in the cave of Elephanta represent them as being all boys, who are surrounded by groups of figures of men and women in the act, apparently, of supplicating for those children." And Mr. Higgins, in his Anacalypsis, testifies relative to the case, that Chrishna was carried away by night, and concealed in a region remote from his natal place, for fear of a tyrant whose destroyer it had been foretold he would become, who, for that reason, had ordered all the male children born at that time to be slain. Sculptures in Elephanta attest the story where the tyrant is represented as destroying the children. The date of this sculpture is of the most remote antiquity. "He who hath ears to hear, let him hear," and deduce the pregnant inference, Joseph and Mary fled with the young Judean God into Egypt; Chrishna's parents likewise fled with the young Hindoo Savior to Gokul.

STEP BY STEP

Now, let us observe for a moment the chain or category or resemblance.

1. There was an angel warning in each case relative to the impending danger.
2. The governor or ruler was hostile in each case to the mission of the young Savior.
3. A bloody decree was issued in both cases, having for its object the destruction of these infant Messiahs.
4. The hurried flight of the parents takes place in each case.
5. And it may be remarked further, that the "Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus," once believed by the Christian world to be "inspired," and which for hundreds of years passed current as divine authority, relates that Christ and his parents sojourned for a time at a place called Matarea, or Mathura, as Sir William Jones spells it, who says it was the birth place of Chrishna.

It is further related in the case of Chrishna, that as he and his parents approached the River Jumna in their flight, the waters "parted hither and thither," so that they passed over "dry shod," like Moses and the Israelites in crossing the Red Sea. And here let it be noted that the representation of this flight, which is said to have occurred at midnight, is like that of the massacre perpetuated and attested by imperishable monuments of stone bearing evidence of being now several thousand years old.

Sir William Jones says: --

The Indian incarnate God Chrishna, the Hindus believe, had a virgin mother of the royal race, who was sought to be destroyed in his infancy about nine hundred years before Christ. It appears that he passed his life in working miracles, and preaching, and was so humble as to wash his friends' feet; at length, dying, but rising from the dead, he ascended into heaven in the presence of a multitude." The Cingalese relate nearly the same things of their Budha." And several authors of Egyptian history refer to a story perpetuated in the Egyptian legends concerning the God Osiris, who was threatened with destruction by the tyrant Amulins, to save whom his parents fled and concealed him in an arm of the River Nile, as Christ was concealed in the same country, and, for aught that appears to the contrary, in the same locality. The mother of another and older Savior of Egypt fled by a timely warning to Epidamis before the birth of the divine child, and was there delivered of "our Lord and Savior," Horus. And the earthly or adopted father of the Grecian Savior, and God, Alcides, had to flee with him and his mother to Galem for protection from threatening danger.

In the ninth and tenth volumes of the Asiatic Researches, we find the story of the "only begotten" or "first begotten son of God," Salvahana, of Cape Comorin, son of a virgin mother (as were all the other Saviors referred to), and a carpenter by the name of Taishnea. Note with me the remembered to Joseph, "foster-father of Jesus," who was himself a carpenter. The story of this "Son of God" presents several features very similar to that relating to Jesus. Sir William Jones, Colonel Wilford, and the Rev. Mr. Maurice all confess to the antiquity of this story, as originating before the birth of Christ. Speaking of Zoroaster of Persia (another case), 600 B.C., an author remarks, "Tradition reports that his mother had alarming dreams of evil spirits seeking to destroy the child to whom she was about to give birth. But a good spirit came to rescue him, and consoled her by saying, 'Fear not; God Ormuzd will protect the infant, who has sent him as a prophet to the people and the world who are waiting for him.'" China, too, presents us with a case of the threatened destruction of a Savior in infancy, evidently recorded more than two thousand five hundred years ago. It is the case of the God Yu, who was concealed in a manner similar to that of Moses -- a commemoration of the story of which is perpetuated by an image or picture of the virgin mother with a babe upon her knee -- sometimes in her arms. Now, let it be noted that these virgin-born Gods, who, we are told, came "to save the world," could not save themselves, but had to be protected and saved by other Gods.

Without pursuing the subject further in detail, we may mention by way of recapitulation, that Chrishna, Alcides, Zoraster, Salvahana, Yu, to which list we may add Bacchus, Romulus, Moses and Cyrus, according to their reputed history, were threatened with death and destruction, but were providentially and miraculously preserved. The case of Augustus is related by Suetonius, that of Romulus by Livy, and that of Cyrus by Herodotus. It will be recollected that Pharaoh, like Herod, in order to reach the infant Moses, ordered the massacre of all the male infants (Herod making no distinction of sex), in order that he might, by this singular and circuitous method, reach the object of his jealousy and malignity without passing a direct sentence of death upon him.

The whole story of Herod's slaughter edict, with the familiar history of its execution, like nearly every other miraculous incident related in "The Holy Scriptures," which detail their histories, are traceable in the skies. Herod, we are told, literally means hero of the skin -- a term applied also to Hercules, a personification of the sun -- because the sun, on entering the constellation of the Zodiac in July, was supposed or assumed to invest himself with the skin of the lion, and this became "the hero of the skin," or a hero with a new skin. Now this solar Herod, passing through the astronomical twins and young infants of May, was said to destroy them, though the word destroy is in the Greek anairean, which any person, on turning to the Greek lexicon, will observe means also to take away, pass through, or withdraw from, so that Pharaoh more properly passed through the infants than destroyed them.

The text, "In Rama there was a voice heard," "Rachel weeping for her children," etc., is quoted by a writer (Strauss) as referring to the children slaughtered by Pharaoh. Let two things be noticed here: 1. Rama is the Indian and Phenican name for the zodiac. 2. Rachel had but two children to weep for -- Joseph and Benjamin -- just the number found in the fifth sign, or May sign, of the zodiac. And Venus, among the ancient Assyrians and Phenicans, was in tears when the sun, in his annual cross through the heavens, passed through or over the astronomical Twins (Gemini), doubtless fearfully apprehending their destruction.

The case of the massacre is an illustration and example of the manner in which all the miraculous stories related in the Christian Scriptures, as having been practically exemplified in the life of Jesus Christ, are traceable to older sources, frequently terminating among the stars.

JESUS BETRAYED FOR THIRTY PIECES OF SILVER...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH?

Matt 26:14-16 14 Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests, 15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver. 16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him. (KJV)

Matt 26:20-21 20 Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. 21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. (KJV)

The twelve disciples of Jesus (the personified Sun) are the twleve signs of the Zodiac.

The Sun (personfied Jesus) was betrayed by one of his Disciples (zodiac signs). According to the dictionary, the word "betrayed" means "to deceive, to lead astray, to deliver into the hands of ones enemy." This clearly refers to the Sign (at the autumnal equinox) that leads the Sun (Father) into the hands of the enemy (below the celestial equator), where Darkness rules (where night is longer than day time).

The Ancients wrote that the payment of Judas for his crime was thirty pieces of silver. They used the term "Silver" as a metaphor for Degrees. One sign of the Zodiac covers thrity degrees (thirty pieces) of arc. Thus we see that 12 Signs equals 360 Degrees which is EXACTLY the total arc made by the twelve Signs of the Zodiac and encircles the globe exactly.

JESUS CRUCIFIED AT THE PLACE OF THE SKULL...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Mat 27:22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified. Mat 27:23 And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

Mat 27:28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe. Mat 27:29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews! Mat 27:30 And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head. Mat 27:31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him. Mat 27:32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross.

John 19:14 And it was the preparation of the Passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King! John 19:15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We have no king but Caesar. John 19:16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away. John 19:17 And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

Answer for yourself: Is the account in the inspired, infallible, and inerrant New Testament concerning the place of the crucifixion of Jesus nothing more than a Solar-myth retold and we not know it?

THE ASTRONOMICAL ANALOGY EXPOSED

This word Golgotha is Connected to the Sign of Capricorn.

A definition pertaining to the Skull is found within both of the words, Capricorn and Golgotha. Let us look at the definition of Golgotha from my Holman's Bible Dictionary:

GOLGOTHA (gahl' guh thuh) Place name transliterated from Aramaic and or Hebrew into Greek and then into English meaning, the skull.

Also let us look from my American Heritage Dictionary and let us pay special note to definitions 4 & 5,

Cap~ri~corn (kap~ri-korn') also Cap~ri~cor~nus (kap'ri-kor~nes) --n.

1. A constellation in the equatorial region of the Southern Hemisphere, near Aquarius and Sagittarius.

2.a. The tenth sign of the zodiac in astrology.

b. One who is born under this sign. Also called Goat. [Middle English Capricorne, from Latin Capricornus: caper, capr-, goat + cornu, horn; see ker- below.]....

4. Suffixed extended form *krrs-no-. CRANIUM; MIGRAINE, OLECRANON, from Greek kranion, skull, upper part of the head.

5. Suffixed form *kr-e.

a. CHARIVARI; CHEER, from Greek hare-, kara, HEAD;

b. CAROTID, from Greek karoun, to stupefy, be stupefied ("to feel heavy-headed");

So the message is crystal clear, Jesus (Sun) being crucified at the Place of the Skulls (Golgotha = Capricornus) is when the Sun (Christ) meets it's death at the winter solstice in December, in the sign of Capricorn (Golgotha).

The word Capricorn is very intriguing. Research this word with a good dictionary and you will discover some wisdom from the Ancients. The zodiacal sign of Capricorn (where Christ (the Sun) was killed) contains, in it's etymology, clues to it's hidden meaning. The word is divided into two parts, Capri means Goat, and Corn means (derived and associated) Horn.

Now pay close attention. One of the definitions of the word Goat is Scapegoat, and a definition of Horn is a symbol (person) of high honor and authority, a King, Prince. So here we have in the esoteric meaning of this Sign Capricorn; A King that is made into a Scapegoat (a sacrificial lamb, that dies so that others may live).

Answer for yourself: Did you understand what was just said?

If you have followed our ministry any length of time you hopefully have seen how the concepts of Biblical Atonement were negated by the Gentile writers of the New Testament and likewise how the Torah was made to be "passed away." It is in this Holy Word of YHVH that we find the methods given by the Divine Creator for atonement for sin; many of which do not require blood. This was know by the Jews who throughout their history often because of captivity, as well as distance, were not left without methods of atonement and ways to be right with God following their repentance from sin.

What we have written into the New Testament are concepts of "Capricorn atonement" held sacred by the Gentile star-gazers. You can thank Rome and its Sun-worshipping predecessors for this. Since Jesus' death was at this time of the year, they simply read their superstitions from their astrology into the life of Jewish Rabbi's death. His murder was made sacrificial and given ideas that related more to astrology and the Torah. You should think deeply and sky yourself what the "scapegoat," which is involved in Yom Kippur, has to do with Passover? Nothing! Atonement was to found in the fall at the High Holy Days as given by God; specifically Yom Kippur. Passover has nothing to do with atonement and atonement was never connected with it! Again we have been duped into following in the footsteps of the pagans for which Israel was to be their light and deliverance from such falsehoods.

JESUS ENTERS JERUSALEM RIDING UPON A COLT AND AN ASS...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH?

Most Christians never read their Bibles close enough to spot some things that others see. These "tunnel-visioned" people of faith, when confronted with such absurdities, react quickly to pronounce that such a one as a "demon" or is destined to split Hell wide open. I hope that is not the case with you for what we see next is totally absurd.

Mat 21:5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

Mat 21:6 And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them, Mat 21:7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him (Jesus) thereon. Mat 21:8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strowed them in the way.

THE ASTRONOMICAL ORIGIN FOR SUCH A TALE

First we need to determine the time of the year when Jesus entered into the Holy City and most know it was in the Spring at the Passover season. Jerusalem is the Summer Solstice, the Apex, the highest point of the Sun's (Father's) travels. Let us remember that the Sun (Father) crossed the vernal equinox (tracking upward across the equator toward Spring). The Gospels instruct us that Jesus (personified as the Sun) enters Jerusalem riding upon two asses. This refers to two prominent stars which the Sun rides (crosses) within the constellation of Cancer (the sign of the summer solstice). The stars are Asellus Borealis (Northern Ass) and Asellus Australis (Southern Ass).

Now again this is but a harmless story, but the real harm has been caused by those who littered the New Testament with such fables and who also added many of their pagan religious doctrines to the life of Jesus in the texts you hold sacred. The atrocity is that these anti-Semites of old ascribed such Solar-myths and fables to Jesus when the truth of the matter is that Jesus, the Jew, nor his faith of Biblical Judaism, could or would ever accept or believe them. Sadly, as non-Jews, mainly Christians, today we have been forced through our ignorance, our apathy to study for ourselves, or the child-like faith to believe anything anyone in a three-piece suit who stands behind a pulpit says, or whoever has the latest cassette series for sale. Faith can be gullible at times. Only look at the above example. You, dear one, most likely have fallen prey to lies and superstitions about Jesus and the God he served. Without a doubt when a Christian is asked "do you want to know the truth" they unanimously resound with a ear-deafening "yes," however, when presented with hard facts and evidence they recoil in disbelief never investigating for themselves if these things they heard be true. I used to be such a one when one day I realized my "swiss-cheese" theology was full of holes. Surely the God of the Universe, who is perfect beyond all understanding, can do a better job in revealing His truth to His people than what I am being shown in Seminary. Believe me He has; I didn't at that time in my life have it. I do now and wish to share with you if you are interested. The choice is yours if you truly want to learn of the ONLY truth God has given man. It is free for the asking. You only need to read, pray, repent, and turn to God in truth as you shun the religious lies you have been given by men who profit from such instead of giving the truth to you for free. Shalom.

JESUS CHRIST AS CREATOR....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Christian dogma teaches that it was not "God the Father,: but "God the Son" who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is.

The writer of the fourth Gospel says:

"All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made" (John. 1:8).

Again:

"He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10).

Again we can read many passages indicating the same...that creation was the work of the "Son of God and not God the Father":

Heb 1:2 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; (KJV)

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is the the only account of a human "Creator" or could have the same religious ideas been later applied to a man from Galilee which had been told in legends for hundreds of years previously?

EXAMINING THE EVIDENCE

Samuel Johnson, D. O. Allen (Allen's India, pp. 137 & 380), and Thomas Maurice (Indian Antiquities, vol. ii. p. 288), tell us that, according to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna, the Son, and the second person in the ever-blessed Trinity, "who is the origin and the end of all the worlds; all this universe came into being through him, the eternal maker" (Oriental Religions, p. 502).

In the holy book of the Hindoos, called the Bhagvat Geeta, may be found the following words of Chrishna, address to his "beloved disciple" Ar-jouran:

"I am the Lord of all created things" (Lecture iv. p. 51). "Mankind was created by me of four kinds, distinct in their principles, and in their duties; know me then to be the Creator of mankind, uncreated, and without decay" (Geeta, p. 52).

In Lecture VII, entitled: "Of the Principles of Nature, and the Vital Spirit," he also says:

"I am the creation and the dissolution of the whole universe. There is not anything greater than I, and all things hang on me."

Again in Lecture LX., entitled, "Of the Chief of Secrets and Prince of Science," Chrishna says:

"The whole world was spread abroad by me in my invisible form. All things are dependent on me." "I am the Father and the Other of this world, the Grandsire and the Preserver. I am the Holy One worthy to be known; the mystic figure O.M. (the Hindoo ineffable name and the mystic emblem of deity which is never uttered aloud, but only mentally by the devout....it signifies Brahma, Vishnou, and Siva, the Hindoo Trinity)..I am the journey of the good: the Comforter; the Creator; the Witness; the Resting-place; the Asylum and the Friend" (Geeta, p. 80).

In Lecture X., entitled, "Of the diversity of the Divine Nature," he says:

"I am the Creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Those who are endured with spiritual wisdom, believe this and worship me; their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice amongst themselves and delight in speaking of my name, and teaching one another my doctrine" (Geeta, p. 84).

Innumerable texts, similar to these, might be produced from the Hindoo Scriptures, but these are sufficient to show, in the words of Samuel Johnson quoted above, that, "According to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna who is the origin and the end of all the worlds;" and that "all this universe came into being through him, the Eternal Maker."

The Chinese believed in One Supreme God, to whose honor they burnt incense, but of whom they had no image. This "God the Father" was NOT the Creator, according to their theology or mythology; but they had another god, of whom they had statues or idols, called Natigai, who was the god of all terrestrial things; in fact, God, the Creator of this world which was inferior or subordinate to the Supreme Being from whom they petition for fine weather, or whatever else they want. He was their mediator.

According to ancient Persian mythology, there is one supreme essence, invisible and incomprehensible, named "Zeruane Akerene," which signifies "unlimited time," or "the eternal." From him emanated Ormuzd, the "King of Light," the "First-born of the Eternal One," etc. Now, this "First-born of the Eternal One" is he by whom all things were made, all things came into being through him; he is the Creator.

A large portion of the Zend-Avesta, the Persian Sacred Book or Bible, is filled with prayers to Ormuzd, God's First-Born. Let us look at just a couple of examples:

"I address my prayer to Ormuzd, Creator of all things; who always has been, who is, and who will be forever; ..."

"O Creator, I obey thy laws..."

The writer of the Gospel of John copies the same invocation as you can see in the following where he says that Jesus taught that prayers are to be offered in his name as was the pattern of Sun-worship above.

John 14:13 13 And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. (KJV)

Yet this is a direct contradiction to the teachings of Jesus:

Luke 11:1-2 1 And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples. 2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth. (KJV)

According to the religion of the ancient Assyrians, it was Marduk, the Logos, the Word, "the eldest son of Hea," "the Merciful One," "the Life-giver," etc., who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 404).

Adonis, the Lord and Savior, was believed to be the Creator of men, and god of the resurrection of the dead (Dunlap, Mysteries of Adoni, p. 156).

Prometheus, the Crucified Savior, is the divine forethought, existing before the souls of men, and the creator Hominium (Ibid., p. 156).

The writer of "The Gospel according to St. John," has made Christ Jesus co-eternal with God, as well as Creator, in these words:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God". "The same was in the beginning with God" (John 1:1-2).

Again, in praying to his Father, he makes Jesus say:

"And now, O father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was" (John 14:5).

Paul is made to say:

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Again:

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday , to-day, and forever" (Heb. 13:8).

St. John the Divine, in his "Revelation," has made Christ Jesus say:

"I am the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end"..."which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty" (Rev. 1:8, 22, 13)...."the first and the last" (Rev. 1:17, Rev. 12:13).

Hindoo Scripture also makes Chrishna "the first and the last," "the beginning and the end." We read in theGeeta, where Chrishna is reported to have said:

"I myself never was not" (Geeta, p. 35). "Learn that he by whom all things were formed " (meaning himself) "is incorruptible" (Geeta, p. 36). "I am eternity and non-eternity" (Lecture IX, p 89). "I am before all things, and the mighty ruler of the universe" (Lecture X. p. 83). " I am the beginning, the middle, and the end of all things" (Lecture X, p. 85).

Ar-jouan, his disciple, address him thus:

"Thou are the Supreme Being, incorruptible, worthy to be known; thou are prime supporter of the universal orb; thou art the never-failing and eternal guardian of religion; thou art from all beginning, and I esteem thee" (Lecture IX. p. 91). "Thou art "the Divine Being, before all other gods" (Lecture X. p. 84).

In another Holy Book of the Hindoos, called Vishnu Purana, we also read that Vishnu, in the form of Chrishna, "who descended into the womb of the (virgin) Devaki, and was born as her son" was "without beginning, middle, or end" (Vishnu Purana, p. 440).

Buddha is also Alpha and Omgea, without beginning or end, "The Lord," "the Possessor of All," "He who is Omnipotent and Everlastingly to be Contemplated," "the Supreme Being, the Eternal One."

Lao-Kiun, the Chinese virgin-born God, who came upon earth about six hundred years before Jesus, was without beginning. It was said that he had existed from all eternity (Prog. of Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 200).

According to the Zend Avesta, Ormuzd, the first-born of the Eternal One, is he "who is, always has been, and who will be forever" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. ii. p. 207).

Zeus was Alpha and Omega. an Orphic lines runs thus:

"Zeus is the beginning, Zeus the middle, out of Zeus all things have been made" (Muller, Chips, vol. ii. p. 15).

Bacchus, was without beginning or end. An inscriptions on an ancient medal, referring to him, reads thus:

"It is I who leads you; it is I who protects you, and who saves you. I am Alpha and Omega."

Beneath this inscription is a serpent with his tail in his mouth, thus forming a circle, which was an emblem of eternity among the ancients.

Without enumerating them, we can from the evidence say that the majority of the virgin-born gods were like Christ Jesus...without beginning or end..and that many of them were considered Creators of all things. This has led M. Dridon to remark (Hist. de. Dieu) that in early works of art, Christ Jesus is made to take the place of the Father in creation and in similar labors, just as in heathen religions an inferior deity does the work under a superior one.

Now this Redeemer and Savior was, as you have seen, is the Sun, and Prof. Max Muller tells us that in the Vedic mythology, the Sun is not the being Deva only, "who performs his daily task in the sky, but he is supposed to perform much greater work. He is looked upon, in fact, as the Ruler, as the Establisher, and the Creator of the World " (Muller,Origin of Religions, p. 264).

Having been invoked as the "Life-bringer," the Sun is also called, in the Rig Veda, "the Breath of Life of all that move and rest;" and lastly he becomes "The Maker of all things," by whom all the worlds have been brought together (Muller, Origins of Religions, p. 268).

There is a prayer in the Vedas, called "Gayatree," which consists of three measured lines, and is considered the holiest and most efficacious of all their religious forms. Sir William Jones translated it thus:

"Let us adore the supremacy of that spiritual Sun, the godhead, who illuminates all, who re-creates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return; whom we invoke to direct our undertakings aright in our progress toward his holy seat."

With Seneca (a Roman philosopher, born at Cordova, Spain, 61 B.C.) then we can say:

"You may call the Creator of all things by different names (Bacchus, Hercules, Mercury, etc.), but they are only different names of the same divine being, the Sun."

Now we find the exact same things said about Jesus in the New Testament as its writers attribute "creation" to the Son of the Sun; to Jesus:

Again, we have the "pattern" of Sun-worship reapplied to the life of a Jewish Rabbi and hoped for Messiah by the Gentile Church....Judaism, the faith of Jesus, teaches monotheism and that all things were created by God the Father only:

- Gen 1:1 1 In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. (KJV)
- Gen 1:21 21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen. 2:3 3 And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made. (KJV)
- Gen 2:4 4 These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens, (KJV)
- Gen 5:1 1 This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 6:7 7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them. (KJV)
- Deut 4:32 32 For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? (KJV)

As if you didn't notice God existed long before the "sun" which He created later:

- Gen 1:14-19 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: 15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. 16 And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. 17 And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, 18 And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good. 19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day. (KJV)

But primitive man, knowing God through what he could only see, fashioned myths and beliefs involving the cosmos to explain to himself the God he could not see, and we have this legacy in the Roman New Testament in which we are lead to believe as did the ancients that "Sun became the Son."

THE ONLY SENSIBLE CONCLUSION THAT CAN BE MADE BY THE THINKING BELIEVER

THE APPLICATION OF GENTILE SUN-MYTHS HAS BEEN APPLIED TO THE LIFE OF JESUS AS DEPICTED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

Sometimes it is better to read one's conclusion before one reads the evidence for them. Let me say from my heart that I believe every Christian wants to know the truth about the Jewish Jesus. Without a doubt this is unquestionable. However, as you can see, because of the corruption of the oral traditions as held about Jesus by his earliest Gentile followers, what we have inherited today is anything but the truth. Today we are the beneficiaries of the sciences of Archeology, Anthropology, Astronomy, Astrology; beneficiaries of increased knowledge of Biblical History, Biblical Language, Biblical Culture, etc. We live with the added knowledge contributed by the discoveries made available by the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Nag Hammadi Library whose secrets have been available for over 50 years at present. We must not live in ignorance of such momentous advancements in knowledge if we want to know the "truth" about this man from Galilee.

After the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E., and with the vacuum created by the dispersion of the Jewish nation, the ordained authorities for the Jesus Movement were scattered and almost ceased to exist. In this wake of the absence of Jewish authority for a Gentile mission would surface a Gentile Movement which no longer paid regards to its "mother church." Unbridled, the Gentiles and anti-Semitism, mixed with improper understanding of the Jewish doctrines associated with Jesus, would culminate in a Gentile Church which would revert back to its pagan heritage. Along with that will come the corruption of the oral traditions and this will unfortunately be recorded finally in documents which today are sadly accepted as "infallible, inerrant, and inspired." Such documents you now have seen are a mixture of truth and the error of Sun Worship personified in the life of a Jewish Rabbi named Yeshua.

SO WHAT DID WE SEE IN THESE ARTICLES?

According to the Bible, Mankind was created in the image of God. This poses a very interesting question as to the descriptive "appearance of God." If we are, indeed, fashioned in the image of God, does this mean therefore, that God is Man, or does He (God) have the appearance of Man? Now, if we envision God in the likeness of Man, does this include human frailties? We, as humans, are depended upon the universe for our survival. We cannot exist without: Fire, Earth, Air, and Water. Primitive man understood this as the first "Trinity" where Earth, Air, and Water were "All in All" within Fire as symbolized by the Sun. Again, like before we find that the Ancients personified the forces of nature as shown by this sculpture from India as we find these three forces in the form of a "man."

Since Mankind was made in the "image of God" is it possible that the Creator God could be likewise dependent upon these same elements? These verses are unequivocal and clear. And according to these verses, Mankind "looks" like God and have the "characteristics" of God Almighty. Mankind has His image.

If we look up the word "image" in the American Heritage Dictionary we find:

- 1. A reproduction of the form of a person or an object, especially a sculptured likeness
- 2. Physics, an optically formed duplicate, counterpart, or other representative reproduction of an object, especially an optical reproduction of an object formed by a lens or mirror
- 3. One that closely or exactly resembles another, a double

Mankind has God's likeness.

If we look up the word "likeness" in the American Heritage Dictionary we find:

- 1. The state, QUALITY, or fact of being like; resemblance
- 2. An imitate appearance; a semblance
- 3. A pictorial, graphic, or sculptured representation of something, an image

If we attempt to further our understanding by identifying synonyms: likeness, similarity, similitude, resemblance, analogy, affinity. These nouns denote agreement or conformity, as in character, NATURE, or appearance between persons of things. Likeness implies close agreement.

I am not making a play on words. These definitions get to the heart of what the Biblical verses in Genesis actually means:

Gen 1:26-27 26 And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)

The two words, Image and Likeness, define not only appearance but even the Nature and Quality of the Creation (Image).

Can you imagine the Creator God being subject to the same needs, weaknesses, and limitations that we endure? I most certainly cannot.

Some say that Man's likeness to God refers to the spirit and not to the flesh. The English word Spirit is derived from the Latin, spiritus, which means breath or to breathe, the act of inhaling and exhaling. So what are we saying, that God breathes as we do? Again, we are making God dependent upon a product of His creation, that is to say air, which is the vital constituent of human respiration?

Let us define the word spiritual:

- 1. Of, relating to, consisting of, or having the nature of spirit; not tangible or material, IMMATERIAL
- 2. Of, concerned with, or affecting the soul
- 3. Of, from, or relating to God, deific
- 4. Of or belonging to a church or religion; sacred
- 5. Relating to or having the nature of spirits or a spirit, supernatural

The word spiritual seems to indicate that which is unseen and immaterial, unearthly, that which relates to our soul, and what is Soul?

Again, for the last time let us understand the word "soul" as taken from the American Heritage Dictionary:

Soul:

- 1. The animating and vital principle in human beings, credited with the faculties of though, action, and emotion and often conceived as an immaterial entity
- 2. The spiritual nature of human beings, regarded as immortal, separable from the body at death, and susceptible to happiness or misery in a future state
- 3. The disembodied spirit of a dead human being; a shade

Take note that the definition of the word, soul, goes to our actions, our thoughts, our emotions. Should we conclude that our emotional makeup is an accurate reflection of God's demeanor? Could God be subject to the same emotional hang-ups as we?

Not only we, but primitive man struggled with understanding what it meant to be "created in the Image of God." Mankind knew he possessed a spirit, which was corruptible. But can God, a Spirit Himself, be corruptible as Man? Surely not. Thus you can see that early Mankind was struggling to understand, what it meant to be created in the Image of God. As you can see I could go on for hundreds of pages, trying to explain with accuracy, in what manner Mankind, was created in the Image of God, and not come to a definitive solution; that is, if we try to make our conclusions agree with traditional Western religious precepts. We must never forget the Bible was not written with a Western mind-set!

TO UNDERSTAND CORRECTLY ...WE MUST PUT OURSELVES IN THE SHOES OF THOSE WE READ

As with many of our commonly accepted religious concepts in Christianity, our traditional beliefs and understandings of being created in the Image of God are in error. Being created in the Image of God does not mean what most of us have believed throughout our lives. When the Ancients wrote that we were created in God's Image, they were propounding a hypotheses based on human correlations to the Cosmos. Correlations that are Exact to the smallest detail.

The Ancients discovered undeniable correlations between the biology of the human species and the movements of celestial bodies within the stellar and solar universe. Correlations proportionately related in Time (duration) and Chronology (sequence) of Time. These correlations exist between the human species and the total universe, inclusive of the Solar System, and of the Solar System to the expanded universe (infinity).

What is said next is very important for you to understand. The Ancients saw the universe and their immediate environment as well as the capacities embodied within their own intellect as the most trustworthy representations of the Creator God.

The Universe (terrestrial and celestial) appeared to our ancestors as the ONLY authentic image of the Father.

The Cosmos was undoubtedly His Handiwork, and we, the Human creation was likewise the Handiwork of the Almighty. In consequence, when our fathers discovered that they were indeed biologically and chronologically correlated to the Cosmos, they transposed this knowledge to the written word and language as.....We (humanly) are created in the Image and the Likeness of God. One of the most noticeable correlations involves the life and light cycles of the female species of mankind to the moon. The Ancients discovered that the life (menstrual) cycle of the woman ran 28 days in correspondence with the light (phase) cycle of the moon, which also runs at 28 days intervals. They notices likewise that the phases of the woman's cycle and the moon's cycle were relational. They reasoned: "The New Moon begins in darkness and waxes to its's Fullness at 14 days (midway through the cycle of light). When the moon reaches it's fullness, after 14 days of growth (waxing), it then commences to discharge it's light so that by the end of the 28 day period all light has been shed (flushed) from it's celestial body. The life (menses) cycle of the woman of the species likewise begins in darkness (undeveloped). At the beginning of the cycle (out of darkness, undeveloped) the egg begins to grow within the ovary until it reaches maturity (fullness) at 14 days, at which point it (the egg) is released and flows toward the uterus from whence it shall be discharged (shed) from the body. If the egg is fertilized, it shall be discharged after an appointed time (280 days, the natural period of human gestation) as a new individual. If the egg is not fertilized, it shall be discharged in one tenth of the appointed time (28 days, the nature period of human menstruation) as the dead remains of a once fertile germ of life (light)" (Jabbar, The Astrological Foundation of the Christ Myth, 1995, p. 7-8).

In other words, primitive man interpreted his life as seen in the stars. In fact the whole of Mankind's "life-cycle" could be understood by him by the pattern of the Cosmos...the Cosmos being a picture of God and we, as mankind, ware created in His image

The Ancients studies ever further into the relational parallels between the human species and the Solar System which they understood as the Handiwork of the Creator God. You can now see that in many ways early Mankind saw themselves "in the stars" and interpreted this as how they were, in many ways, created in the Image of God (the universe being a symbol of God to them). Within the chronology of the Solar System, they found analogies, than can only be described as astounding and categorically conclusive in proving the correlative link between humanity (the microcosm) and the universe (the macrocosm).

As the Ancients looked to the stars in hopes of "uncovering more knowledge of God" they took notice that the Sun passed yearly through the twelve constellations of the Zodiac. The Zodiac is a system of astronomical symbols and emblems employed for the purpose of teaching and illustrating two great truths:

1. The existence of the ONE Spiritual, invisible, omnipresent, and omnipotent God, and

2. The immortality of the soul of man

This might surprise you but these two doctrines were originally taught in all the ancient Mysteries of the Gentiles in the beginning, but over time degenerated into a corrupt system of Solar Worship. The Sun, originally intended as a symbol only of the true God, was in time confounded with the person of God Himself, and thus itself worshipped as a god (Brown, Stellar Theology and Masonic Astronomy, Kessinger Pub. Co., p. 16-17). Over time, as in Greece and India, so also in ancient Egypt, the "symbols for God" became in the popular mind actual gods, and the people degenerated into gross idolatry" (Brown, Stellar Theology and Masonic Astronomy, Kessinger Pub. Co., p. 19).

Rom 1:20-25 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: 21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. 22 Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, 23 And changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. 24 Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves: 25 Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen. (KJV)

Through the benefit of Archeology we know for a fact that the ancient Mysteries of the Gentiles originally taught the unity of God, and that their moral code was both pure and exalted, but over time, as stated, these ancient Mysteries became corrupt in their turn. Their crowning secret knowledge was the existence of the ONE and ONLY God and they "represented Him" through various symbols (i.e., Sun) which were later to be "personified, glorified, and deified." Originally the Sun was only a symbol of the great Creator, and not itself a divine being. Again, as you have seen the Sun becomes the "Son" and we as followers of Jesus have inherited a religious belief system that equates the two as "one" thus making such ones "idolators."

TYING IT ALL TOGETHER FOR THE CHRISTIAN

As said earlier, primitive man interpreted his life as seen in the stars. In fact the whole of the "life-cycle" of Mankind could be understood by him by the pattern of the Cosmos. The problem is when these simple "understandings" degenerated over time into false beliefs that contradicted the Revelation from God as well as His Word do we have problems. Many of these degenerated and subsequent evolutions of Gentile "Solar Myths" and their "interpretations" have found their way into your "inspired and infallible New Testament." The Gentile writers of the New Testament have written into the life of a Jewish Rabbi named Jesus many of these "degenerated Solar Myths" which often are deceptive and misleading to those wishing to know the truth about this man and his message. It is these "Solar Cycles" which were written into the accounts of Jesus' life by Gentile reactors and editors of the New Testament which not only confuse the truth but often mask it from the reader.

Sometimes these "Solar Myths" which have been applied to Jesus' life in the New Testament are harmless; however, at times that are a direct negation of the Revelation from God and a direct contradiction of the Jewish Masoretic Text and the Bible Jesus' used and tragically those who believe such and follow such in faith end up in sin and never know it until they die.

I wish to share some closing thoughts.

Throughout the whole of the legends we have seen, Christ Jesus is the toiling Sun (being made equal with God) laboring for the benefit of others, not his own, and doing hard service for a mean and cruel generation. Watch his sun-like career of brilliant conquest, checked with intervals of storm, and declining to a death clouded with sorrow and derision. He is in constant company with twelve apostles, the twelve signs of the zodiac. The number twelve appears in many Sun-Myths. It refers to the twelve hours of the day or night, or the twelve moons of the lunar year (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 165; Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175). Osiris, the Egyptian Savior, had twelve apostles (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 175). In all religions of antiquity the number twelve, which applies to the twelve signs of the zodiac, are reproduced in all kinds and sorts of forms. For instance, such are the twelve great gods; the twelve apostles or Osiris; the twelve apostles of Jesus; the twelve sons of Jacob; the twelve tribes; the twelve altars of James; the twelve labors of Mars; the twelve brothers of Arvaux; the twelve gods Consents; the twelve governors in the Manichean System; the adectyas of the East Indies; the twelve asses of the Scandinavians; the city of the twelve gates in the Apocalypse; the twelve wards of the city; the twelve sacred cushions, on which the Creator sits in the cosmogony of the Japanese; the twelve precious stones of the rational, or the ornament worn by the high priest of the Jews, etc. (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, pp. 39-40).

Speaking of the Sun in allegorical terms, "During the course of his life's journey across the sky as seen daily he is called "The God of Earthly Blessing," "The Savior through whom a new life springs," "The Preserver," "the Redeemer," etc. Almost at his birth the Serpent of darkness attempts to destroy him. Temptations to sloth and luxury are offered him in vain. He has his work to do, and nothing can stay him from doing it, as nothing can arrest the Sun in his journey through the heavens. Like all other solar heroes, he has his faithful women who love him, and the Marys and Martha here play the part. Of his toils it is scarcely necessary to speak in detail. But a thousand variations on the story of the great conflict which all the Sun-gods wage against the demon of darkness. He astonishes his tutor when sent to school. This we might expect to be the case, when an incomparable and incommunicable wisdom is the heritage of the Sun. He also represents the wisdom and beneficence of the bright Being who brings life and light to men. As the Sun wakens the earth to life when the winter is done, so Chrishna, Buddha, Horus, AEsculapius, and Christ Jesus were raisers of the dead. When the leaves fell and withered on the approach of winter, the "daughter of the earth" would be spoken of as dying or dead, and, as no other power than that of the Sun can recall vegetation to life, this child of earth would be represented as buried in a sleep from which the touch of the Sun alone could rouse her" (Doane,Bible Myths, p.

Christ Jesus as portrayed in the Gentile New Testament, then, is the Sun, in his short career and early death. He is the child of the Dawn, whose soft, violet hues tint the clouds of early mornings; his father being the Sky, the "Heavenly Father," who has looked down with love upon the Dawn, and overshadowed her. When his career on earth is ended, and he expires, the loving mother, who parted from him in the morning of his life, is at his side, looking on the death of the Son whom she cannot save from the doom which is on him, while her tears fall on his body like rain at sundown. From her he is parted at the beginning of his course; to her he is united at its close. But Christ Jesus, like Chrishna, Buddha, Osiris, Horus, Mithras, Apollo, Attys, and others, rises again, and thus the myth takes us a step beyond the legend of Serpedon and others, which stop at the end of the eastward journey, when the night is done.

According to the Christian calendar, the birthday of John the Baptist is on the day of the summer solstice, when the sun begins to decrease. How true to nature then are the words attributed to him in the fourth Gospel, when he says that he must decrease, and Jesus increase.

John 3:30 30 He must increase, but I must decrease. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Is this a coincidence?

Among the ancient Teutonic nations, fires were lighted, on the tops of hills, on the 24th of June, in honor of the Wending Sun. This custom is still kept up in Southern Germany and the Scotch highlands, and it is the day selected by the Roman Catholic Church to celebrate the nativity of John the Baptist (Mallet, Northern Antiquities, p. 505).

Mosehim, the church historian, speaking of the uncertainty of the time when Christ Jesus was born, say:

"The uncertainty of this point is of no great consequence. We know that the Sun of Righteousness has shone upon the world; and although we cannot fix the precise period in which he arose, this will not preclude us from enjoying the direction and influence of his vital and salutary beams."

These sacred legends abound with such expressions as can have no possible or conceivable application to any other than to the "God of day." He is "light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory (or brightness) of his people."

Notice the similarity with Luke 2:32:

A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. (KJV)

He is come "a light into the world, that whosoever believeth in him should not abide in darkness"...John 12:46...

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. (KJV)

He is "the light of the world"...John 9:5:...

As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. (KJV)

He "is light, and in him no darkness is"... I Jn. 1:5....

This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. (KJV)

"All are agreed," says Cicero, "that Apollo is none other than the Sun, because the attributes which are commonly ascribed to Apollo do so wonderfully agree thereto."

Just so surely as Apollo is the Sun, so is the Lord Christ Jesus as depicted in the New Testament is the Sun. That which is so conclusive respecting the Pagan deities, applies also to to the God of the Christians; but, like the Psalmist of old, they cry, "Touch not my Christ..."

Many Christian writers of antiquity, as well as today, have seen that the history of their Lord and Savior is simply the history of the Sun, but they either say nothing, or, like some, claim that the Sun is a "type" of the true Sun of Righteousness. Mr Lundy, with whom I strongly disagree says, in his Monumental Christianity:

"Is there no bright Sun of Righteousness, no personal and loving Son of God, of whom the material Sun has been the type and symbol, in all ages and among all nations? What power is it that comes from the Sun to give light and heat to all created things? If the symbolical Sun leads such a great earthly and heavenly flock, what must be said to the "true" and only begotten Son of God? If Apollo was adopted by early Christian art as a type of the Good Shepherd of the New Testament, then this interpretation of the Sun-god among all nations must be the solution of the universal mythos, or what other solution can it have? To what other historical personage but Christ can it apply? If this mythos has no spiritual meaning, then all religion becomes mere idolatry, or the worship of material things" (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, p. 117).

Mr. Lundy's premise is that Christianity "purified" paganism. Hogwash!!!!

The problem with such a noble hypothesis is that it can be shown that Yeshua, a Jewish Rabbi, who is the center of the Christian faith, never believed or adhered to the very core doctrines of this "purifying" Gentile Christian Church.

In fact it can be easily proven that the historical Jesus of Second Temple Judaism believed opposite to hundreds of current Gentile Christian teachings of today!

Lundy's premise cannot hold up under scrutiny. According to this theory, the whole Pagan religions was typical of Christ and Christianity. Sadly I must agree that today Christianity and Pagan religion of antiquity are basically the same, but again a Jewish Rabbi is the heart and center of such Christianity today and he never believed what current Christians teach and believe because he knew what few of us today know...that the roots of such teachings are heathen and stem from Sun worship and are at their core idolatrous!

If men like Lundy and television evangelists and Gentile Pastors are correct then answer me the biggest question in the world.

Answer for yourself: Why then were not the Pagans the Lord's "chosen" people instead of the children of Israel which rejected and yet reject such "Christian teachings?" THINK!

The Jews as a nation, Jews like Jesus, were to be a light to those of us who still believe the lies of our Gentile forefathers! It is Israel who God called His Holy Nation and His Royal Priesthood and not the Aryan nations. It was Israel who was chosen to lead the Gentile peoples away from pagan superstitions and Sun Worship. Sadly, the vast majority of the Gentile nations of the world flounder in the same Sun Worship today....it is called Christianity!

The early Christians were charged with being a sect of Sun worshippers (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 283). Mr. King says, in his Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 68:

"There can be no doubt that the head of Serapis (Sun god) marked as the face is by the grave and pensive majesty, supplied the first idea for the conventional portraits of the Savior."

Read that again!

The Imperial Russian Collection boasts of a head of Christ Jesus which is said to be very ancient. Mr. King says of it: "It is in reality a head of Serapis, seen in front and crowned in Persia boughs, easily mistaken for thorns, through the bushel on the head leaves no doubt as to the real personage intended" (Ibid. p.137).

It must not be forgotten, in connection with this, that the worshippers of Serapis, or the Sun, were called "Christians"* (History of Our Lord in Art, vol. i. p. 31).

Read that again!

Thus we see that the Christians took the paintings and statues of the Sun-gods Serapis and Apollo as models, when they wished to represent their Savior Jesus. Mr. King, speaking of this god, and his worshippers, says:

"There is very good reason to believe that in the East the worship of Serapis was at first combined with Christianity, and gradually merged into it with an entire change, not substance, carrying with it many of its ancient notions and rites"* (King, Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 48).

Read that again!

Again he says:

"In the second century the syncretistic sects that had sprung up in Alexandria, the very hotbed of Gnosticism, found out in Serapis a prophetic type of Christ, of the Lord and Creator of all"* (Ibid. p. 68).

Dear ones the facts are hard to avoid.

The early Gentile Christians, or worshippers of the Sun, under the name of "Christ," had, as all Sun worshippers, a peculiar regard to the East, the quarter in which their god arose, to which point they ordinarily directed their prayers (Bell, Pantheon, vol. i. p. 13).

The followers of Mithra always turned towards the East, when they worshipped; the same was done by the Brahmans of the East and the Christians of the West. In the ceremony of baptism, the catechumen was placed with his face to the West, the symbolical representation of the prince of darkness, in opposition to the East, and made to spit towards it at the evil one, and renounce his works.

Tertullian says, that Christians were taken for worshippers of the Sun because they prayed toward the East, after the manner of those who adored the Sun. The Essenes, whom Eusebius calls Christians, always turned to the east to pray. The Essenes met once a week, and spent the night in singing hymns which lasted till sun-rising. As soon as dawn appeared, they retired to their cells, after saluting one another. Pliny says the Christians of Bithynia met before it was light, and sang hymns to Christ, as to a God. After their service they saluted one another. Surely the circumstances of the two classes of people meeting before daylight, is a very remarkable coincidence. It is just what the Persian Magi, who were Sun worshippers, were in the habit of doing.

When a Manichaean Christian came over to the orthodox Christians, he was required to curse his former friends in the following terms:

"I curse Zarades (Zoroaster) who, Manes said, had appeared as a god before his time among the Indians and Persians, and whom he calls the Sun. I curse those who say Christ is the Sun, and who make prayers to the Sun, and who do not pray to the true God, only towards the East, but who turn themselves round, following the motions of the Sun with their innumerable supplications. I curse those person who says Zarades and Budas and Christ and the Sun are all one and the same"

THE LAMB OF GOD AND THE CONSTELLATION ARIES

There are not many circumstances more striking than than of Christ Jesus being originally worshipped under the form of a Lamb, the actual Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world. It was not until the Council of Constantinople, called In Trullo, held so late as the year 707, that pictures of Christ Jesus were ordered to be drawn in the form of a man. It was ordained that, in the place of the figure of a Lamb, the symbol used to that time, the figure of a man nailed to a cross, should in the future be used. From this decree, the identity of the worship of the Celestial Lamb and the Christian Savior is certified beyond the possibility of doubt, and the mode by which the ancient superstitions were propagated is satisfactorily shown. Nothing can more clearly prove the general practice than the order of a council to regulate. This decree is today in the Vatican library. What is even more startling when you come to know it is that most of the Sun-gods were represented as the "Lamb of God" as seen in the picture of Chrishna.

The worship of the constellation of Aries was the worship of the Sun in his passage through that sign. "That constellation was called by the ancients the Lamb of God. He was also called the Savior, and was said to save mankind from their sins. He was always honored with the appellation of Dominus or Lord. He was called The Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world (remember this terminology was long prior to the historical Jesus by thousands of years). The devotees addressed him in their litany, constantly repeating the word, "O Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Grant us thy peace."

On an ancient medal of the Phenicians this Lamb of God is described with the Cross and the Rosary, which shows that they were both used in his worship long before the historical Jesus.

Yearly the Sun-God, as the zodiacal horse (Aries) was supposed by the Vedic Aryajs to die to save all flesh. Hence the practice of sacrificing horses. The "guarding spirits" of the prince Sakya Buddha sing the following hymn:

"Once when thou was the white horse

In pity for the suffering of man,

Thou didst fly across heaven to the region of the evil demons,

To secure the happiness of mankind.

Persecutions without end,

Revilings and many prisons,

Death and murder;

These hast thou suffered with love and patience

Forgiving thine executioners" (Lillie, Buddha and Early Buddhism, p. 93).

The solar horse, with two serpents upon his head (the Buddhist Aries) is Buddha's symbol, and Aries is the symbol of Christ (Lillie, Buddha and Early Buddhism, p. 110).

THE SYMBOL OF THE FISH AND THE CONSTELLATION PISCES

Christ Jesus was also symbolized as a fish, and that it is to be seen on all the ancient Christian monuments.

Answer for yourself: But what does the Christian Savior have to do with a fish? Why was he called a "fish"?

It is because the fish was another emblem for the Sun. Abarbanel says:

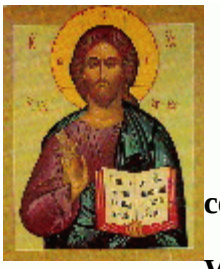
"The sign of Christ's coming is the junction of Saturn and Jupiter, in the Sign Pisces" (King, Gnostics, and their Remains, p. 138).

Apply the astronomical emblem of Pisces to Jesus, does not seem more absurd than applying the astronomical emblem of the Lamb. They applied to him the monogram of the Sun, IHS, [notice the Sun and the Cross] the astronomical and alchemical sign of Aries, or the ram, or Lamb; and, in short, what was there that was Heathenish they they have not applied to him?

The preserving god Vishnu, the Sun, was represented as a fish, and so was the Syrian Sun-god Dagon, who was also a Preserver or Savior. The Fish was sacred among many nations of antiquity, and is to be seen on their monuments.

Thus we see that everything at last centers in the Sun!

THE INFLUENCE OF CONSTANTINE...THE POWER THAT GUARANTEED YOU WON'T KNOW THE TRUTH TODAY



Simply said Constantine was a Sun worshipper before his "conversion" to the Christian faith as well as afterwards as well! These are the facts of history if you care to look.

Constantine, the first Christian emperor, had on his coins the figure of the Sun, with the legend: "To the invincible Sun, my companion and guardian," as being a representation, says Mr. King, "either of the ancient Phoebus, or the new Sun of Righteousness, equally acceptable to both Christian and Gentile, from the double interpretation of which the type was susceptible" (King, Gnostics, p. 49).

The worship of the Sun, under the name Mithra, "long survived in Rome, under the Christian emperors, and, doubtless, much longer in the remoter districts of the semi-independent provinces (Ibid. p. 45).

THE DEPICTION OF CHRIST WITH A HALO

One only needs to look at early Christian art to know theology. Christ Jesus is represented with a halo of glory surrounding his head, a florid complexion, long golden locks of hair, and a flowing robe. Now, all Sun-gods, from Chrishna of India to Baldur of Scandinavia, are represented with a halo of glory surrounding their heads, and the flowing locks of golden hair, and the flowing robe, are not wanting. But we must not forget that Jesus's depiction by the Gentile Church is nothing more than the carrying over of ancient Sun-Myths as seen in this example of Chrisina with a corresponding halo or Sun-burst 800 years before Jesus.

We must remember that "long, flowing golden locks of hair on these crucified Sun-gods was indicative of the rays of the Sun. Indra, the crucified Sun-god of the Hindus, was represented with golden locks (Cox, Aryan Myths. vol. i. p. 341). Mithras, the Persian Savior, was represented with long flowing locks. Izdubar, the god and hero of the Chaldeans, was represented with long flowing locks of hair (Smith, Chaldean Account of Genesis, p. 193), and so was his counterpart, the Hebrew Sampson. The Sakya-prince (Buddha) is described as an Aryan by Buddhistic tradition; his face was reddish, his hair of light color and curly, his general appearance of great beauty (Bunsen, The Angel-Messiah, p. 15). Serapis has, in some instances, long hair formally turned back, and disposed in ringlets hanging down upon his breast and shoulders like that of a woman. His whole person, too, is always enveloped in drapery reaching to his feet (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. 104). As for yellow hair, there is no evidence that Greeks have ever commonly possessed it; but no other color would do for a solar hero, and it accordingly characterizes the entire company of them, wherever found (Fiske, Myths and Mythmakers, p. 202). Helios (the Sun) is called by the Greeks the "yellow-haired" (Goldzhier, Hebrew Mythology, p. 137). The Sun's rays is signaled by the flowing golden locks which stream from the head of Kephalos, and fall over the shoulders of Bellerphon (Cox, Aryan Mytho., vol. i. p. 107). Perseus, son of the Virgin Danae, was called the "Golden Child" (Ibid. vol. ii. p. 58). The light of the early morning is not more pure than was the color of his fair cheeks, and the golden locks streamed bright over his shoulders, like the rays of the sun when they rest on the hills at midday (Tales of Ancient Greece, p. 83). The Savior Dionysus wore a long flowing robe, and had long golden hair, which streamed from his head over his shoulders (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 293). Ixion was the "Beautiful and Mighty," with holden hair flashing a glory from his head, dazzling as the rays which stream from Helios, when he drove his chariot up the heights of heaven; like the vesture which the Gun-god gave to the wise maiden Medeia, who dwelt in Kolchis (Tales of Ancient Greece, p. 47). Theseus enters the city of Athens, as Christ Jesus is said to have entered Jerusalem, with a long flowing robe, and with his golden hair tied gracefully behind his head (Cox, Aryan Mythology, vol. ii. p. 63).

Thus we see that long locks of golden hair and a flowing robe, are mythological attributes of he Sun. By a process of metaphor, the rays of the Sun were changed into golden hair, into spears and lances, and robes of light.

We see, then, that Christ Jesus, like Christ Buddha, Chrishna, Mithra, Osiris, Horus, Apollo, Hercules and others, is none other than a personification of the Sun as depicted in much of the New Testament, and that the Christians, like their predecessors the Pagans, are really Sun worshippers in many ways. The Sun-Myth has been added to the histories of these personages, in a greater or less degree, just as it has been added to the history of many other real personages. It it be urged that the attribution to Christ Jesus of qualities or powers belonging to the Pagan deities would hardly seem reasonable, the answer must be that nothing is done in his case which has not been done in the case of almost every other member of that great company of the gods. The tendency of myths to reproduce themselves, with differences only of names and local coloring, becomes especially manifest after perusing the legendary histories of the gods of antiquity. It is a fact demonstrated of history, that when one nation of antiquity came in contact with another, they adopted each other's myths without hesitation. After the Jews had been taken captives to Babylon, around the history of their King Solomon accumulated the fables which were related of Persian heroes. When the fame of Cyrus and Alexander became known over the then known world, the popular Sun-Myth was interwoven with their true history. The mythical history of Perseus is, in all essential features, the history of the Attic hero Theseus, and of the Thebian CEdipus, and they all reappear with heightened colors in the myths of Hercules. We have the same thing again in the mythical and religious history of Chrishna; it is, in nearly all its essential features, the history of Buddha, and reappears again, with heightened colors, in the history of Christ Jesus. The myths of Buddha and Jesus differ from the legends of the other virgin-born Saviors only in the fact that in their cases it has gathered round unquestionable historical personages.

In other words, an old myth has been added to names undoubtedly historical. Such is the case for Jesus!

In closing, as a Christian and one who honestly desires to be a follower of Jesus, then you should be constantly asking yourself two questions:

- 1. What does any of this have to do with a Jewish Rabbi which preached repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God?
- 2. Where in the religion of this Jewish Rabbi does a non-Jew, a Godfearer, find his place?

If you would like more information on how you, a non-Jew, can be assured that you are a true follower of Yeshua then let us know and we will share with you things that will strengthen your walk with God. Shalom.

THE CROSS & ITS RELATIONSHIP TO SUN WORSHIP

The cross is one of the most common structures in Western cultures. In the same way that often represents the Muslim-Oriental culture, the cross is the most universal symbol for the Christian-Western world.

The diagonal cross with arms of equal length is an extremely old sign. It has been found engraved on the walls of prehistorical caves of Europe. As an Egyptian hieroglyph it meant divide, count, and break into parts

The Latin cross is chiefly associated with the cross on which Jesus Christ was crucified. Before the time of Jesus, the cross represented, among other things, the staff of Apollo, and appeared on ancient coins.

The Latin cross turned upside down is known as St. Peter`s cross after Peter, the disciple of Jesus who is belived to have been executed by crucifixion on an upside down cross.

This cross is called a "rune" and is used in some of the old Nordic rune alphabets, is named gif or geba, meaning especially a gift from a chief to a loyal warrior or subject.

This sign has a wide spectrum of meanings from confrontation, annulment, cancellation, devoid of sense or meaning, opposition, obstruction, and mistake to unknown, unfamilar, undecided, and unsettled.

When diagonal cross appears as a closed or filled sign, , it stands for the cross of St. Andrew.

is often called the cross of Christ. It is made up by Greek letters X and P, which correspond to the letters K (or C) and R in the Latian alphabet. If one discounts letter monograms in cross forms there exist over 50 different variations.The Christian Church has often adopted cross-like ideograms from earlier ideologies that have had a positive meaning.

The Egyptian cross, is an adaptation of the ancient Egyptian hieroglyph ankh

, a symbol for life and rebirth.

The sun wheel, the inaugural cross, is identical to the ancient ideogram found in the Bronze Age. It is used by most cultures.

THE ORIGIN FOR THE CROSS

The celestial equator consists of the projection of the earth's equator onto the celestial sphere. This produces an imaginary circle in the sky which is inclined at an angle of twenty-three degrees to the other major celestial circle, namely, the ecliptic or zodiac, which is the circle in which the sun, moon, and planets appear to move against the background of the fixed stars. The celestial equator and the ecliptic intersect at two points, [forming a cross], and these two crosses or points are the equinoxes: the places where the sun, in its movement through the zodiac as seen from the earth, and is understood as the first days of spring and autumn. But understand this was understood to happen not on earth; the sun was submitted to these "crosses" in the heavens. The sun was crucified in the heavens. The ancients understood that the seasons were changed and determined by the travel of the sun; either above or below the equator. When the sun, which was though to be dead in winter with the longer days of darkness, rose above the equator, then the sun was subjected to this "cross" in its movement above the celestial equator in its elliptical orbit; the sun was though to be subjected to this "cross" or "crucified" and after 3 days, when the sun remained at the lowest point in the horizon and thought to be dead, it miraculously began it upward trajectory and with it the promise of spring and new life was on its way. The ancients understood this as the "sun being crucified on the cross."

The celestial equator is not as obscure a concept as might first appear, and certainly was not obscure in antiquity. For in the ancient geocentric (earth-centered) vision of the cosmos, the universe was built upon a framework whose basic structure was provided by the two celestial circles of the ecliptic and the celestial equator. The picture shows a Renaissance diagram of the cosmic framework, the "skeleton of the universe," in which the celestial equator is the horizontal circle around the middle of the cosmic sphere, while the ecliptic or zodiac is the tilted circle. The other circles in the diagram, such as the tropics (the horizontal circles immediately above and below the celestial equator), provided a more detailed division of the cosmic sphere, but were always of secondary importance to the primary division of the sky according to the two circles of the ecliptic and the celestial equator. Thus, we often find in antiquity images of the cosmic sphere on which are placed just these two circles.

In fact, one of the earliest surviving examples of such representations is a Mithraic monument portraying the lion-headed god standing on a cosmic sphere on which are shown the two intersecting circles of the ecliptic and the celestial equator. Looking at the Renaissance picture and the Lion-headed god on the globe we can also see why these two circles were often seen as constituting a cross, with their intersection representing the equinoctial point where the circles meet. One of the most famous and important references to this cross formed by the ecliptic and the celestial equator is found in Plato's dialogue Timaeus, where Plato tells us how the Demiurge (the creator of the universe) constructed the universe out of two circles which he joined "in the form of the letter X (the X as understood as the symbol for the cross in the heavens). The sun was later personified in the various nations and became the heroes of mythology who were "crucified before the foundation of the world" (sound familiar)?

As a result, the celestial equator was often described in ancient popular literature about the stars. Plato, for example, in his dialogue Timaeus said that when the Creator of the universe first formed the cosmos, He shaped its substance in the form of the letter X (a cross), representing the intersection of the two celestial circles of the zodiac and the celestial equator. This cross-shaped symbol was often depicted in ancient art to indicate the cosmic sphere. In fact, one of the most famous examples of this motif is a Mithraic stone carving showing the so-called "lion-headed god," whose image is often found in Mithraic temples, standing on a globe that is marked with the cross representing the two circles of the zodiac and the celestial equator and their intersection forming a "cross." Notice if you will this "Lion-headed god standing on globe with crossed circles" pictured above.

The celestial equator and the ecliptic intersect at two points, [forming a cross], and these two crosses or points are the equinoxes: the places where the sun, in its movement through the zodiac as seen from the earth, and is understood as the first days of spring and autumn. But understand this was understood to happen not on earth; the sun was submitted to these "crosses" in the heavens. The sun was crucified in the heavens. The ancients understood that the seasons were changed and determined by the travel of the sun; either above or below the equator. When the sun, which was though to be dead in winter with the longer days of darkness, rose above the equator, then the sun was subjected to this "cross" in its movement above the celestial equator in its elliptical orbit; the sun was though to be subjected to this "cross" or "crucified" and after 3 days, when the sun remained at the lowest point in the horizon and thought to be dead, it miraculously began it upward trajectory and with it the promise of spring and new life was on its way. The ancients understood this as the "sun being crucified on the cross."

NOW PAY ATTENTION: THE SUN BECOME THE SON!!!!!!!!!!

In the Vedic hymns the Sun, the Lord and Savior, the Redeemer and Preserver of mankind, is frequently called the "Son of the Sky" (Muller, Origin of Religions, pp. 261, 290).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the Sun is now become the "Son"? [THINK]

Get ready for incarnational theology for here it comes.

According to Egyptian mythology, Seb (the Earth) is overshadowed by Nut (Heaven), the result of this union being the beneficent Lord and Savior, Osiris (Renouf, Hebbert Lectures, pp. 110-111). The same thing is to be found in ancient Grecian mythology. Zeus or Jupiter is the Sky, and Danae, Leto, Iokaste, Io and others, are the Dawn, or the violet light of morning (Cox, Tales of Ancient Greece, pp. xxxi, and 82; and Aryan Mythology, vol. i. p. 229). The sky appeared to men to perform the functions of a Father, as the Earth those of a Mother. The sky was the father, for it cast seed into the bosom of the earth (rain), which in receiving them became fruitful, and brought forth, and was the mother...Plutarch The Phoenician theogony is founded on the same principles. Heaven and Earth (called Ouranos and Ghe) are at the head of a genealogy of aeons, whose adventures are conceived in the mythological style of these physical allegorists (Squire, Serpent Symbol, p. 66). In the Samothracian mysteries, which seem to have been the most anciently established ceremonies of the kind in Europe, the Heaven and the Earth were worshipped as a male and female divinity, and as the parents of all things (Squire, Serpent Symbol, p. 64). The Supreme God (the Al-fader), of the ancient Scandinavians was Odin, a personification of the Heavens. The principal goddess among them was Frigga, a personification of the Earth. It was the opinion among these people that this Supreme Being or Celestial God had united with the Earth (Frigga) to produce "Baldur the Good" (the Sun), who corresponds to the Apollo of the Greeks and Romans, and the Osiris of the Egyptians (Mallet, Northern Antiquitiess, pp. 90, 94, 98. 406, 510, 511). Xiuletl, in the Mexican language, signifies Blue, and hence was a name which the Mexicans gave to Heaven, from which Xiuleti-cutli is derived, an epithet signifying "the God of Heaven," which they bestowed upon Tezcatlipoca, who was the "Lord of All," the "Supreme God." He it was who overshadowed the Virgin of Tule, Chimelman, who began the Savior Quetzalcoatle (the Sun).

Now I could go on but you get the point.

As you have seen, the overshadowing of the Earth by the Sky produced the Sun. It would be a short step from personification to glorification to deification. And as you also saw, as far back as the Vedic hymns the Sun, the Lord and Savior, the Redeemer and Preserver of mankind, is frequently called the "Son of the Sky" (Muller, Origin of Religions, pp. 261, 290). It is this concept later accepted by Nicea that made Jesus "of the same essence as the Father;" therefore the Son is equal with the Father. This is how idolatry and Sun Worship crept into the faith of the early church and remains there today!

But back to the point, the whole concept of the immaculate virgin births of pagan godmen is found in the overshadowing of the Earth by the Sun thus producing the offspring of the Sun and Earth; namely the Son.

By comparison, now instead of the Sun being crucified in the Heavens, by making the "Son" equal with the "Sun," by default the "Son is likewise crucified in the Heavens"!

Answerfor yourself:

- Now don't you think that these beliefs among the Gentiles of the world played a large part in the fashioning of many doctrines "about Jesus?"
- Could it be possible such doctrines were "read into the life of Jesus" by non-Jews who had ingrained anit-Semitism?
- Is is possible that they made "Jesus equal with God" and recorded such "beliefs" in documents that you have come to believe today are "inerrant" and "infallible" (New Testament)?

Answer for yourself: Is the evidence not overwhelming? Where is a Jewish Rabbi to be found in any of this whose purpose was to bring men to God by preaching repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God?

Answer for yourself: As a Christian, could you have inherited and believed lies instead of the truths about the "historical Jesus" which fly in the face of such pagan traditions?

Well, you have to study to find out. We have provided the information if you truly are hungry for the truth. Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #1

Over the years our faithful readership has learned a lot. Again we make significant strides in this current study in discerning truth from error that surrounds such very important topics for the Christian like the crucifixion of Jesus and its relationship to atonement as taught by Paul in the New Testament. Again, if you have read this ministry's materials over the last years you have come complete understanding that much that is found in the New Testament has pagan origins and often this involves such "sacred" Christian doctrines like atonement. This escapes the new believer and often the "seasoned" believer if he has never had the opportunity for such study. If you are a new reader of our ministry's materials then the above statements can be quite difficult to handle and often this diminished one's desire to even look into such subjects. But truth is truth and lies are lies and anyone's worship of the Creator demands faithfulness to our Creator's Truth.

Not often, but in this case I feel warranted to caution my readership that certain necessary foundations will be necessary to be able to comprehend, understand, assimilate, and draw the proper conclusions from the data that will be presented in this series of articles. Let me explain.

Over the years we at Bet Emet have demonstrated that the Christian Old Testaments in the vast majority of Christian Bibles are a compilation of purposeful misquotes and mistranslations of the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text which has been preserved by the Jewish people for over thousands of years.This shocking revelation is open for all to see if they only knew it existed and were interested to look. Of paramount importance for the Christian are their cardinal doctrines of atonement as much of it is taken from Isaiah 53. The problem is that Isaiah the prophet as read in the Hebrew Masoretic text in pertinent passages like Isa. 53 reads completely different than the "Christian edition". We as followers of Yeshua deserve a translation and not a fictional creationism. This purposeful errors in translation was done long, long ago and few Christians and Pastors are aware. They never knew to look! This fact alone means the Isaiah 53 that Christians read is not the Isaiah 53 that Yeshua read! This should up set you; especially since most of the New Testament's atonement teachings are grounded in a falsified text. So, before you read this series of articles, it is mandatory for you to become aware of such a terrible problem that exists with the Christian's Old Testament in the places enumerated. Understand as well that when the New Testament references Isaiah that it as well is mistaken and is quoting and referring to an adulterated text. You should understand up front that the Jews can be shown to only have translated the first five books of the Old Testament into Greek and the rest was done later by non-Jews at the religious capital of the world in that day…Alexandria Egypt. This explains how "pagan ideas" and "pagan religious beliefs" were intermixed among the pages of your Christian Old Testament and was later by default referenced by the New Testament. Our ministry has prepared a detailed expose of such conspiracy and have available on request the documentation of such errors in Isaiah 53. This material is necessary for anyone who desires to read the articles forthcoming in this current series.

Likewise, it is necessary before continuing this series of articles for one to completely understand the Sacrificial System in 'DETAIL". Over the years of my pastorate I encountered continually a level of misinformation and mis-instruction in Gentile Christianity that was of a staggering proportion. Whether one listens to the radio, tunes in on the television, or even listens to Pastors Sunday after Sunday the level of misinformation is staggering. I ought to know; I used to be part of it. I was well educated in one of the finest religious institutions in America where I obtained a Masters in theology with high honors. I continued to study and dedicated myself to such following Seminary and it was there by using the many skills acquired in Seminary that I researched almost every area of my faith. My intentions were not to prove anything wrong at all; I was just in love with God. I wanted to draw closer to Him and help my fellowship do likewise and the better equipped and prepared I made myself the better I could serve the people in this capacity. However, over the years I encountered many things that challenged my "faith" and what I had been taught to accept on "faith alone". Not wishing to be bested, I set out to prove the detractors wrong and vindicate myself and my faith. Honestly, over the years my knees had to bow to a higher truth often as I encountered facts, archeological evidence, reproducible history, and unrefutable evidence that proved that much of what I had accepted by "faith alone" was in truth "lies and error". I had been duped and never knew it; that is, until I studied my blessed assurance off. I could list almost innumerable accounts where by Christian religious belief system was shown to be in error. This is simply because my Christian religious belief system was grounded in a document that could, with just a little effort, be shown to be incompatible with the "facts". I had no choice but to repent because now God and me both knew the truth. If I had to pick an area in Christian theology where almost little light and truth resides that would be in the Christian's understanding of the Sacrificial System. My whole Christian life I had been taught that the "Jews" believe "this" and "that" about the Sacrificial System. Again, I was taught wrong. It was not until I met some Rabbis and asked them one on one about many questions that I had about the Bible that I was able to be the beneficiary of the "light" to the nations. Imagine my surprise when I found out that what I had been told by my Christian leaders that the Jews believe was just the opposite. These encounters only provoked more study on my part. I have said all this to say this: it is mandatory that you have an accurate understanding of the Sacrificial System, the dynamics involved in the role of the blood as it "represents" the soul of the sacrifice. You will come to understand that the whole of the Sacrificial System in reality did not PROVIDE ATONEMENT, it only "WITNESSED" to an already received atonement prior to the slaying of the animal! This crucial truth is mandatory for any Christian to understand even if his goal was not to read the remainder of these articles.

If you have not had the opportunity yet to acquaint yourself with this necessary knowledge, STOP right not and request these valuable and vital informative articles be sent you at once. I tell everyone to believe nothing I say or teach. You must study this out for yourself to prove to yourself these things be so. The references are available to the serious student…just ask. We will be glad to help you find the source documents that expose your "falsehoods" and that will lead you to repentance and more proper worship of God. My prayer is that you will respond and study these articles in detail and let it soak in. Use the greatest organ God ever gave man; his mind and THINK! Now and only now will you be able to handle what comes next. Shalom.

It is taken for granted that the current reader has accomplished the goal of the first article: you have read the materials necessary to continue our study in this set of articles. Hopefully the goals were reached:

- You now possess a more complete understanding of what the original Isaiah both wrote and taught. Along with this comes a major change in your understanding of "the Suffering Servant" as Israel and the role it plays in the atonement. You now know better that to read only "Jesus" into every verse!
- You now possess a complete understanding of how atonement was accomplished prior to the sacrifice of the animal and it's blood being placed on the altar in communion and right standing with God. You now understand the whole process of animal sacrifice was but a picture of the soul of the sacrificer "at that moment". It either was "right" with God or not when then animals was sacrificed. Along with this you can now understand Isaiah 1, for instance, when such wanton destruction of animal life without the necessary spiritual dynamics at work in the heart of the sacrificer "wearied" God.

THE ORIGIN OF ATONEMENT…YOU MIGHT BE SURPRISED

Almost everyone will point to Adam and Eve and the animals skins and say: "see there, that is the first sacrifice for sin". Where is the word "sin offering" mentioned in the text? Somehow I missed it. Well, then they will say: "Cain and Abel brought offerings and these were for sin". Again, where does it say that these were "sin offerings" or that they brought atonement? We could go on and mention Noah, but again such offerings have something in common with all that went before: the complete silence or mention of : "sin offering", or "atonement". Dear one, if we choose to read into anything we read what we want to "believe" then there is no purpose in continuing our study of anything. We are to draw out, exegete, the text to discern what is meant in the event under question.

For your information the first mention of "sin offering" and "atonement" in the Bible is found FOLLOWING THE GOLDEN CALF incident:

Exod 29:14

14 But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin offering.

Exod 29:33

33 And they shall eat those things wherewith the atonement was made, to consecrate and to sanctify them: but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy.

What should concern us is if these two related incidents are the first examples of "sin offering" and "atonements" known to man.

The punishment of an individual by crucifixion, for claiming to be "King of the Jews," "Son of God," or "The Christ;" which are the causes assigned by the writers of the New Testament for the Crucifixion of Jesus, would need but a passing glance in our study, were it not for the fact that there is much attached to it of a DOGMATIC and HEATHENISH nature. Therefore this topic demands more considerably more than a "passing glance." The doctrine of atonement for sin has been preached long before the doctrine was deduced from the Christian Scriptures; even longer than the writing of the Old Testament. Before the period assigned for the birth of Christ Jesus, the poet Ovid had assailed the demoralizing delusion with the most powerful shafts of philosophic scorn: "When thou thyself are guilty," says he, "why should a victim die for thee? What folly it is to expect salvation from the death of another."

The idea of expiation by the sacrifice of a god was to be found among the Hindus even in Vedic times. The sacrificer was mystically identified with the victim, which was regarded as the ransom from sin, and the instrument of its annulment. The Rig-Veda represents the gods as sacrificing Purusha, the primeval male, supposed to be coequal with the Creator. This idea is even more remarkably developed in the Tandya-brahmanas, thus:

"The lord or creatures offered himself a sacrifice for the gods."

And again, in the Satapatha-brahmana:

"He who, knowing this, sacrifices the Purusha-medha, or sacrifice of the primeval male, becomes everything" (Monier Williams: Hinduism, pp. 36-40).

Prof. Monier Williams, from whose work on Hinduism I quoted above, brings to our attention that long before Moses and any Old Testament there existed in pagan religion mystical allusions to the sacrifice of a representative man.

THE $64,000 DOLLAR QUESTION

In the pursuit of truth I want to be above board and fair at all costs. This is not always done by those who publish or print their findings. You many not know it but many "opinions" are sold today and read as fact. This is not what we do at Bet Emet. We provide the facts and the evidence and let the reader make up his mind. I believe that you need to make an intelligent decision and that is impossible unless you have the facts.

Such a revelation of the "sacrificial representative man" means either ONE OF three things:

- YHVH gave primeval mankind the paradigm or pattern of the sacrificial representative man for all mankind…and and there was no need for Israel to be a "light" to anyone…
- Primeval mankind developed such a pattern of the sacrificial representative man from evolutionary beliefs connected with sun worship…and Paul and others only incorporated Yeshua within an already existing pagan religious belief system when "evangelizing" the Gentiles….these Gentile ambassadors gave the non-Jews nothing new….that that did not already believe or cherish…they only changed the names of their sun gods and elaborated upon these god's atoning deaths..
- Having read the prior articles on Isaiah 53 and the Sacrificial System, you are beginning to see the horrible evidence that you have not the truth concerning atonement and the meaning of the death of Yeshua

WE BETTER LISTEN TO YESHUA'S WARNING

Matt 24:24

24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

First of all you need to understand the word translated "Christs" in verse 24 only means "anointed" and not what you more than likely thought….a False Messiah. The warning is not to be deceived by many who present themselves as anointed of God for this or that purpose. Believe me, this is rampant today. One only needs to listen to the multitude of conflicting doctrines emanating from over the 2000 different Christian denominations that all preach different Jesuses.

To our question in point.

Answer for yourself: It is possible that in your Christian religious belief system you have, without knowing, accepted a belief in a sacrificial representative man that originated with sun worship and paganism, and have rejected or never known up to now the truths concerning these things addressed in this article?

In the pages that follow I will present OVERWHELMING evidence to help you see the truth. I will not tell you now which of the above 3 scenarios is true. I want you to see the evidence for yourself and you make up your own mind. Understand that faith is necessary and I consider myself a man of faith. However, faith is only necessary in the absence of facts and reproducible evidence. When one deals with facts and evidence little "needs to be hoped for" as Hebrews says except the common sense to recognize truth and facts when you see it. Unfortunately to come to knowledge that dispels the darkness of doubt and error one must read and often reading is technical. In the next pages you will encounter hundreds and hundreds of facts and evidence that will paint for you a picture that will be undeniable to the mind. And before some of our detractors say that faith is not to be intellectualized, let me remind you what Yeshua said was the Greatest Commandment……

36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

Notice Yeshua said man was to love God FIRST with all his heart….what did he mean? Love God with my blood pumping organ? No!

Let us examine the Greek behind the English and see what we learn!

2588 kardia-heart

a) that organ in the animal body which is the center of the circulation of the blood, and, hence, was regarded as the seat of physical life

b) denotes the center of all physical and spiritual life

a) the vigor and sense of physical life

b) the center and seat of spiritual life

1) the soul or mind, as it is the fountain and seat of the thoughts, passions, desires, appetites, affections, purposes, endeavors

2) used of the understanding, the faculty and seat of the intelligence

3) used of the will and character

4) used of the soul so far as it is affected and stirred in a bad way or good, or of the soul as the seat of the sensibilities, affections, emotions, desires, appetites, passions

c) used of the middle or central or inmost part of anything, even though inanimate

If you read the above definitions you found something rather interesting…Yeshua said that the Greatest Commandment was to first love God with all your MIND. He tells us we are to use our seat of intelligence to understand God. So help me that is impossible from prayer alone or else there would not be over a billion Catholics in the world to day praying to Mary. So knowledge of God is very important…and let us understand we are concerned about knowledge that is true and not false.

6 For I [God speaking] desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings.

There we find it again. More than any sacrifice, possibly more than any sacrificial representative man [but we are yet to determine that], God says He desires mankind possess the knowledge of Him more than any sacrifice. Wow! As we continue our study you will be able when finished to say unequivocally whether such sacrifices would include a "representative man" or not.

I would have you hold one thought before we move to the next article.

Answer for yourself: If it can be shown to you that this "representative man and his sacrifice" originated not with YHVH but with sun worship and pagans, then why then were not the Pagans the Lord's chosen people instead of the children of Israel who have rejected such crucified representative men since their origin and yet do so today? Wow, the implications of such a question let alone it's answers are devastating for the New Testament's doctrines and Paul's teachings. Shalom.

THE ORIGIN OF SACRIFICE

The idea of redemption from sin through the sufferings and death of a Divine Incarnate Savior, is simply the crowing point of the idea entertained by primitive man that gods demanded a sacrifice of some kind, to atone for some sin, or avert some calamity.

In primitive ages, when men lived mostly on vegetables, they offered only grain, water, salt, fruit, and flowers to the gods, to propitiate them and thereby obtain temporal blessings. But when they began to eat meat and spices, and drink wine, they offered the same; naturally supposing the deities would be pleased with whatever was useful or agreeable to themselves. They imagined that some gods were partial to animals, others to fruits, flowers, etc. To the celestial gods they offered white victims at sunrise, or at open day. To the infernal gods they sacrificed black animals in the night. Each god has some creature peculiarly devoted to his worship. They sacrificed a bull to Mars, a dove to Venus, and to Minerva, a heifer without blemish, which had never been put to the yoke. If a man was too poor to sacrifice a living animal, he offered an image of one made of bread.

In the course of time, it began to be imagined that the gods demanded something more sacred as offerings or atonements for sin. This led to the sacrifice of human beings, principally slaves and those taken in war, then, their own children, even their most beloved "first born." It came to be an idea that every sin must have it prescribed amount of punishment, and that the gods would accept the life of one person as atonement for the sins of others. This idea prevailed in Greece and Rome; areas where much of the New Testament would be written later [THINK].

In the beginning such sacrifices by one for the sins of others were found only among heroic self-sacrifice for the public good but that would change over time. Cicero says: "The force of religion was so great among our ancestors, that some of their commanders have, with their faces veiled, and with the strongest expressions of sincerity, sacrificed themselves to be immortal gods to save their country" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, Vol. I, p. 303).

In Egypt, offerings of human sacrifices, for the atonement of sin, became an almost daily occurrence. When the Egyptian priests offered up a sacrifice to the gods, they pronounced the following imprecations on the head of the victim:

"If any evil is about to befall either those who now sacrifice, or Egypt in general, may it be averted on his head" (Herodotus: bk. ii, ch. 39).

The idea of atonement finally resulted in the belief that the incarnate "Christ", the Anointed one, the representative man, the God among us, was to save mankind from a curse imposed by God. Man had sinned, and God would not and did not forgive without a propitiatory sacrifice. The curse of God must be removed from the sinful society, and the sinless must bear the load of that curse. It was asserted that divine justice required blood . Now notice this is the religious belief system of Pagans and not Moses or Joshua or David. This religious belief system occurred long, long before Moses, Sinai, or Torah. These are the beliefs of pagans as found from nation to nation as archeology and anthropology have proven. The facts of this religious system are found around the globe and the evidence confront us with the reality of what I said!

You should be curious as to how nations on the other side of the globe, deprived of cell phones in their day, was able to have almost identical copies of the same religion long before there was ever an Abraham or a Moses. The key, as you will find, as I did, was that sun worship was the tie that bonded their religious beliefs together. More on that later.

The belief of redemption from sin by the suffering of a Divine Incarnation, whether by death on a stake, pole, tree, or cross or otherwise, was general and popular among the heathen, centuries before the time of Jesus of Nazareth, and this dogma, no matter how sacred it may have become, or how consoling it may be, must fall along with the rest of the material of which the Gentile Church is built.

Julius Firmicius, referring to this popular belief among the Pagans, says: "The devil has his Christs". This will amaze you but this was the general off-hand manner in which the Christian Fathers disposed of such matters when pagans accused them of copying their pagan religious doctrines. The only resource at hand when cornered was to blame it on the Devil. The Devil was for the Gentile Church, when cornered and exposed by the facts by Pagans who confronted them about their plagiarized religious doctrines, a religious counterfeiter. The Devil, for the church, served as a prophet for things to come. Surely you see the incredibility of such a statement. But what else is new? Most Protestants resort to the same techniques today when such facts come across their path. Some, a little more original, will say that the whole this is nothing but types and figures played over and over again from nation to nation and finally culminating in Jesus of Nazareth. This sounds plausible if it were not for one thing….the existing evidence of sun worship and its inherent doctrines. When one comes to the full understanding of such Pagan worship, along with its manifested evolutionary and variegated religious doctrines, and if one happens to be a traditional Christian, then there is no nightmare worse that this in this life. The absolute horror of the reality will strike home….you are a sun-worshipper for YHVH….and the last time I looked He called people to repent of this and continually spoke very negatively about such religion and people in the Tanakh!

As I have done in prior articles, I will now present a parade of information of staggering proportion. I will first turn to India, where we shall find, in the words of M. l'Abbe Huc, that "the idea of redemption by a divine representative," who came into the world for the express purpose of redeeming mankind, was "general and popular" (Huc's Travels, Vol. I, pp. 326-327).

"A sense of original corruption," says Prof. M. Williams, seems to be felt by all Hindus, as indicated by the following prayer used after the Gayatri by some Vaishnavas:

"I am sinful, I commit sin, my nature is sinful, I am conceived in sin, Save me, O thou lotus-eyed Heri (Savior), the remover of sin" (M. Williams, Hinduism, p. 214).

Chrishna, the virgin-born, "the Divine Vishnu himself," (Vishnu Purana, p. 440), "he who is without beginning, middle or end," (Ibid.), being moved "to relieve the earth of her load," (Ibid.), came upon earth and redeemed man by his suffering…to save him. You need to understand right now we are dealing with a religious belief system of Pagans that preceded Jesus of Nazareth by some 800 years!

The accounts of the deaths of most all virgin-born Saviors of whom I shall speak, are conflicting in some areas. It is stated in one place that such an one died in such a manner, and in another place we may find it stated altogether differently. One might be so inclined to dismiss the matter because of the lack of uniformity surrounding the deaths of the various virgin-born Saviors. But let me assure you that once you come to the knowledge of the vast storehouse of religious doctrines that evolved from Sun Worship, then you will completely understand that each different variety of virgin-born Savior's deaths are nothing more different manifestations of the sun; it setting, the sun being occluded by storms, the change of seasons, eclipse, etc. This will simply amaze you when we come to it!

As the Rev. Geo. W Cox remarks, in his Aryan Mythology, Chrishna is described, in one of his aspects, as a self-sacrificing and unselfish hero, a being who is filled with divine wisdom and love, who offers up a sacrifice which he alone can make (Aryan Mythology, Vol. ii, p. 132). I hope you noticed but not all Pastors are ignorant of this deception. Some have studied to the level to see these things and have been so moved to alert and warn the flock of the terrible conspiracy which has overtaken the brethren. Such a one I believe I am as well.

The Vishnu Purana speaks of Chrishna being shot in the foot with an arrow [think], and states this was the cause of his death. Other accounts, however, state that he was suspended on a tree [think], or in other words "crucified" [think] (Vishnu Purana, pp. 274, 612). Remember this was 800 years prior to Jesus of Nazareth.

Confirmation of the above can be found from Mons. Guigniaut, in his Religion de Antiquite, where he says: "The death of Chrishna is very differently related. One remarkable and convincing tradition makes him perish on a tree, to which he was nailed by the stroke of an arrow".

Rev. J. P. Lundy alludes to this passage of Guigniaut's in his Monumental Christianity, and translates the passage as a "cross" instead of a "tree." One can often find Chrishna as represented as hanging on a cross, and we know that a cross was frequently called the "accursed tree." It was an ancient custom to use trees as gibbets for crucifixion, or, if artificial, to call the cross a tree (Higgins, Anacalypsis, Vol. I, p. 499 and Mrs. Jameson's History of Our Lord in Art, ii, 317, where the cross is called the "accursed tree").

Even later in the Old Testament the writer of Deuteronomy is so influenced as he speaks of hanging criminals upon a tree, as though it was a general custom, and says in Deut. 21:22-23:

22 And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree:

23 His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;) that thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

The subject of the verses is that if one breaks the Law of God and it just so happens to demand the death penalty, then it shall be carried out. Such a criminal must pay the price for his sin for the wages of sin is death, and in particular sometime death in this life! His body was to be hung publicly as a deterrent for others to learn not to follow such disastrous ways. Yet the body, tattered and bruised as it became, was yet made in the image of God and to allow the public display of such a body beyond a day was an affront to God and God would bring judgment on the community if such a body was not removed.

Later Paul recasts Jesus in the tradition of Chrishna when he says in Galatians 3:13: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, 'Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree.'"

It is evident, then, that to be hung on a cross was anciently called hanging on a tree, and to be hung on a tree was called crucifixion. We may therefore conclude from this, and from what we will now see, that Chrishna was said to have been crucified.

It the earlier copies of Moor's Hindu Pantheon, is to be seen representations of Chrishna, with marks of holes in both feet, and in others, of holes in the hands. Some representations show holes in both feet and some even have a round hole in his side like Jesus. Some have hanging from his collar or shirt the emblem of a heart which we often see in pictures of Jesus in the Catholic Church. Instead of the crown of thorns usually put on the head of the Christian Savior, Chrishna has the turreted coronet of the Ephesian Diana.

Rev. J.P. Lundy, speaking of the Christian crucifix, says: "I object to the crucifix because it is an image, and liable to grown in abuse, just as the old Hindu crucifix was an idol" (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, p. 128).

And Dr. Inman says: "Chrishna, whose history so closely resembles our Lord's, was also like him in his being crucified" (Ancient Paths, vol. I, p. 411).

The writers of the New Testament relates that when Jesus was crucified two others were crucified with him, one of whom, through his favor, went to heaven. One of the crucified others reviled him, but the other said to Jesus: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.: And Jesus said to him: "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." According to the Vishnu Purana, the hunter who shot the arrow at Chrishna afterwards said unto him: "Have pity upon me, who am consumed by my crime, for thou art able to consume me!" Chrishna replied: "Fear not thou in the least. Go, hunter, through my favor, to heaven, the abode of the gods." Then it is reported that Chrishna, having united himself with his own pure, spiritual, unborn, undecaying, imperishable and universal spirit, which is one with Vasudeva (God) [the same concept of John 1:1 in describing the Word with God], abandoned his mortal body, and the condition of the threefold equalities [a term used for the same concept of the Christian Trinity] (Vishnu Purana, p. 612). As it the plagiarism has not been proven satisfactorily, one of the titles of Chrishna is "Pardoner of sins," another is "Liberator from the Serpent of death" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. I, p. 72).

The monk Georgius, in his Tibetinum Alphabetum (p. 203) drew the caricature of a crucified god who was worshiped in Nepal. These crucifixes were to be seen at the corners of roads like the burma shave signs long ago that said "Jesus saves". The monk Georgius called this god Indra.

P. Andrada la Crozius, one of the first Europeans who went to Nepal and Thibet, in speaking of the god whom they worshipped there…Indra…tells us that they said "he spilt his blood for the salvation of the human race, and that he was pierced through the body with nails" [remember this is long before Jesus ever existed]. He further says that, although they do not say he suffered the penalty of the cross, yet they find, nevertheless, figures of it in their books (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. P. 118).

What you need to know is that although the nations of Europe have changed their religions during the past eighteen centuries, the Hindoo has not done so, except very partially. The religious creeds, rites, customs, and habits of though of the Hindus generally, have altered little since the day of Manu, 500 years B. C. (Prof. Monier Williams, Indian Wisdom, p. iv). This means that the concepts we are reading predated Jesus and by over 500-800 years at least and served as a pattern for the crucified representative man of the orient that we find recorded thought the Eastern nations. We find the same story in the New Testament. This should not surprise you. What is of major importance is the absence of such a story from a group of literature…the Jewish Scriptures. The reason is very plain…God sent His revelation to Israel as they were to be a light to these Gentile nations which all have in one way or the other an adaptation of Sun Worship with its hanged/crucified representative man. That is why the Jews have not and will never accept the Jesus' myth for that is what it is.

Answer for yourself: Can anyone wonder why the Jews will not believe the "stores" about Jesus in the New Testament?

In India, in the South at Tanjore, and in the North, at Oude or Ayiondia, was found the worship of the crucified god Bal-li. This god, who was believed to have been an incarnation of Vishnu, was represented with holes in his hands and side (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. pp. 147).

The incarnate god Buddha, although said to have expired not on a tree but at the foot of a tree, is nevertheless described as a suffering Savior, who, "when his mind was moved by pity (for the human race) gave his life like grass for the sake of others" (Max Muller, Science of Religion, p. 224).

Matt 20:28

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

John 10:11

11 I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

A hymn, addressed to Buddha could just as easily be sung to Jesus:

"Persecutions without end, revellings and many prisons, death and murder, these has thou suffered with love and patience, to secure the happiness of mankind, forgiving thine executioners" (Lilly, Buddhism, p. 93).

Buddha was called the "Great Physician" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20), the "Savior of the World" (Ibid., p. 20, 25, 35; Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 247; Huc's Travels, vol. i. pp. 326, 327, and almost any work on Buddhism), the "Blessed One" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20), the "God among Gods" (Johnson, Oriental Religions, p. 604), the "Anointed," or the "Christ" (Ibid.), the "Messiah" (Ibid.), the "Only Begotten" (Ibid.), etc. Remember again this was long, long before Jesus.

Buddha is likewise described as sacrificing his life to wash away the offenses of mankind and thereby to make them partakers of the kingdom of heaven (Cambridge Key, vol. i. p. 118). Referencing New Testament passages to show the similarity would take to much space but you are most likely well aware that this topic occupies a lot of space in the New Testament.

As a spirit in the fourth heaven, he resolves to give up "all the glory, in order to be born into the world," "to rescue all men from their misery and every future consequence of it." He vows "to deliver all men, who are left as it were without a Savior" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20).

Most are familiar with Paul's account in Phillipians where he speaks of Jesus emptying himself of his godliness as he takes upon himself frail humanity. In Seminary we called this the "Great Kenosis" passage…kenosis is Greek of empty.

Phil 2:6-8

6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:

8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

While in the realms of heaven, and when about to descend upon the earth to be incarnated as a man, Buddha said: "I am now about to assume a body; not for the sake of gaining wealth, or enjoying the pleasures of sense, but I am about to descend and be born, among men, simply to give peace and rest to all flesh; to remove all sorrows and grief from the world" (Beal, Hist. Buddah, p. 33).

M. l'Abbe Huc says: "In the eyes of the Buddhists, this personage (Buddah) is sometimes a man and sometimes a god, or rather both one and the other…a divine incarnation, a man-god, who came into the world to enlighten men, to redeem them, and to indicate to them the way of safety. This idea of redemption by a divine incarnation is so general and popular among the Buddhists, that during our travels in Upper Asia we everywhere found it expressed in a neat formula. If we addressed to a Mongol or a Thibetan the question "Who is Buddah?" he would immediately reply: "The Savior of Men!" (Huc's Travels, vol. i. pp. 326,327).

According to Prof. Max Muller, Buddha is reported as saying: "Let all the sins that were committed in this world fall on me, that the world may be delivered" (Muller, Hist. Sanscrit Literature, p. 80).

Answer for yourself: Can a Christian doubt that these Gentile sun gods, or Buddah, or even Chrishna for that matter, was the "TYPE" of the Savior of the World to which Jesus was made to fit by the writers of the New Testament?

The people of India are no strangers to the doctrine of original sin. It is their invariable belief that man is a fallen being. This is admitted by them from time immemorial (Maurice, Indian Antiquities, vol. v. p. 95, and Williams, Hinduism, p. 214). And what we have seen concerning their beliefs in Chrishna and Buddha unmistakenly shows a belief in a divine Savior, who redeems man, and takes upon himself the sins of the world; so that "Buddha paid it all, all to him is due" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. ii. P. 86). It is said of Buddha: "He in mercy left paradise, and come down to earth, because he was filled with compassion for the sins and miseries of mankind. He sought to lead them into better paths, and took their sufferings upon himself, that he might expiate their crimes and mitigate their punishment that they must otherwise inevitably undergo. The object of his mission on earth was to instruct those who were straying from the right path, expiate the sins of mortals by his own sufferings, and produce for them a happy entrance into another existence by obedience to his precepts and prayers in his name. They always speak of him as one with God from all eternity. His most common title is "The Savior of the World" (Ibid., vol. i. p. 247).

By now you should be understanding that the Sun myths were long in place and were being told over and over again from nation to nation and the similarities are astounding.

There truly is nothing new under the sun (forgive the pun)!

Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #4

The idea of redemption through the sufferings and death of a Divine Savior, is to be found in almost all the Gentile nations of antiquity. For example, lets begin with the nations of the East, in particular the ancient religions of China. One of their five sacred volumes, called the Y-King, says, in speaking of Tien, the "Holy One": "The Holy One will unite in himself all the virtues of heaven and earth. By his justice the world will be re-established in the ways of righteousness. He will labor and suffer much. He must pass the great torrent, whose waves shall enter into his soul, but he alone can offer up to the Lord a sacrifice worthy of him" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 211).

An ancient commentator says: "The common people sacrifice their lives to gain bread; the philosophers to gain reputation; the nobility to perpetuate their families. The Holy One (Tien) does not seek himself, but the good of others. He dies to save the world" (Ibid.).

I cannot read the above without thinking of the Gospel of John.

John 3:16

16 For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (KJV)

John 5:30

30 I can of mine own self do nothing. I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me. (KJV)

John 8:50

50 And I seek not mine own glory: there is one that seeketh and judgeth. (KJV)

Tien, the Holy One, is always spoken of as one with God, existing with him from all eternity, "before anything was made". Again John comes to mind.

John 1:1-3

1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

Many will think this is just coincidence. So let us continue to see what we can find.

THE CRUCIFIED "SAVIORS" OF PAGANISM

Osiris and Horus, the Egyptian virgin-born gods, suffered death (Renouf, Religions of Ancient Egypt, p. 178). Mr. Bonwick, speaking of Osiris, says: "He is one of the Saviors or deliverers of humanity, to be found in almost all lands" [only his name was changed from country to country]. "In his efforts to do good, he encounters evil; in struggling with that he is overcome; he is killed" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 155).

Alexander Murray says: "The Egyptian Savior Osiris was gratefully regarded as the great exemplar of self-sacrifice, in giving his life for others" (Murray, Manual of Mythology, p. 348).

The writers of the New Testament carry on this same idea.

Matt 20:28

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

1 Tim 2:6

6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.

Sir. J. G. Wilkinson says of Osiris: "The sufferings and death of Osiris was the great Mystery of the Egyptian religion, and some traces of it are perceptible among other peoples of antiquity (remember Sun Worship?). His being the Divine Goodness, and the abstract idea of "good," his manifestation upon earth (like a Hindu god), his death and resurrection, and his office as judge of the dead in a future state, look like the early revelation of a future manifestation of the deity converted into a mythological fable" (Rawlinson, Herodotus, vol. ii. P. 171).

Horus was also called "The Savior." "As Horus Sneb, he is the Redeemer. He is the Lord of Life and the Eternal One" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, P. 185). He is also called "The Only-Begotten" (Mysteries of Adonai, p. 88).

Attis, who was called the "Only Begotten Son" (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. xxii.) and "Savior," was worshipped by the Phrygians (who were regarded as one of the oldest races of Asia Minor). He was represented by them as a man tied to a tree, at the foot of which was a lamb (Dupuls, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 255). He is also characterized as a man nailed to the tree, or stake, for we find Lactantius making this Apollo of Miletus (anciently, the greatest and the most flourishing city of Ionia, in Asia Minor) say that : "He was a mortal according to the flesh; wise in miraculous works; but being arrested by an armed force by command of the Chaldean judges (Sadducee like), he suffered a death made bitter with nails and stakes" (Dupuls, Origin of Religious Belief, vol. ii).

In this god of the Phrygians, we again have the same myth of the crucified Savior of Paganism.

By referring to Mrs. Jameson's History of Our Lord in Art, it can easily be seen that a common mode of representing a crucifixion was that of a man, tied with cords by the hands and feet, to an upright beam or stake.

Tammuz, or Adonis, the Syrian Adonai (Lord) was another virgin-born god, who suffered for mankind, and who had the title of "Savior." The accounts of his death are conflicting, just as it is with almost all of the so-called Saviors of mankind (including the Christian Savior). As we progress we shall see that the reason for such variation is the multiple variety of Sun Myths that deal with the dying of the sun. Every nation had their own spin to the story it seems, but the basic story was the same.

As if this was not enough evidence and facts from history and the religions of the world to arouse more than an idle curiosity in the Christian believer, the ancients who honored Tammuz and Adonis as their Lord and Savior also celebrated a feast in commemoration of his death (it was their Lord's Supper). An image, intended as a representation of their Lord, was laid on a bed or bier, and bewailed in mournful hymns just as the Roman Catholics do at the present day in their "Good Friday" mass.

During this ceremony the priest murmured: "Trust ye in your Lord, for the pains which he endured, our salvation have procured" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 114).

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, after referring to what we have just stated above, says: "His other name, Adonis, is almost the very Hebrew Adonai or Lord, a well-known title of Christ."

Prometheus was a crucified Savior. He was "an immortal god, a friend of the human race, "who does not shrink even from sacrificing himself for their salvation."

The tragedy of the crucifixion of Prometheus, written by Eschylus, was acted in Athens five hundred years before the Christian Era, and is by many considered to be the most ancient dramatic poem now in existence. The plot was derived from materials even at that time of an infinitely remote antiquity. Nothing was ever so exquisitely calculated to work upon the feelings of the spectators. "His (Divine Sufferer) sorrows were endured for their salvation." The majesty of his silence, whilst the ministers of an offended god were nailing him by the hands and feet to Mount Caucasus, could only be equaled by the modesty with which he relates, "while hanging with arms extended in the form of a cross," his services to the human race, which had brought on him that horrible crucifixion (Eschylus, Prometheus Chained, Harper and Bros., N.Y.). In the myth relating to Prometheus, he always appears as the friend of the human race, suffering in its behalf the most fearful tortures. More than strange is the unique story of Prometheus' friend, Oceanus, the fisherman, as his name Petrroeus indicates. This Oceanus tries unsuccessfully to influence Prometheus to not die for mankind, but being unable to prevail on him to make his peace with Jupiter, by throwing the cause of human redemption out of his hands, forsook him and flew. Now contrast this with Matt. 16:22

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

None remained to be witness of his dying agonies but the chorus of ever-amiable and every-faithful which also bewailed and lamented him

Luke 23:27

27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

In the words of Justin Martyr: "Suffering was common to all of the sons of Jove." They were called the "Slain Ones," "Saviors," "Redeemers," etc.

Bacchus, the offspring of Jupiter and Semele, was called the "Savior" (Knight, Anct. Art and Mythology, p. 98) He was called the "Only Begotten Son," the "Slain One" (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. xxii), the "Sin Bearer"(Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 169), the "Redeemer" (Dupis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 135), etc. Evil having spread itself over the earth, through the inquisitiveness of Pandor, the Lord of the gods is begged to come to the relief of mankind. Jupiter lends a willing ear to the entreaties, "and wishes that his son should be the redeemer of the misfortunes of the world; The Bacchus Savior. He promises to the earth a Liberator..and the universe shall worship him, and shall praise in songs his blessings." In order to execute his purpose, Jupiter overshadows the beautiful young maiden, the virgin Semele, who becomes the mother of the Redeemer."

"It is I (says the lord Bacchus to mankind), who guides you; it is I who protects you, and who saves you; I who am Alpha and Omega." (quoted on the monument of Bacchus)

Hercules, the son of Zeus, was called "The Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 322). The words "Hercules the Savior" were engraven on ancient coins and monuments (Celtic Druids, Taylor, Diegesis, p. 153). He was also called "The Only Begotten," and the "Universal Word." He was re-absorbed into God. He was said by

Ovid to be the sun "Self-produced," the Generator and Ruler of all things, and the Father of time (Mysteries of Adonai, p. 91, and Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 322).

Esculapis was distinguished by the epithet "The Savior" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 153). The Temple erected to his memory in the city of Athens was called: "The Temple of the Savior."

Apollo was distinguished by the epithet "The Savior" as well (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 264). In a hymn to Apollo he is called: "The willing Savior of distressed mankind" (Monumental Christianity, p. 186).

Serapis was called "The Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 15). He was considered by Hadrian, the Roman emperor (117-138 A.D.), and the Gentiles, to be the peculiar god of the Christians (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, vol. Ii. p. 86). A cross was found under the ruins of his temple in Alexandria in Egypt (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 15). And notice also that much of the New Testament was written from Alexandria, Egypt along with the translation of the LXX which is corrupted in many places when compared with the Palestinian Masoretic text. It is very evident that the pictures of Christ Jesus, as we know them today, are simply the pictures of some of the Pagan gods. A cursory study of religious art in the early days of Christianity and before will show you the resemblances. One should expect that Jesus of Nazareth to resemble a Jew and have Jewish features and these early pictures do not betray such a fact.

Mithras, who was "Mediator between God and man" (Dunlap, Spirit History, pp. 237, 242) was also called "The Savior." He was the peculiar god of the Persians, who believed that he had, by his sufferings, worked their salvation, and on this account he was called their "Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii, p. 20). He was also called "the Logos" (Dunlop, Son of Man, p. 20). According to the most ancient tradition of the East-Iranians recorded in the end-Avesta, the God of Light (Ormuzd) communicated his mysteries to some men through his "Word" (Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 75).

The Persians believed that they were tainted with "original sin" owing to the fall of their first parents who were tempted by the evil one in the form of a serpent (Wake, Phallism, p. 47).

They considered the law-given Zoroaster to be also a Divine Messenger, sent to redeem men from their evil ways, and they always worshipped his memory. To this day his followers mention him with the greatest reverence, calling him "The Immortal Zoroaster," "The Blessed Zoroaster," "The First-Born of the Eternal One," etc. (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. pp. 258, 259).

"In the life of Zoroaster the common mythos is apparent. He was born in innocence, of an immaculate conception, of a ray of Divine Reason. As soon as he was born, the glory arising from his body enlightened the room, and he laughed at his mother. He was called a Splendid Light from the Tree of Knowledge, and, in find, he or his soul was hung upon a tree, and this was the Tree of Knowledge" (Malcolm, Hist. Persia, vol. i. pp. p. 494; Nimrod, vol. ii. P. 31; Anacalypsis, vol. ii. P. 649).

How much this resembles "the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints" (Col. 1:26).

Hermes was called "The Savior." On the altar of Pepi (B.C. 3500) are to be found prayers to Hermes…"He who is the good Savior" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 102). He was also called "The Logos." The church fathers, Hippolytus, Justin Martyr, and Plutarch assert that the Logos is Hermes (Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 30). The term "Logos" is Greek and signifies literally "Word" (John 1:1). He was also "The Messenger of God" (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii, pp. 69-71).

Dr. Inman says: "There are few words which strike more strongly upon the senses of in inquirer into the nature of ancient faiths, than Salvation and Savior. Both were used long before the birth of Christ, and they are still common among those who never heard of Jesus, or of that which is known among us as the Gospels" (Inman, Ancient Faiths, vol. ii. p. 652).

Besides the titles of "God's First-Born," "Only Begotten," the "Mediator," the "Shepherd," the "Advocate," the "Paraclete or Comforter," the "Son of God," the "Logos," etc., being applied to heathen virgin-born gods, before the time assigned for the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, we have also that of Christ and Jesus. This terminology can be studied out by you in detail if you acquire copies of Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 119, Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, pp. xxii and 98, Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 71, and Spirit History, pp. 183, 205, 206, 249, Bible for Learners, vol. ii. p. 25, Isis Unveiled, vol. iii pp. 195, 237, 516, etc.

THE GENTILE'S SAVIOR GODS CALLED "CHRISTS"

We now turn our attention to the many uses of the term "Christ" as used long before the time of Jesus of Nazareth and how they were previously connected with the Gentile's "Saviors".

We not continue our study by examining the terms for other Gentiles Savior-gods of which most will be unfamiliar. I am referring tot the use of the terms "Christ" as it was applied to the representative redeemer men that long predated Jesus of Nazareth.

Cyrus, King of Persia, was called the "Christ," or the "Anointed of God" (Bunsen, Bible Chronology, p. 5, Keys of St. Peter, p. 125). As Dr. Giles says, "Christ" is "a name having no spiritual signification, and importing nothing more than an ordinary surname" (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, p. 64, vol. ii). The worshippers of Serapis were called "Christians," and those devoted to Serapis were called "Bishops of Christ" long before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth (Ibid. p. 86; Taylor, Diegesis, pp. 202-206, 407). This fact is amazing. Eusebius, the ecclesiastical historian says, that the names of "Jesus" and "Christ," were both known and honored among the ancients (Eusebius, Eccl. History, lib. 1. Ch. iv.).

Mithras was called the "Anointed" or the "Christ;" (Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 78) and Horus, Mano, Mithras, Bel-Minor, Iao, Adoni, etc., were each of them "God of Light," "Light of the World," the "Anointed," or the "Christ" (Ibid. p. 39).

It is said that Peter called Yeshua "the Christ," whereupon "he straightway charged him (the disciples), and commanded them to tell no man "that thing" (Luke 4:21).

The title of "Christ" or "the Anointed," was held by the kings of Israel. "Touch not my Christ and do my people no harm," says the Psalmist (Psalm 105:15).

The tern "Christ" was applied to religious leaders, leaders of factions, necromancers or wonder-workers, etc. This is seen by the passage in Matthew, where the writer says: "There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:24).

The virgin-born Chrishna and Buddha were incarnations of Vishnu, called Avatars. An Avatar is an Angel-Messiah, a God-man, a Christ; for the word "Christ" is from the Greek "Christos," an Anointed One, a Messiah.

Let us continue our study in the veneration of "crosses" by the non-Jews in their worship and portrayal of their Savior gods.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #5

You will probably find this next piece of information amazing. The holy Father Minucius Felix, in his Octavius, written as late as 211 A.D., indignantly resents the supposition that the sign of the cross should be considered exclusively as a Christian symbol, and represents his advocate of the Christian government as retorting on an infidel opponent. His words are: "As for the adoration of crosses which you (Pagans) object against us (Christians), I must tell you, that we neither adore crosses nor desire them; you it is, ye Pagans…..who are the most likely people to adore wooden crosses…for what else are your ensigns, flags, and standards , but crosses gilt and beautiful. Your (speaking of the Pagans) victorious trophies not only represent a simple cross, but a cross with a man upon it" (Octavius, c. xxix).

In this Christian's defense of his faith and theological doctrines he admits that the Pagans also have crucified saviors on crosses. When I first ran across such admissions by early Church fathers I was puzzled and disturbed to my very core. I had to find out why Pagans had the same religious belief system that my Christian forefathers did.

Answer for yourself: How could Christianity be the truth for the world when the world already had the Christian crucified Savior? Where did the Pagans get the same ideas which were held sacred by Gentile Christians let alone get them hundreds and thousands of years before the revelation of Jesus of Nazareth?

YOU ARE NOT PREPARED FOR THE INEVITABLE TRUTH

I was to discover through many tears that my whole Christian religious belief system could be traced to Sun Worship and it's many variegated forms. The next years of my study were both insightful but the hardest years of my life. The results of my inquiries yielded tons of insurmountable proofs and facts to substantiate the plagiarism of Sun Worship by the Gentile Christian Church. To make matters worse it would be these Gentile Christians which would craft the document called the New Testament which is filled with Sun Worship as masqueraded through the events of the life of Yeshua. These "sun myths" literally became personified in the personage of Jesus of Nazareth. Later such "sun myths," because they were connected with the life of Yeshua, became religious "dogmas" and "doctrines." We now look more deeply into such myths as seen in the veneration of crosses by the Christian Church over the ages.

CHRISTIAN SUN WORSHIP….THE ATONEMENT OF THE SUN… AND THE CROSS

The above declaration in the writings of Father M. Felix is a miracle. It is a miracle that it was not destroyed by Rome in the early ages of the Christian movement. Its existence is probably owing to an oversight of the destroyers of all evidences against the Gentile Christian religion that could be had. The practice of the Romans, here alluded to, of carrying a cross with a man on it, or, in other words, a crucifix, has evidently been concealed from us by the careful destruction of such of their works as alluded to it. The priests had everything their own way for centuries, and to destroy what was evidence against their claims was a very simple matter.

It is very evident that this celebrated Christian Father alludes to some Gentile mystery, of which the prudence of his successors has deprived us. When we compare this with the fact that for centuries after the time assigned for the birth of Christ Jesus, he was not represented as a man on a cross, and that the Christians did not have such a thing as a crucifix, we are inclined to think that the effigies of a black or dark-skinned crucified man, which were to be seen in many places in Italy even during the last century, may have had something to do with it (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 110).

While speaking of a "cross with a man on it" as being carried by the Pagan Romans as a standard, we might mention the fact related by Ariian the historian, that the troops of Porus, in their war with Alexander the Great, carried on their standards the figure of a man on a cross (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 118). Here is evidently the crucifix standard again.

Tertullian, a Christian Father of the second and third centuries, writing to the Pagans, says: "The origin of your (Pagans) god is derived from figures moulded on a cross. All those rows of images on your standards are the appendages of crosses; those hangings on your standards and banners are the robes of crosses" (Apol. C. 16; Ad Nationes, c. xii.).

We have it then, on the authority of a Christian Father, as late as 211 A.D., that the Christians "neither adored crosses nor desired them," but that the Pagans "adored crosses," and not that alone, but "a cross with a man upon it." Jesus, in those days, nor for centuries after, was NOT represented as a man on a cross. He was represented as a lamb, and the adoration of the crucifix, by the Christians, was a later addition to their religion.

WHO WAS THIS CRUCIFIED MAN WHOM THE PAGANS ADORED BEFORE AND AFTER THE TIME OF JESUS?

Answer for yourself: Who did the crucifix represent?

If you have read these articles you now know. It was "the Savior crucified for the salvation of mankind," long before the Christian Era, whose effigies were to be seen in many places all over Italy and the world. These Pagan crucifixes were either destroyed, corrupted, or adopted; the latter was the case with many ancient paintings of the Bambino (the baby in his mother's arms named differently in almost every culture world-wide). Christians called the mother with child "Mary and baby Jesus." In Babylon it was called "Semiramis and Tammuz." You get the picture. On these paintings we often find the words "Deo Soli." Now, these two words can never apply to Christ Jesus. He was not Deus Solus, in any sense, according to the idiom of the Latin language, and the Romish faith. Whether we construe the words "the only God," or "God alone," they are equally heretical. No priest, in any age of the church, would have thought of putting them there; but finding them there, they tolerated them.

In the "Celtic Druids," Mr. Higgins describes a crucifix, a lamb, and an elephant, which was cut upon the "fire tower," so called at Brechin, a town of Forfarshire, in Scotland. Although they appeared to be of very ancient date, he supposed, at that time, that they were modern, and most likely belonged to Christianity. He would later change his mind and write: "I now date the modern date of the tower, for we have, over and over again, seen the crucified man before Christ. We have also found "The Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world,: among the Carnutes of Gaul, before the time of Christ; and when I contemplate these…I am induced to doubt my former conclusions. All these superstitions must have come from India."

On one of the Irish " round towers" is to be seen a crucifix of unmistakable Asiatic Origin (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, pp. 253, 254, 255).

Answer for yourself: As you contemplate what is being shown to you, and as God watches the uncovering of lies before your face, are you now more determined than ever to study your faith in detail and then compare it with Biblical Judaism, the faith of Yeshua of Nazareth? What is truth? Now do you think as a Christian you have it?

In the next article we will examine the same influences and how they impacted the Americas. Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #6

Not forgetting what we have already learned, if we turn to the New World, we shall find, strange though it may appear, that the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians worshipped a crucified Savior as did those on the opposite side of the globe. This is utterly amazing considering in those days the limited travel and communication on this planet. Yet there is unmistakably a common denominator behind all these "crucified representative Saviors" that existed thousands of years before the time of Jesus of Nazareth.

This "crucified Savior" of the New World was the virgin-born Quetzalcoate whose crucifixion is represented in the paintings of the "Codex Borgianus," and the "Codex Vaticanus."

These paintings illustrate the religious opinions of the ancient Mexicans, and were copied form the hieroglyphics found in Mexico. The Spaniards destroyed nearly all the books, ancient monuments and paintings which they could find; had it not been for this, much more regarding the religion of the ancient Mexicans would have been handed down to us. Many chapters were also taken, by the Spanish authorities, from the writings of the first historians who wrote on ancient Mexico. All manuscripts had to be inspected previous to being published. Anything found among these heathens resembling the religion of the Christians, was destroyed when possible (Kinsgborough, Mexican Antiquities, vol. vi. pp. 165 and 179).

The first Spanish monks who went to Mexico were surprised to find the crucifix among the heathen inhabitants, and upon inquiring what it meant, were told that it was a representation of Bacob (Quetzalcoate), the Son of God, who was put to death by Eopuco. They said that he was placed on a ben of wood, with his arms stretched out, and that he died there (Kingsborough, Mexican Antiquities, vol. vi. p. 166).

Answer for yourself: Now, having read these articles what is the chance that the Jesus story of the New Testament ows much of its life to these prior crucified sungodmen myths?

Let us continue our search for truth.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #1

If you are a Christian this is the most important piece of information you will have ever read. I behoove you to read the whole article if you want to understand the death of Yeshua as God intended. The facts presented speak for themselves. I pray you will quietly and prayerfully speak to the Father as you read this most enlightening articles. My prayers and blessings to you.

As a Christian you have been told your whole life that two great objectives were accomplished by Jesus in his mission to this world.

- The removal of the curse under which mankind labored as a result of the disobedience and fall
- The restoration of men to the image and fellowship of God.

Both of these were essential to salvation as taught by Gentile Christianity. Christianity teaches that the work of Christ in reconciling God and men is called "the" Atonement; and this doctrine lies at the very heart of the Christian system. Sadly few understand correctly this very important doctrine, the origin of Christianity's claims, nor can the Biblical teaching on Atonement be understood correctly without a proper understanding of the Hebraic roots from which it came.

We are altogether dependent on Old Testament Scripture and Jewish writings for our knowledge concerning the doctrine of the Atonement and can know only what God has seen fit to reveal concerning it.

What most don't know is that when one encounters teachings on Atonement in the New Testament, which was collected and altered repeatedly by the Gentile Church, one is reading the "Gentile pagan accounts of Atonements from mystery religions" and and not "fulfillments" of Old Testament Scripture!

Our present purpose in this series of articles is to give a systematized account of what the Jewish Scriptures, the Bible Yeshua used. the Palestinian Masoretic Text, the Tanakh, teach concerning Atonement, and to show that this fits in perfectly with the longings and aspirations of an enlightened spiritual nature.

A CHRISTIAN'S UNDERSTANDING OF THE NEW TESTAMENT IS IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT A THROUGH UNDERSTANDING OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

First of all you have to have the correct text. The Christian's Old Testament is different from the Jewish Masoretic text in over 2000 places. This should concern you immensely! If you want the facts check out: http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua. You should demand a translation and not a free creationism as doctored by non-Jews, who over the centuries, conformed the faith and writings of the Jews to suit their pagan backgrounds. Enough said. If you have been reading our materials we have made this most plain over the years. Now to the purpose at hand.

In one of Paul's most condensed and fundamental statements of Christian teaching we read: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received: that Christ (Messiah) died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; and that He hath been raised on the third day according to the Scriptures," I Cor. 15:3.

Answer for yourself: Even in the corrupt Old Testaments in the Christian Bibles, can you find where the Old Testament prophecies that Yeshua was to die for sin and that he was to be buried and raised on the 3rd day?

What? You cannot? No wonder; it is not there anywhere! And please don't read into Isa. 53 the concept of an "individual" when the author from chapter 40 on through chapter 66 deals with a "corporate, collective, and national" Suffering Servant and never one individual. If you do so, then understand that you invalidate completely what Isaiah intended we learn from the passage. Such is reading into the text your pre-formed theology. Let us not do that. We are supposed to believe what we can draw out of the text. The text must determine our beliefs. Such is exegesis. I recommend exegesis as you can see and because of my Christian background I must fight daily to limit my eisegesis as much as possible because so much error is yet burned into my subconscious. We must struggle and fight for the truth. Such makes one Israel.

IF YOU HAD A GOOD KNOWLEDGE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT THEN YOU WOULD NOT BE MISLED SO EASILY BY THE NEW TESTAMENT

First of all understand that the word "Christ" means Messiah in Hebrew. So according to Paul, in the New Testament, his "gospel" is saying that the Messiah died for our sins.

Answer for yourself: Does the Old Testament and Jewish Scriptures teach and prepare Israel to prepare for and accept a Messiah who comes to die for their sins? No it does not in fact; it teaches just the opposite and this is where the problem lies.

You might not be able to answer with Old Testament Scripture the above question but you will be able soon enough if you continue to study our articles. The Gospel of John in the New Testament states that the "Word became flesh," meaning by most accounts that Jesus, the Messiah, came from Heaven in the form of flesh. Christianity answers the above dilemma two ways: one, there was a time the flesh was "not the Word" and a time when the "Word became flesh" in the Virgin Birth. Without going into detail, the idea which was understood and believed by the first Jewish followers concerning Yeshua; that of him "becoming" Messiah at his immersion is just another proof that the Virgin Birth teaching is incorrect. If you would like to have the detailed teachings exposing the errors in the Virgin Birth teaching request them from Bet Emet Ministries and we will be glad to see you get them. So, important for your understanding as we study atonement is that Jesus became "the" Messiah (Messiah means anointed and we have record of his anointing "without measure" when he was 30 years old at the Jordan). You and I dear one are anointed with measure, but Yeshua was anointed "without measure". You would expect one to fulfill the Messianic hope of Israel to be so equipped. Incidentally, this is exactly what the earliest Jewish followers of Yeshua/Jesus believed; namely that Jesus is the Messiah, and became the Messiah from anointing without measure at the Jordan. Such were called the Ebionites and their writings are available today as well as the records of the early Church historians which reveal to us what the earliest beliefs were concerning Jesus before being changed by the Roman Church in the fourth century and following. It is not my intention to explain in this article why the prophecies of the Jewish Scriptures were not fulfilled in Yeshua nor deal with the fictional creations of "false-fulfilled" passages in the New Testament in this article. We have that information available to those who would desire it at: http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com.

NOW LETS THINK …

Now let me ask you a question that goes to the very foundation of the core of our beliefs about salvation.

Answer for yourself: Should we not rather try to understand Paul to say that "Christ died because of our sins" instead of "for our sins?"

Critical for our understanding is if Christ's death:

- Was the result of our sins or if his death atoned for sins?
- If Christ's death atoned for ALL our sins or if his death atoned only for PART of our sins (Yom Kippur/The Day of Atonement teaches us the truth in this regard), or did his death NOT atone for any of our sins?
- If Christ's death or rather his life (life is in the blood which ended at his death and the shedding of his blood) atoned for sins, then what implication does one's "life" have for personal atonement of sin?

Before we get to the very heart of the issue we must come to a better understanding of the sacrificial system in order to correctly consider if Jesus' death can be understood as a proper sacrifice within the Law and the dynamics within it that affects the forgiveness of sin.

LAWS OF THE SACRIFICE

The terminology used with regard to the patriarchal age is that of the Torah as a whole; it is unlikely that the same words in Genesis mean something different in the other Books of Moses. Thus, Cain and Abel each brought a "gift" (minhah; Gen. 4:4f.), which was usually of a cereal nature as brought by Cain (Lev. 2). Notice this is not a sin offering! Noah offered up a burnt offering ("olah"; Gen. 8:20ff.) and the pleasing odor of the sacrifice is stressed. Job is also depicted as making burnt offerings periodically (Job 1:5) and for specific purposes (Job 42:7–9). The burnt offerings, signifying complete surrender to God, were by far the most frequent sacrifices at the Israelite sanctuary. Again these offerings by Noah and Job were not "sin" offerings and only showed the complete devotion and surrender of the "offerer's" heart to God as he demonstrated and testified to his relationship with God through such "gifts".

I need to repeat the last statement as it will have major significance as you continue to read.

These burnt offerings [olahs] as seen in Cain, Able, Noah, and Job only showed the complete devotion and surrender of the "offerer's" heart to God as he demonstrated and testified to his relationship with God through such "gifts".

The Patriarchs normally are said to have "called on the name of the Lord," e.g., Abraham (Gen. 12:8, 13–4; 21:33) and Isaac (Gen. 26:25). The association of this phrase with the building of an altar shows that it refers to the approach to God through sacrifice. With Jacob the naming of the specific altar is stressed (Gen. 33:20; 35:7). Once Abraham is said to have offered an "olah" (Gen. 22:13) but Jacob (Gen. 31:54; 46:1) offered "zevahim". Again these were NOT "sin" offerings NOR were they intended for Atonement.

Now let us look at "offerings" and "sacrifices" from Moses to Samuel. The covenant sacrifice inaugurating the relationship between the Lord and His people (Ex. 24:3–8) is not paralleled by specific rituals in the Mosaic liturgy. Burnt and peace offerings were first offered and then the blood from them (not from a sin offering) was thrown half against the altar and half upon the people. In the land of Canaan the Israelites made sacrifices at various places, e.g., at Bochim (Judg. 2:1–5) and Ophrah (Judg. 6:24–26). The human sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter (Judg. 11:30–40) was hardly normative; instead it is pointed out as evidence of Israel's sad spiritual state at that time. The main center for sacrificial ritual was at Shiloh (I Sam 1:3ff.), where faithful Israelites came for an annual festive offering. That the ritual there was highly developed and detailed is proven by the explicit description of malpractice on the part of Eli's sons (I Sam 2:13–17) in taking their portion of the meat before the entrails were burned. However, Shiloh was not the only legitimate place of sacrifice; others included Beth-Shemesh (I Sam 6:14–15), Mizpah (I Sam 7:9), Ramah (I Sam. 7:17; 9:11–24), and Gilgal (I Sam. 10:8; 11:15; 13:9). Family and clan sacrifices were commonplace (I Sam. 16:2–5).

Common to all these instances was "sacrifice" for other reasons than "sin offerings"! This is so very important. What you need to know is that in the Old Testament the first mention of animal sacrifices for "sin offerings" was AFTER the Golden Calf and the sin of idolatry by a people already possessing relational knowledge of the True God

Answer for yourself: Then how did mankind obtain forgiveness of sin up until the Golden Calf and the idolatry associated with it? Surely man sinned and must have been given a way of obtaining atonement prior to the Exodus. Well stay tuned!

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #2

HOW WERE THE SACRIFICES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT TO BE UNDERSTOOD AND INTERPRETED?

Throughout the ages attempts have been made to explain the dynamics involved in the sacrificial system of Israel. Without such an understanding of the Old Testament Sacrificial System the typical Christian is literally "crippled" in his understanding of Atonement. The proposed explanations can be divided into three categories: the symbolic, juridical, and rational.

SYMBOLIC

Philo devoted a treatise to the subject (De Victimis; see Spec. 1:112–256). He pointed out that only domesticated animals and the most gentle birds were suitable for sacrifice and that they had to be free of blemish, which he took as a symbol that the offerers must also be wholesome in body and soul. The Jew had to approach the altar with his soul purged of its passions and viciousness if the sacrifice was to be acceptable (Spec. 1:166/167, 257).

Take notice of the spiritual condition necessary BEFORE the sacrifice was to be presented at the altar…his soul had to be purged of sin IF the sacrifice was to be acceptable to God.

The reader needs to understand NOW that there were prior conditions that needed to be met by the sacrificer of the animal BEFORE the sacrifice was to be brought to the altar. Now lets pick up with Philo.

The wicked would be rejected, even if they offered hundreds of sacrifices (Spec. 1:271). The rabbis stated that the sacrificial statutes indicated that God is with the persecuted. The ox is pursued by the lion, the goat by the leopard, and the lamb by the wolf. Therefore God commanded, "Do not offer those that persecute, but rather those that are persecuted" (Lev. R. 27:5). The requirement that fowl be offered with their feathers symbolized that a poor man was not to be despised. Therefore his offering was placed on the altar in its full adornment, despite the nauseating odor normally arising from the burning of feathers (Lev. R. 3:5). Salt, an indispensable ingredient of sacrifice, was symbolic of the moral effect of suffering, which purifies man and causes sins to be forgiven (Ber. 5a). Judah Halevi declared that the fire on the altar was kindled by the will of God as a sign that the people found favor in His sight and that He was accepting their hospitality and offerings (Kuzari 2:26). Samson Raphael Hirsch explained that the Pentateuch required the person to lay his hands upon the head of the sacrifice to indicate that the "hands" that have become morally weakened "support" themselves on the resolution of the future betterment that is expressed by the offering (his commentary to Lev. 1:4). David Hoffmann declared that sacrifices are symbols of man's gratitude to God and his dependence on Him, of the absolute devotion man owes to God, as well as of man's confidence in Him (Introd. to commentary on Lev.

JUDICIAL

The juridical approach is put forward by Ibn Ezra (commentary to Lev. 1:1) and to some extent by Nahmanides (commentary to Lev. 1:9). According to them, the sinner's life is forfeit to God, but by a gracious provision he is permitted to substitute a faultless victim. His guilt (not his sin) is transferred to the offering by the symbolic act of placing his hands on the victim.

The reader should understand RIGHT NOW that this is something new he has never heard in his Christian Church. It was the guilt and not the sin that was transferred to the innocent animal. Now back to Ibn Ezra.

When observing the pouring out of the blood and the burning of the sacrifice, the person should acknowledge that were it not for divine grace he should be the victim, expiating his sin with his own blood and limbs (Nahmanides to Lev. 1:9). Many Christian exegetes adopted this explanation and on it built the whole theological foundation of their Church.

RATIONAL

Quite different is the rational view of sacrifice advocated by Maimonides. He rejected the symbolist position which discovered reasons for the details of the various sacrifices. Those who trouble themselves to discover why one offering should be a lamb, while another is a ram, are "void of sense; they do not remove any difficulties, but rather increase them" (Guide, 3:26). Maimonides held that the sacrificial service was not really of Jewish origin. It was the universal custom among all peoples at the time of Moses to worship by means of sacrifices. Since the Israelites had been brought up in this atmosphere, God realized that they could not immediately completely abandon sacrifice. He therefore limited its application by confining it to one place in the world, with the ultimate intention of weaning them from the debased religious rituals of their idolatrous neighbors.

Answer for yourself: Dear one, did you hear that? God was in time to wean His people from the pagan idolatrous forms of worship that contained animals sacrifice that His people had been influenced by the example of pagan nations? This means that Atonement was to be obtained in other than "blood" and the Old Testament is full of ways by which one can obtain Atonement without "blood"! Please keep reading!

The new service of "confined sacrifice" in one place in the world stressed the existence and unity of God, "without deterring or confusing the minds of the people by the abolition of the service to which they were accustomed and which alone was familiar to them." Maimonides cited the experience of Israel, led not by the shorter way, but by the circuitous route through the land of the Philistines (Ex. 13:17). Likewise, through a circuitous road, Israel was to be led gradually and slowly to a deeper perception of religion and divine worship (Guide, 3:32). He gives the added remarkable parallel that it would be equally incomprehensible for anyone in his generation to suggest that prayer could be offered in thought alone, without the recitation of words.

Abrabanel strengthened the arguments for Maimonides' viewpoint. He explained that only within this framework can it be understood why the Torah limited the sacrificial service to one locality while prayers may be recited in all places (Introd. to his commentary on Lev., 2d). Abrabanel cites a Midrash which stated that the Hebrews had become accustomed to idolatrous sacrifices while in Egypt. To wean them from these idolatrous practices, God commanded, while tolerating the sacrifices that had been practiced by His people as influenced by pagans, that they be offered in one central sanctuary. This was illustrated by the parable of a king who observed that his son loved to eat forbidden foods. The king then decided to serve him these foods daily so that he would ultimately lose his desire for them and forego his evil habits (Lev. R. 22:8). D. Hoffmann later proposed a different explanation for this Midrash, declaring that the king insisted that the son was to eat exclusively at his table so that he would only be served proper food and thus curb his appetite for forbidden foodstuffs (Introd. to commentary on Lev., p. 61).

The reader should understand that God was going to do a new thing. He was to allow the continuation of these "pagan sacrifices" but He will instill new meaning to them. This will be seen in the development of a unique relationship between the sacrificer and God Himself. You will see how this works when we look deeper into the concept in Leviticus that "the life is in the blood". God is not concerned about blood, but the life…the soul contained within the blood!

With the destruction of the Temple and the automatic cessation of the sacrificial system, it was laid down that prayer took the place of the sacrifices because such ideas are also taught in the Old Testament. The Shaharit service was regarded as taking the place of the morning tamid and the Minhah service, the afternoon tamid. On all occasions when an additional offering was brought, the Musaf prayer was introduced (Ber. 4:1, 7; 26b). One of the rabbis later declared that prayer was even more efficacious than offerings (Ber. 32b) [remember God was progressively weaning them from animal sacrifices (the physical) with the intent of spiritual sacrifices such as prayer, repentance, almsgiving, etc.]. This is the message of the Prophets!

THE SPIRITUAL DYNAMICS OF SACRIFICE THAT WE JUST DISCUSSED …SEEN IN DETAIL

When the glory of the Lord had entered the tabernacle in a cloud, God revealed Himself to Moses from this place where He would put His Name, according to His promise in Ex. 25:22 to make known His will through him to the people. The first of these revelations related to the sacrifices, in which the Israelites were to draw near (korban) to God, that they might become partakers of His grace.

The patriarchs, when sojourning in Canaan, had already worshipped the God who revealed Himself to them, with both burnt offerings and slain offerings (we saw this above in the form of "burnt offerings"). Whether their descendants, the children of Israel, had offered sacrifices to the God of their Fathers during their stay in Egypt, we cannot tell as there is no Biblical allusion whatever to the subject in the short account of these 430 years. Yet we know from archeology that such was the case. What is certain is that they had not forgotten to regard the sacrifices as a leading part of the worship of God, and were ready to follow Moses into the desert, to serve the God of their Fathers there by a solemn act of sacrificial worship (Ex. 5:1-3; 4:31; 8:4); and also, that after the exodus from Egypt, not only did Jethro offer burnt offerings and slain offerings to God in the camp of the Israelites, and prepare a sacrificial meal in which the elders of Israel took part along with Moses and Aaron (Ex. 18:12), but young men offered burnt offerings and slain offerings by the command of Moses at the conclusion of the covenant (Ex. 24:5). Consequently sacrificial laws of these chapters presuppose the presentation of burnt offerings, meat-offerings, and slain offerings as a custom well known to the people and a necessity demanded by their religious feelings. They were not introduced among the Israelites for the first time by Moses by what he learned at Sinai, because animal sacrifices date from the earliest period of mankind.

Answer for yourself: Are you curious why we have not found "sin offering" yet and we are up to Moses in out time-line?

The subject of sacrificial laws in the book of Leviticus was not to enforce sacrificial worship upon the Israelites, nor to apply some sort of a theory concerning the Hebrew sacrifices, but simply to organize and expand the already existing sacrificial worship of the Israelites into an institution in harmony with the covenant between the Lord and His people, and adapt and promote the end for which it was established… communion and fellowship with God. You need to fully understand what was just said. Read it again please.

But although sacrifice in general reaches up to the earliest times of man's history, and is met with in every nation, it was NOT enjoined upon the human race by any positive commandment of God, but sprang out of a religious necessity for fellowship with God. These sacrifices assumed very different forms in different tribes and nations, in consequence of their estrangement from God, and their growing loss of all true knowledge of Him.

Their ideas of the Divine Being were regulated by the nature, object, and significance of the sacrifices they offered, and they were quite as subservient to the worship of idols as to that of the one true God. To discover the fundamental idea, which was common to all the sacrifices, we must remember, that the first sacrifices were presented after the fall.

Also interesting by its absence is any mention of SIN OFFERINGS, PRIESTHOOD, EXPIATION or FORGIVENESS in the PRE-Mosaic sacrifices of the Old Testament....in other words NOT before the Golden Calf incident....more on that soon.

This is very important and you need to let this fact sink deeply into your Christian theology!

There are very important reasons for the omission of "sin offerings" as you will soon discover. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #3

FORGIVENESS WAS NOT THE THEME OF SACRIFICES BEFORE MOSES AND THE GOLDEN CALF - BUT REPRESENTING FELLOWSHIP OF ONE'S SOUL WITH GOD

Before the fall man lived in blessed unity with God. This unity was destroyed by sin, and the fellowship between God and man was disturbed, thought not entirely abolished. In the punishment which God inflicted upon the sinners, He did not withdraw His mercy from men; and before driving them out of paradise, He gave them clothes to cover the nakedness of their shame, by which they had first of all become conscious of their sin. Even after the expulsion He still manifest Himself to them, so that they were able once more to draw near to Him and enter into fellowship with Him. This fellowship (NOT forgiveness) they sought through the medium of sacrifices, in which they gave a visible expression not only to their gratitude towards God for His blessing and His grace, but also to their supplication for the further continuance of His divine favor. It was in this sense that both Cain and Abel offered sacrifices [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?], thought not with the same motives or in the same state of heart toward God. In this sense of fellowship and not forgiveness Noah also offered sacrifice [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?]. After Noah's deliverance from the flood; something changed in the offering of sacrifices. Whereas the sons of Adam offered their sacrifices to God from the fruit of their labor, in the tilling of the ground and the keeping of sheep, Noah presented his burnt offering from the clean cattle and birds that had been shut up with him in the ark (those animals would from that time forward be assigned to man as food…Gen. 9:3). Noah was probably led to make this selection by the command of God to take with him into the ark not one or more pairs, but 7 of every kind of clean beasts. Noah may have discerned in this an indication of the divine will, that the 7th animal of every description of clean beast and bird should be offered in sacrifice to the Lord, for His gracious protection from destruction by the flood. Also notice the distinction of "clean and unclean" foods long before the Sinai experience. Moses, in Leviticus revelation, also received a still further intimation as to the meaning of the animal sacrifices. We see this in the prohibition which God appended to the permission to make use of animals as well as green herbs for food: "flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat " (Gen. 9:4-5). This prohibition is because the flesh still contained the blood as the animal's soul (the soul lives in the blood of the animal). In this there was already an intimation, that in the bleeding sacrifice the soul/life of the animal was given up to God with the blood; and therefore; that by virtue of its blood as the vehicle of the soul, animal sacrifice was the most fitting means of representing the surrender of the human soul to God. THIS IS VERY IMPORTANT! You will quickly come to see that the "blood" accomplished nothing; rather it was a picture of the soul of the person who brought the animal to the altar.

THE SOUL OF THE ANIMAL AS FOUND IN IT'S BLOOD REPRESENTED, WHEN PRESENTED ON THE ALTAR, THE SURRENDER OF THE HUMAN SOUL TO GOD

It is not the "blood" but the "soul" in the blood which demonstrates surrender to God and it is later to be understood as seen as placed on the altar where we see the "soul of the offerer of sacrifices" on the altar in lieu of the animal which is but a substitute for the person bringing the animal for sacrifice. The animal was literally the extension of the person bringing the sacrifice. God would not have a human sacrifice his life and blood and place it upon the altar as a demonstration of "communion" and "fellowship" with God; instead the animal was the extension of the person's life. The person bringing the animal had fed, groomed, and cared for the animal usually. It was part of his life and his life and energy had been invested into the care of the animal. So when the "soul" of the animal was taken and offered upon the altar in the release and placing of the animal's blood on the altar, then the person by proxy was represented on the altar in communion with God as well. Understand the animal was innocent having never sinned. This was supposed to be a picture of the spiritual position of the person bringing the sacrifice. The person bringing the sacrifice was ALREADY to have repented of his sin, confessed his sin, prayed, and made restitution to his fellowman if needed BEFORE he ever brought the animal to the altar. Then when he had done these spiritual necessities PRIOR to bringing the animal to the altar, then the person's soul was AT-THAT-MOMENT (atonement) right with God. He was forgiven and his repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution had accomplished for him atonement PRIOR to the animal being offered. "At that moment" his soul was again in right standing and relationship with God. In order to make such a declaration to the world and his fellowman, as well as to God, then he would take an animal and it would be slain and its blood placed on the altar. In so doing, the animal was a CORRECT PICTURE of the spiritual state of the person {if he had previously before bringing the animal repented, confessed, prayed, made restitution if possible, given alms, etc.] making the sacrifice for the animal's soul (in the animal's blood) was on the altar in communion with God and was NOW a true picture of the sacrificer's soul in communion with God if had repented as stated above before he came to the altar!

Besides this, if anyone wanted to eat meat, the animal's soul had to be given back to God before the flesh could be consumed. So you see in the sacrificial system there were two dynamics at work: atonement and the conditions necessary to eat meat which also contained the Divine image which had to be given by to God.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice we have not mentioned "sin offerings" yet?

HOW IS JESUS RELATED TO ALL THIS?

What I just described in the sacrificial system is an aspect of the death of Yeshua that most likely you have never even considered. This truth may possibly have been only dimly surmised by Noah and his sons; but it must have been clearly revealed to the patriarch Abraham when God demanded the sacrifice of his only son, with whom his whole heart was bound up, as a proof of his obedience of faith, and after he had attested his faith in his readiness to offer this sacrifice, supplied him with a ram to offer as a burnt-offering [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?], instead of his own (Gen. 22). In this the truth was practically revealed to him, that the true God did not require human sacrifice from His worshipers, but the surrender of heart/soul and the denial of the natural life, even thought it should amount to a submission to death itself. This act of surrender was to be perfected in the animal's sacrifice; and that it was only when presented with these motives that sacrifice would be pleasing to God. Yeshua was willing to die if need be for the kingdom to come. The problem was that Israel did not merit the kingdom; even during the 40 years following his death. Simply said: no kingdom, no King!

That means prophecies not fulfilled. So we wait!

PURPOSE OF OFFERINGS

The word "korban" is commonly translated either "sacrifice" or "offering", but the truth is that the English language does not possess a word that accurately expresses the concept contained in the word. The word "sacrifice" implies that the person bringing it is required to deprive himself of something in order to satisfy someone else's need, but God finds no satisfaction in inflicting pain or deprivation upon His children. The word "offering" is closer to the mark but it too fails to convey the true meaning of a "korban". "Offering" implies that the Recipient of the gift must be appeased, that He requires a tribute that will somehow appease His wrath or make Him receptive to the entreaties of a supplicant, or that He has a need that can only be satisfied by someone other than Himself. As if God required our gifts! "If you have acted righteously, what will you have given Him! (Job 35:7); God does not become enriched by man's accomplishments.

The Hebrew word itself provides the answer. The root of the meaning is "to come near." Again the idea carries the concept of fellowship. The person bringing an offering does so in order to come closer to God, to elevate his level of spirituality thereby approaching God in the Spirit.

Now remember the person brought the animal as a picture of himself in that through his repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution he was "coming near" to God and the sacrifice of the animal and the placing of the animal's soul on the altar was a demonstration that he, the person bringing the sacrifice, had ALREADY "drawn near to God" and the soul of the animals was a true picture of himself NOW since repenting previously before coming to the altar. The offering was a picture of that spiritual fact to all the world as well as for God to see!

When Adam was deposited in the Garden of Eden, his first responsibility was to work it and guard it (Gen. 2:15). That means that Adam was commanded to plant, work, cultivate; everything that was necessary to keep the Garden as a Paradise. Before Adam's sin, man had no need to be a peasant; everything grew for him at God's command, with no need for him to exert himself in any way. It was only after his sin that he was expelled from Eden and required to earn his bread through the sweat of his brow.

How then was he to work and guard Eden? Through the study of Torah and the performance of positive and negative commandments. His livelihood would come in return for his obedience to God's will. God will always respond to man's righteousness by blessing his material efforts.

Adam's mission was to make himself an offering in his lifetime, by dedicating himself unreservedly to God. On God's Throne of Glory, there is an image of a man (Ez. 1:10). Every human being has his own image above, his ideal spiritual self, which represents his goal and his potential. Man's soul is placed in an earthly body so that he can surmount the challenges of material life and raise himself up to his personal, heavenly self; to unite his earthly self with his higher self. Just as everyone has a body and a soul, and his mission is to triumph in the eternal struggle of body versus soul, so, too, many must struggle to live up to the summons of his higher self.

Man is religious yet he sins! How can he defy the Creator he believe in? He is kind and generous, yet he is sometimes mean and stingy. He is moral, but has lapses in conduct. Whatever man is, he is often inconsistent, and if he is honest with himself, he knows that he is far from living up to his inner image. He wants his body to come closer to his soul; on a yet higher level, he should also want his soul to live up to its counterpart on high.

Similarly, there is a Temple in heaven that corresponds to the Temple on earth. The masters of Kabbalah teach that the good deeds of the people of God accumulate to build a spiritual replica of that heavenly Temple, and when there are enough such good deeds, the heavenly Temple will come down to the Temple Mount, signaling the end of the exile and the beginning of the perfect world foretold by the prophets. This is similar to the striving of the individual soul. There is a higher ideal we must see to capture in our mundane lives. Possibly it is best expressed by the Psalmist: "the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth He has given to mankind (Psm.

115:16). The heavens are already heavenly; God does not need man to improve upon them. But He has given us the earth that we might make it heavenly, as well. God gave mankind the Torah as instruction to bring heaven to earth through obedience of God's will as expressed in His living Word. This is best expressed through acts of Loving Kindness (Gemilut Hasadim) and Repairing of the World (Tikkun Olam). Adam was the offering, and for him to devote anything less than his maximum to God would have been to steal his Divinely conferred potential and misappropriate it for himself. The sin of eating from the Tree of Knowledge was such a misappropriation because he would be flouting the will of God. The truest offering is when the owner brings "himself" to God, making himself and his desires subservient to the teachings and guidelines of the Torah. The symbolism of the offerings is based on this concept; that the animal is secondary; that is but an indication of what its owner feels and toward what he strives.

REASONS FOR THE OFFERINGS

The function and purpose of the offerings are not concepts that man can grasp rationally. Especially in modern times when anything not measurable, observable, or replicable is questioned and denied, the idea of offerings is not an easy one to understand. It is necessary, therefore, to understand that they and their efficacy are manifestations of God's plan and wisdom. They are reality, even though we have never seen them and have no personal experience through which to know their potency.

We cannot understand why the slaughter of a sanctified animal, the placing of its blood and the burning of its flesh on the Altar; why these acts should bring God's Presence down to earth (accomplishes fellowship). Had the Jewish people been asked about the possibility of this happening before they had seen it, perhaps even they would have been skeptical. But they saw it happen! They saw the cloud of God's glory descend upon the Tent of Meeting. They saw a heavenly fire descend to their Altar and remain there for hundreds of years. They saw a Divine glow on Moses' face. To them, these were demonstrable, visible, tangible facts.

This is incomprehensible to our rational, scientific minds. But so was the splitting of the atom to rational minds a hundred years ago.

Various reasons for the offerings are given by classic commentators. The reason for the offerings is so profound that it is beyond human comprehension and the best efforts of the greatest of Jewish thinkers can yield only a drop in the ocean of God's intent.

OFFERINGS AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR MAN…BUT WE ALREADY SAID THAT

The offerings were seen to elevate three parts of every human deed: thought, speech, and action. When a person sins and then brings an offering, all three of those elements are used to take the sinful use to which he had previously put them, and transform it into the instrument of doing God's will. The person bringing the offering performs the commandment of leaning, by placing his hands on its head and leaning on it, thereby dedicating his strength and activity to God. He purifies his thought and intentions, by confessing his sin, pronouncing the spiritual goal that he hopes to attain, or uttering praises to God. As a further way of purging his sinful thoughts, the innards of the animal; representing the human organs that are the seat of desire and through, are burned on God's Altar. In the case of an elevation-offering, which is completely burned, the animal's feet symbolize the hands and feet with which man ran and acted to defy his Creator. The animal's blood (containing its soul), representing man's soul, was placed on the Altar (notice it is the soul that is placed upon the Altar; just not the blood).

Let's look at Leviticus 17:11 in context in order to make sure we understand the "central" idea of the passage.

> "And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life [SUBJECT OF THE SENTENCE] of the flesh is in the blood [DIRECT OBJECT OF THE SENTENCE], and I have given it [THE LIFE] to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood [LIFE IN THE BLOOD REMEMBER?] that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, `No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'"

Answer for yourself: Did you know that "blood" was not the subject of the sentence? Did you notice what was? Did you understand that it was the "life" that was placed on the altar for atonement and not the blood?

In other words it is not the blood that atones, but the "soul" [LIFE] that atones..a life that repents, prays, confesses sin, makes restitution, gives alms, etc....!!!

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that as a Christian you whole understanding of the sacrificial system in the Bible is wrong because you have focused on "blood" for atonement instead of the "life" in the blood which is the real atoning agent?

BUT ISAIAH 53 SAYS....OR DOES IT?

Well not it does not say what you think it says. Why? You are reading most likely from your Christian Bible which is a very poor translation, or should I say, a very good mistranslation of Isaiah 53. This is why I spend so much time on the text. The Bible Jesus used and read did not read anything like our Christian Old Testament in hundreds of places. Isaiah is a good instance. Below is what the Palestinian Jewish Scriptures, called the Tanakh, reads for verse 10 of Isaiah 53:

Isa. 53:10 states " HaShem desired to oppress him and He afflicted him; if his soul would acknowledge guilt..."

WOW!

That sure is different from what your Christian Bible says:

Isa 53:10...IN THE KJV CHRISTIAN BIBLE...WHY IS IT DIFFERENT FROM THE HEBREW?

10 Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand. (KJV)

Simply said, this Christian translation has been "Jesusized" by having the concept of guilt removed, for in Christian "theology" Jesus can have no guilt and many try to make him the subject of the passage when the real uncorrupted Hebrew Scripture define the suffering servant as the corporate nation of Israel and not one individual

Back to the subject at hand.

In one of the greatest passages in the Bible, we are told by Isaiah the prophet that if the "soul" of the "suffering servant" would acknowledge guilt…confess sin, pray, repent...

Answer for yourself: What do you do when you acknowledge guilt?

You confess and then repent. This is the subject of the verse. You literally turn around your "life". Your life changes direction; from sin to righteousness. You no longer continue your sinister ways. Now you can see how such a life, after repentance and confession of sin, was understood, even as the Christian Bibles say: "soul/life an offering for sin"! One's life, when turned to God and away from sin, was the atonement that Leviticus 17 speaks about.

Answer for yourself: Could we have missed this understanding when looking at the death of Jesus or, as Isaiah said, the martyrdoms of millions of Israelites (remember Jesus is paradigm of all Jews)?

While this procedure (placing the animal's soul on the alter in substitute for yours) is being accomplished with one's offering, the sacrificer meditates upon his sin, for the offering service teaches him graphically that he has sinned against God with body and soul. He contemplates that justice would have dictated that his human body by burned on the altar as a penalty for sin and his soul required by God in lieu of the animal's blood be placed upon it. It is only God's graciousness that permits the animal to become his substitute. Then, parts of the offering are given to the Kohanim (priests/teachers), so that those who dedicate their lives to study and teach the Torah are sustained through him and so that they will pray for him. It is an act of supreme graciousness that God is prepared to accept an offering from us instead of punishing us directly for our misdeeds. This is why the offerings are described throughout Leviticus as a satisfying aroma to God, because God is pleased when His children repent and seek to change their lives for the better.

When one brings an offering with such noble thoughts he has truly made himself an offering. The Sages have said of one who brings a humble meal-offering, it is as if he had offered his own life upon the altar. He thereby raised his mundane desires and makes them worthy of being placed on the heavenly altar.

More to follow. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #4

WHAT PICTURES CAN WE NOW SEE MORE CLEARLY AS CONTAINED IN THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM OF ISRAEL?

Let us not forget what we just have learned. It was the soul of the animal as found in it's blood, which when presented in a sacrifice AFTER the prior repentance, confession, and prayer of the sinner, was understood by God as the surrender of that person's soul toward Him. This is what it is all about, and will always be about.

A SHORT REVIEW

It is not the "blood" but the "soul" in the blood which demonstrates surrender to God and it is later to be understood as seen as placed on the altar where we see the "soul of the offerer of sacrifices" on the altar in lieu of the animal which is but a substitute for the person bringing the animal for sacrifice. So you see in the sacrificial system there were two dynamics at work: atonement and the conditions necessary to eat meat which also contained the Divine image which had to be given by to God.

WHAT DID BOTH GOD AND THE SACRIFICER KNOW THEN THAT

WE DON'T TODAY?

When, when making sacrifice properly, knew that he had attained something special with God. Christian teaching today is completely devoid of this knowledge and I thank I over the years in my studies He allowed me to find and recover this most needed part of instruction. This knowledge, when properly understood, will go a long way in helping the Christian separate error from truth as he hears taught in his churches.

UNION WITH GOD AND FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD RESULTED

Whenever the Torah commands that offerings be brought, these commandments use only God's Four-letter Name (yod-hey-vah-hey); the "Tetragrammaton" (I AM). If other names were used, some might err, thinking that there are many Gods or forces, one demanding this offering and another demanding some other offering. Since the Name Elokim represents God as the One Who controls nature, that Name might be taken to imply that there is an angel or a power who has dominion over a particular land or aspect of existence, and that that power requires the offering. The Four-Letter Name is formed of the letters that spell, was, is and will be, meaning that God is eternal. This is not God as He appears in a particular manifestation (Judge, Provider, Life-giver) but God as He is.

This is His Name as the God of Mercy. No one should think that God requires offerings to feed or appease Him. The Eternal One has no needs that man can satisfy for everything is His and nothing is beyond His power!

Answer for yourself: What then is the purpose of the offerings?

You should have seen by now that these offerings provided man an opportunity to unite himself to God to whatever extent it is possible for mortal man to do so through repentance, confession, and restitution.

Similarly, there is a humanly created fire below on the altar and there is the Heavenly fire from above, which God has placed upon Israel's altar. Both of these flames are fed by the offerings of the Jewish people, symbolizing the union of man's spiritual aspirations with God's goals for him. Thus the offerings provide Israel a means for spiritual elevation [drawing closer to God].

THE SACRIFICER HAD AN ACCURATE UNDERSTANDING OF HIMSELF BEFORE GOD....ACKNOWLEDGING "ONE'S OWN" NOTHINGNESS

All creatures emanate from God and have no independent existence on their own. Man has freedom of choice and his intellect puts great achievements within his reach, but all of this is possible only because God gives him the power to do so. Man could not function or even exist without God. The goal of creation is for man to acknowledge this basic fact; to recognize and proclaim that everything exists because of God and nothing can survive without Him. There are many ways for God's glory to be revealed and recognized. The highest recognition of all is for man to know The Oneness of God, meaning that there is nothing aside from Him. He achieves his ultimate greatness when he recognizes that there is none beside Him (Deut. 4:35). An offering is a demonstration of this concept. It says that its owner is surrendering his possessions to their Source (God). Theoretically, one might expect him to be ready to give even his very life in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty, but that is not His will. God wants man to live, to grow, to thrive, to serve; and God ordains the offerings as man's way to recognize His Oneness. Thus, by offering his possessions [as seen in the animal presented to God in sacrifice], one symbolizes that he has no existence but for God's will.

UNITING BODY AND SOUL...BEING ONE WITH GOD

The efficacy of offerings in obtaining God's favor is comparable to the way food makes it possible for the soul to maintain its attachment to the body. Material food cannot provide nourishment to the soul, which is not a physical entity. It is this nourishment of the body that enables it to remain healthy enough to play host to the soul. Likewise, the "food of the Altar's fire" somehow effects the process that enables the Shechinah to remain among Israel.

The food of the soul is not measured in calories, vitamins, and minerals. Only intellectual and spiritual pursuits can nourish the soul. Torah study, prayer, even meals in celebration of such events as Sabbath and Festivals all have a sacred content that is capable of nourishing the soul. Only in this sense do the offerings constitute food for God. Man's dedication to Him and His commandments provides the nourishment that enables the Shechinah to attach itself to human beings and their handiwork. We think of food in terms of nutritive value, but that is not what sustains life. Man does not live merely because of the bread (material component). He lives through the bread's spiritual component; what emanates from the mouth of God. This is what holds together body and soul and what holds together Godliness and Israel through the agency of the offerings.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

Having now come to the understanding that it was a life lived above sin that was so pleasing to God that He accepted such a life as an offering and atonement for one's sin, it should behoove you to rethink what you believe about atonement as a Christian. If you were to do some comparative religious study you will see the preponderance of evidence of how pagan concepts of salvation are woven into Pauline theology. I have shown you the Biblical teachings of atonement and have not mentioned Paul's theology once. The reason I have not is that nowhere in the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text are such Pauline concepts of atonement found. Only when you read the fraudulent and mistranslated Greek Scriptures, which the Rabbis did not translate, do you begin to find such ideas surfacing in the text (http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua). But never fail to understand that such concepts cannot be found in the Jewish Scriptures from which the Greek translation emanated. Somebody "fixed" the Greek translation to read differently.And sadly for you, these altered and paganized Greek mistranslation became the foundation for your Christian Old Testament. To make matters worse, your New Testament quotes from the fraudulent Old Testament (http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com). Over and over as you read your Christian Bible you only reinforce and rehearse error! You need to know that. But that happened over 2000 years ago and who knows? Well I do, and others do who have studied enough to see it! The Jews have always known. It is the secularized Jews of today who don't. It is time someone told you! The righteous Jews know this and have known this since 200 BC when the Greek translation was understood by them to be a corruption of the Jewish Scriptures. History records 3 attempts of the Jews to correct such a forged Greek translation but sadly their efforts were not to overtake the popularity of the already translated LXX (Septuagint).

Understand an animal's soul represented the soul of one making the sacrifice, and we, as non-Jews, today are beneficiaries of having the Jew's soul (Jesus) given in place of ours along with their prayers for our sin. Jesus is the archetype for all of Israel. He is the greatest of all the "Suffering Servants" of the God of Israel. But in this lesson we must no longer overlook the importance of a life lived above sin which procures one's redemption and not the inert blood of the animal or of Jesus. Lives lived honoring God through faith and obedience atones. Your Covenant requires it! Such is the message of Bet Emet as we are called to live like Jesus and not just "believe in Jesus." It has been my experience as a Pastor over the years to encounter multitudes of Christians who trust in Christ's blood instead of understanding the importance of his life, symbolized by his soul in his blood, as lived in obedience to God as a form of atonement, or even their own lives, as lived pleasing to God for their OWN atonement. We must walk out our salvation with fear and trembling. We are co-laborers with God in our own salvation through faith and repentance. Such a mistaken understanding of our redemption since not being taught the truth from a Hebraic perspective has caused multitudes of Christians to trust in the acclaimed miraculous powers of the blood of Jesus instead of focusing of the miraculousness of a life lived above sin. Such a false sense of security in "blood" instead of "lives lived holy before God and man" unconsciously causes the believer to not regard sin with revulsion as he should. We tend to view sin as less harmful than it is, and compromise with sin lies at the door.

The bottom line for all Christians to understand is that we have heard way too much preached about Jesus and far too little studied from the texts of the Jewish Bible which tell us exactly and accurately who he is as well as his original mission. If we had studied the original sources available to us, we would not be so mixed up theologically in Christianity today which boasts over 2000 different denominations all maintaining they have the truth about Jesus while at the same time being the most violent and crime ridden nation in the world.

SOMETHING IS WRONG WITH THE MESSAGE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…LOOK AT THE FRUIT OF THIS MESSAGE IN OUR COUNTRY WITH A CHURCH ON EVERY CORNER AND TELEVISIONS FILLED WITH THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE OF GRACE WITHOUT ACCOUNTABILITY FOR ONE'S OWN SIN! JUST LOOK OUT YOUR DOOR AND ASK IF THAT IS THE BEST THE HOLY SPIRIT CAN DO????????

I don't plan to get into why the Christian message at this time but suffice to say that the Christian message is corrupted due to it's pagan content over Jewish content as we see for example in the alteration of Jewish texts in the real Hebrew Isaiah for example but let it suffice to say as shown beyond question on many of our other sites that we are in this sad state today because instead of being a true follower of Jesus and his Jewish faith we are camped at the feet of pagan Rome and Paul's antinomianism (anti-Law). May God forgive our laziness of letting others tell us what to believe instead of us studying to show ourselves approved unto God. I just showed you part of the problem. Implicitly we are led to not revere the Laws and Commandments of God because of the solar teaching that "Jesus died for me" and my get out of jail card saves me. This comes straight out of sun worship as you have seen on this site and others. As a Pastor I saw such falsehoods lived out in the lives of the congregation year after year. When there is no Law, no Commandments, no requirements, no accountability, then there is no righteous fruit and we have our newspapers filled with horror story after horror story. And sadly few can count on their lives being a sufficient atonement for their sin because they have been taught a pagan sun-godman story which allows his followers to get away with anything. Emotionalism is a sorry substitute for knowledge.

Answer for yourself: For after all if saved by the blood of Jesus, what need do I have to live like Jesus and not disobey the commandments of God? Isn't Jesus my "grace card"?

Answer for yourself: If saved by the blood of another, what does a little sin mean…what can it hurt?

Answer for yourself: See the tragic thinking involved in focusing upon the blood of Jesus instead of the life of Jesus lived above sin? Now look out your window to the world and see what the fruit of 1700 years of erroneous teaching has grown!

THINK!

Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #5

LOOKING AT PAUL'S THEOLOGY….WHAT IS TRUTH?

We must not forget what we just learned. As the reader you must understand that what you learned is the "theology" of sacrifice and any other "sacrifice" must fit this mode of understanding. This means when viewing the death of Yeshua one must be equipped with this understanding before trying to evaluate the meanings that might be attached to his death. Along with this one must equally be equipped with sufficient information concerning comparative religions and the death of their "gods". Only if one comes to the "Jesus materials" possessing this information can he be guaranteed to be able to discern the true meaning of his death or at least see if concepts from "pagan mystery religions" have been attached to his death. This is especially important when reading Paul's writings. With what we have just learned as a background let us return to Paul's statement that "Christ died for our sins" which was the fundamental fact of the early Gentile Christian message, the corner-stone of early Gentile Christianity (but not Jewish Christianity or Messianism). But as soon as this simple fact is stated a number of vital questions are bound to arise. In order that we may have an intelligent and correct understanding of this important doctrine it is necessary that we know precisely what occurred and did not occur when Jesus died on the cross. We cannot rest content with teaching that leaves the central doctrine of the Christian faith shrouded in mystery and uncertainty. This does not mean that all mystery can be removed. But the Scriptures do supply the interpretation of the death of Christ that the inquiring mind legitimately asks for, and the salient factors concerning it should be known by all Christian people. Believing that the Hebrew Scriptures (the Palestinian Masoretic Text and not the corrupted LXX from which your Christian Old Testament originates) is God's word to man, and that the statements of Scripture regarding the death of Jesus in the Greek New Testament are often mistranslated on purpose (http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua),then if you, ordinary Christian men and women, are to even find the truth concerning the death of Jesus, then we must deal with some rather difficult information at times. It is not my wish to destroy anyone's faith, only to expose the changes made to the text as well as the lies that have been passed down about the death of Jesus which his original follower never "believed". We hold it to be our task and privilege under the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit to "search the Scriptures", the Jewish Scriptures that Yeshua himself accepted, until we reach that understanding which satisfies the mind and heart and conscience, and leads to certainty and finality.

According to the New Testament, especially the writings of Paul, we are told, for instance, in broad terms that we are members of a fallen race, that God has given His only-begotten Son for our atonement, and that salvation is through Him (Messiah) and not through any works which we ourselves are able to do.

Answer for yourself: How correct is this statement when compared with the teachings of the Hebrew Scriptures concerning atonement and forgiveness?

Let us not forget what we just learned in the prior articles.

Certainly anyone who accepts these facts and acts upon them will be "saved" because the fruit of the Christian message leads to Godliness. Yet, accepting these facts and acting upon them would appear to represent only a minimum of faith, and God has made it possible for us greatly to enrich and expand our knowledge of the way of salvation if we will but give careful attention to His word. But the problem is great; you first have to know if you, the Christian, even has His Word, or if your Old Testament is corrupted in special places. For example, the Isaiah translations in the Old Testament of your Christian Bible read completely different in many "messianic" passages as opposed to the Jewish Tanakh. You should ask yourself "why" your Christian Old Testament reads so much different from the Jewish Scriptures from which it was supposedly taken! Most likely you never knew this. It is time to awaken to such sad facts, for it is these alterations which have led to false beliefs concerning Yeshua, his life, and his death.

ANOTHER LOOK AT LEVITICUS 17:11 …POSSIBLY THE MOST IMPORTANT THING YOU CAN EVER LEARN

Christians generally insist that the absolute need for a vicarious blood sacrifice is rooted in the Torah (first five books of the Old Testament), and cite as proof Leviticus 17:11 "For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul." The sad fact of the matter is that most Christians and Pastors don't understand the verse at all.

As a Christian, you have probably heard many sermons on the topic of atonement, and have undoubtedly read many studies which support the contention that there is "no atonement without blood." But the truth of the matter is that neither the Book of Hebrews [it says "almost all things"..not "all things"] or the Old Testament says that. Of course you are also aware that this is a teaching which is not shared by traditional Jews and for a very good reason which has escaped the Gentile Christian church because of their mistranslation, alteration, and therefore misinterpretation of the passages in their Bibles as well as because of superficial reading of the whole Bible.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered how the Jewish people could reject what to you seems so clear? Why would anyone reject a "free" salvation? It does not make sense to the rational mind.

You might remember that in junior high school, we were often given an assignment to write the title for a story; what is the central idea of a passage. Let's look at Leviticus 17:11 in context in order to make sure we understand the "central" idea of the passage.

"And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, `No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'"

What should immediately be apparent is that the topic of this passage is NOT how to secure atonement from sins, but the prohibition against consuming blood. We are told parenthetically that the reason for this prohibition is that the blood contains the vitality (soul) of the animal (Genesis 9:4, Deuteronomy 12:23) and consequently, when we bring an animal sacrifice, its soul (life) which is in its blood serves as the atoning agent, and not another part of its body [the blood]. The writer of Leviticus informs us that it is the soul, one's life, which is in the blood [blood is the object of the preposition "in"] which was offered to God daily and even in death which was pleasing to God and which God accepted as an "atonement" and as an "offering for sin". Notice that it is not the "blood" which was accepted for an offering for sin, but rather the "life/soul" which was "in" the blood. "Blood" is not the subject of the sentence. This might be a shock to you but "life" is the subject of the sentence. Or better said, it is the "life" which is the subject of the sentence. That means it is not the "death" or "the blood" which accomplished anything, but rather the life of one which provided atonement. Such a life is one lived in repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution as shown earlier in these articles and as attested by the Jewish Bible. Even your Christian Old Testament will teach you the same things if you are aware of it. It just so happens that the "life of the one bringing the sacrifice" is "pictured" in the life of the animal as the animal's blood is placed on the altar.

The Hebrew word for "life" which is in the blood is the word for "soul". Such a life, if it was to be accepted as an atonement, was one which was lived completely obediently to God's Commandments [by which he never sinned]. Such a life that turned from sin was so pleasing to God that He accepted such a life as an offering for one's own sin. Such a life was lived in a constant intent to live the commandments of God and when one fell short through sin one was preoccupied to repent and then recapture one's right standing with God. After repentance, "at that moment", one was restored into right standing and relationship with God and the placing of the blood of the animal was representative of the sacrificer's soul before God since he had ALREADY repented. The animal was a picture of him at that time. The soul of the animal was a picture of the sacrificer's soul, but only if he had repented PRIOR to bringing the sacrifice. Now you can understand why God at times tells us that He is wearied by the sacrifices of the people. They were just killing the animals and there was no repentance in their hearts!

Isa 1:10-17

- 10 Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah.
- 11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats.
- 12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?
- 13 Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.
- 14 Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.
- 15 And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.

Notice that God is tired of ritual without repentance.

Notice what God says next and the remedy to this sad state of spiritual affairs He finds in His people. Notice what God tells them what they must do!

- 16 Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil;
- 17 Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

There you have it. Through repentance, confession, and a return to obedience to the Laws and Commandments of God the people could again be received by Him. Nowhere did God say He did not want the people to continue bringing the sacrifices if their hearts were contrite and repentant. Only then, as you have learned, was their hearts to be represented by the animal's blood and soul on the altar. Anything else was a lie. Such was a waste of life; not only theirs but the animal's as well.

LET US LOOK A LITTLE MORE CLOSELY

The Hebrew word for "soul" is as follows as seen in Strong's Concordance:

5315 nephesh (neh'-fesh);

from 5314; properly, a breathing creature, i.e. animal of (abstractly) vitality; used very widely in a literal, accommodated or figurative sense (bodily or mental):

KJV-- any, appetite, beast, body, breath, creature, X dead (-ly), desire, X [dis-] contented, X fish, ghost, + greedy, he, heart (-y), (hath, X jeopardy of) life (X in jeopardy), lust, man, me, mind, mortally, one, own, person, pleasure, (her-, him-, my-, thyself-), them (your)- selves, + slay, soul, + tablet, they, thing, (X she) will, X would have it.

The Hebrew word for "soul" is as follows as seen in Brown-Drivers-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

5315 nephesh-

- soul-self,, life, a creature, a person, an appetite, a mind, a living being, a desire, an emotion, a passion
- what breathes, the breathing substance or being, a soul, the inner being of man
- a living being
- a living being (with life in the blood)
- the man himself, a-self, a person or an individual
- the seat of the appetites
- the seat of emotions and passions
- the activity of mind
- the activity of the will
- the activity of the character

My whole life I was told that I was "saved" by the blood of Jesus, yet Leviticus tells me that atonement which brings salvation is accomplished by my life before God!

Looking at the definition above, one quickly sees that the activity of one's will, mind, and character [one's soul] was said to be accepted in Leviticus 17 as an atonement for one's sin [life and not blood remember?].

Jesus, like all Jewish people who came before him who were devoted to God and His Torah, as well as those who lived after him, comprise the "suffering servant Israel". Let us remember that Isa. 53 speaks of the nation and corporate Israel as the Suffering Servant and not an individual even if singular pronouns are often used among plural pronouns. It is this "Suffering Servant" who is "the" light for the non-Jewish nations. With this perspective, we now can come to understand that the blood of Jesus carried the life force of Jesus (his soul). Jesus was totally committed and surrendered to the will of God and His Torah. That instead of Jesus' death, in reality it was his life, a life lived pleasing to God as part of the Israel of God which God accepted as atonement for sin. In particular Israel is the priest for the Gentile world, and they bring sacrifices for the sins of the Gentile world. THINK! Israel's "soul", not only Yeshua's, but all of righteous Israel, past and future, "atones" for sin. These righteous lives are accepted by Hashem on the altar, according to Leviticus 17, as atonement for sin, the sin of the Gentile nations who know not God. Such in reality "atones and saves". When I as a non-Jew comes to the knowledge of God and His commandments, then when lived before Him I identify with Israel and join Israel in making atonement with my life.

Remembering what we have already learned...that singular pronouns in the Servant Songs of Isaiah refer to the nation of Israel and not to only one person like Jesus. In so doing we can find the following verses even the more astonishing.

Isaiah 53:6

6 We all went astray like sheep, we have turned, each one on his own way, and the Lord accepted his [the corporate nation of Israel] prayers for the iniquity of all of us.

Now let us never again under estimate the importance of the prayer service in the Jewish synagogues of the world for by it atonement came for Gentile sins.

Now it become a little more clear. When one looks at Jesus, or other righteous Jews as the Suffering Servant of the LORD, then we see their lives and understand them as "lights to the nations". Then it is easy to understood such righteous lives and deaths as lives lived as examples which were in complete submission to the Commandments of God as demonstrated by one's complete submission of the mind, will, and emotions to God and His desires for his people. Such examples when followed by me, literally "saves"! Such lives atoned for sins of the Gentile world and serve as an example to me and you…by which if we follow such examples….provides atonement for our sins. Literally the "corporate" example of Israel is to be individualize in each believer's life when one comes into personal relationship with God. This is explained when one reads Isaiah 53 from the Jewish Scriptures and not the corrupted Christian Old Testament.

Jesus lived a God-honoring life to such a degree that God accepted his life, as he had all Jews devoted to Him. In Jesus' life God could tabernacle in a way He never had before with any man and the "Word/Messiah became flesh" at the immersion and anointing of Jesus. Let us never forget that Israel has had many "anointed" (messiahs) messengers of God as was Jesus. Then subsequently his God-honoring life (soul) was later accepted as an offering for sin in behalf of mankind as had others of Israel before him (and those of Israel who would follow him). His soul was pure and could be accepted upon the altar of God in lieu of us. God accepted his prayers for the iniquity of us .

34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do… (KJV)

So it was not Jesus' death so much as his God-honoring life-style which was lived in complete submission to the Father and His Commandments which not only brought Jesus to tabernacle within God "without measure", but shows us the way to both live and die in a way which honors both man and God and procures for us our atonement when we live our lives by his example. The death of Yeshua was not so much a sacrifice for us but an example for us.

BUT IN A WAY THE "BLOOD" OF JESUS DID SAVE US….IF WE CAN SEE THE TRUTH OF WHAT HE TAUGHT?

Had Jesus not died then there most likely would not have been a movement catalyzed from within a Gentile hating Judaism of the 2nd Temple period which would reach out to the nations with the Torah and the Laws of Noah. The death, where the blood of Jesus was shed, was the catalyst that caused a mission into all the world where the Covenant of Noah was extended to the Gentile World. We call this the Great Commission today. Now understand which is said next. For in the wake of Yeshua's death would come a movement into all the world which aimed at taking the Torah to the nations whereby non-Jews could learn how to live lives pleasing to God as had Israel through faith and acceptance of the commands of God respective of their Covenant. Messianic Israel took to the non-Jews and the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel God's Covenant made with the non-Jews since before Noah. Faith and obedience to the Covenant stipulations brought salvation to the non-Jewish world. In others words Jesus traded his life for ours as previous Suffering Servants of God had done in preserving the truths of God for all mankind, and God accepted the bargain. This understanding is what Isaiah understood about the sacrifice of the Suffering Servant. Because of the death of Jesus, and I believe his resurrection, the teachings by which non-Jews could enter Covenant with God and live by the Commandments of God was to be taken into all the world. Along with these teachings would come the understanding that repentance from sin and a return to God provides a life pleasing to God which He then accepts as atonement for sin. Through the ages of the Christian Gentile Church this teaching was lost! Your example of being a Christian today which does not understand the sacrificial system of the Bible is proof.

Now you are ready to read our articles on Isaiah to fully understand Isa. 53 correctly

The vast majority of Christians in the world today have not been told this and wander in fables because they lack the correct understanding which only can come from in-depth Bible study. And you have to have the right text before you start. Sadly Christians for the most part cannot find the truth because they are working from a corrupted text. They only reinforce error. Buy yourself a Stone Edition Tanakh. Then you will have the Bible Yeshua used.

So it was the Suffering Servant, Israel, composed of many Israelites, whose lives lived daily in complete obedience to their God which was so pleasing to God that they could be accepted by God as an offering for sin and not their red corpuscles (blood) which Christianity sadly focuses. And the Lord accepted his [the corporate nation of Israel] prayers for the iniquity of all of us. What makes this even more remarkable is that in this very passage from Isa. 53 it is the GENTILE KINGS OF THE WORLD SPEAKING & NOT THE JEWISH PEOPLE OR THE JEWISH PROPHETS! The Gentiles will one day understand the role played by the righteous Jewish people in expiation of their sin! This is prophetic but you can fulfill it today if you open your heart and head to the facts presented in this article.

Such is the teaching of Isaiah and Leviticus.

Because of the proliferation of bloody rites in Gentile paganism, the Gentile converts to Jewish Christianity would in the first centuries, inherently revert back to pagan backgrounds. Thus the emphasis today on blood instead of a God-honoring life as the offering for sin has been inherited by the Gentile Church. Such falsehoods as taught by Paul was a "bridge" to the non-Jewish nations as he attempted to "be all things to all that he might win some". Paul gave the non-Jew nothing more that what they already had; for in the pagan mystery religions, of which Troas was the capital of Mithraism, Paul's home town, the old pagan concepts were rolled into Jesus by Paul for Gentile acceptance. They did not have to accept Judaism per se, he would simply remold Jesus into a neo-pagan to which they could relate. Such is the reckless acts of one desperately trying to be received and accepted because of his rejection by the Jerusalem Church. When Jerusalem would be notified of what Paul was teaching, he would be repeatedly summoned to answer charges. Finally, in Acts 21 he was arrested, but his submission to the Jerusalem church was never in question. They just never accepted "Paul's" gospel. Neither should you! Paul's gospel could not "preach" in Israel, only 1500 miles away when few knew little of a Jewish Jesus or the Torah. Such a clever tactic by Paul only made Yeshua the head of the non-Jewish pantheon which were already filled with pagan gods which gave their body and blood for their followers for salvation. SUCH A TEACHING AS SHARED BY PAUL

IS NOT JEWISH NOR IS SUCH A TEACHING BIBLICAL! IT IS PAGAN TO ITS CORE AND YOU NEED TO KNOW THAT! JAMES AND THE JERUSALEM CHURCH DID! The whole sorry affair can be seen as I have detailed it in this web-site if you read it thoroughly.

I just gave you the Biblical teaching on atonement.

Answer for yourself: Have you noticed we have not discussed "sin offerings" yet but have covered the gamut of atonement? Sin offerings only began after the terrible sin of idolatry and blasphemy of the Name of the LORD when Israel rejected YHVH at Sinai. Now God would add a new law that had not existed prior to that time. Request our article on "The Law That Was Added" to further your understanding in this area.

NOW…WHAT ABOUT SIN OFFERINGS?

Really I don't have much to say except they were instituted after the golden calf incident. Then a whole priesthood and tabernacle was required. But even looking at sin offerings, the same spiritual dynamics that we have learned are applied; namely, the soul or life of the sacrificer is placed on the altar as a picture of his renewed relationship with God and the accuracy of such a demonstration was determined if he had repented, confessed, and made restitution PRIOR to bringing the sacrifice.

CONCLUSION

Having now come to the understanding that it was a life lived above sin that was so pleasing to God that God accepted such a life as an offering and atonement for one's sin, it should behoove you to rethink what you believe about atonement as a Christian. If you were to do some comparative religious study you will see the preponderance of evidence of how pagan concepts of salvation are woven into Pauline theology. I have shown you the Biblical teachings of atonement and have not mentioned Paul's theology once. The reason I have not is that nowhere in the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text are such Pauline concepts of atonement found.

Only when you read the fraudulent and mistranslated Greek Scriptures, which the Rabbis did not translate, do you begin to find such ideas surfacing in the text. But never fail to understand that such concepts cannot be found in the Jewish Scriptures from which the Greek translation emanated. Somebody "fixed" the Greek translation to read differently. And sadly for you, these altered and paganized Greek mistranslation became the foundation for your Christian Old Testament. To make matters worse, your New Testament quotes from the fraudulent Old Testament. Over and over as you read your Christian Bible you only reinforce and rehearse error! You need to know that. But that happened over 2000 years ago and who knows? Well I do, and others do who have studied enough to see it! The Jews have always known. It is the secularized Jews of today who don't. It is time someone told you! The righteous Jews know this and have known this since 200 BC when the Greek translation was understood by them to be a corruption of the Jewish Scriptures. History records 3 attempts of the Jews to correct such a forged Greek translation but sadly their efforts were not to overtake the popularity of the already translated LXX (Septuagint).

Understand an animal's soul represented the soul of one making the sacrifice, and we, as non-Jews, today are beneficiaries of having the Jew's prayers for our sin on Yom Kippur. Jesus is the archetype for all of Israel. But in this lesson we must no longer overlook the importance of a life lived above sin which procures one's redemption and not the inert blood of the animal or of Jesus. Lives lived honoring God through faith and obedience atones. Your Covenant requires it! Such is the message of Bet Emet as we are called to live like Jesus and not just "believe in Jesus." It has been my experience as a Pastor over the years to encounter multitudes of Christians who trust in Christ's blood instead of understanding the importance of his life, symbolized by his soul in his blood, as lived in obedience to God as a form of atonement, or even their own lives, as lived pleasing to God for their OWN atonement. Such a mistaken understanding of our redemption as seen from Paul, since not being taught the truth from a Hebraic perspective, has caused multitudes of Christians to trust in the acclaimed miraculous powers of the blood of Jesus instead of focusing of the miraculousness of a life lived above sin. Such a false sense of security in "blood" instead of "lives lived holy before God and man" unconsciously causes the believer to not regard sin with revulsion as he should. We tend to view sin as less harmful than it is, and compromise with sin which lies at the door.

As a Pastor I saw such falsehoods lived out in the lives of the congregation year after year. When there is no Law, no Commandments, no requirements, no accountability, then there is no righteous fruit and we have our newspapers filled with horror story after horror story and many of these atrocities are being committed by clergy.

Answer for yourself: When was the last time you saw a Rabbi skip off with the funds of the synagogue or be caught with a prostitute? When was the last time a Rabbi was found molesting a child? Are they any different that non-Jews; or is it because they have a fear of God that is lacking in the Christian Church because we have "implicitly" been sold a bill of goods that we are "already" forgiven and can get away with it because "Jesus paid it all?"

And sadly few can count on their lives being a sufficient atonement for their sin when your whole life the Church has taught you to live without Law and the Commandments of God. This the legacy of Paul and his mystery religions superimposed upon a Rabbi names Yeshua/Jesus. You were taught these "laws and commandments" were a curse. Emotionalism is a sorry substitute for knowledge.

Answer for yourself: For after all if saved by the blood of Jesus, what need do I have to live like Jesus and not disobey the commandments of God? Isn't Jesus my "grace card" that allows me to live anyway I want to and not fear the end-result of such non-accountable behavior?

Answer for yourself: If saved by the blood of another, what does a little sin mean…what can it hurt; for after all, did not Jesus die for me as the Roman document ...the New Testament states?

Answer for yourself: See the tragic thinking involved in focusing upon the blood of Jesus instead of the life of Jesus lived above sin?

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #6

IS BLOOD REQUIRED TO ATONE FOR SIN?

"...without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness." (Hebrews 9:22)

Answer for yourself: Is this statement from the epistle to the Hebrews really true or is it a contradiction of the Eternal Word of God and the Bible Jesus used?

The central theme of Christianity and the New Testament (NT) is the sacrificial offering of the blood of 'Jesus Christ' as atonement for the sins of the entire world. "The blood of 'Jesus' was shed in our stead and is the only means of atonement for sin."

Answer for yourself: Is this claim truly consistent with The Holy Scriptures (OT)?

Before you say "yes" you might possibly need to be honest with yourself by answering this question: "Just how well do I really know the Old Testament Scriptures and their meanings since I am a New Testament Christian?"

Christians claim that the absolute need for blood is rooted in the Law of Moses (the Torah). Traditionally they will often cite the book of Leviticus as proof:

"And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, 'No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'" (Leviticus 17:11)

What should immediately be apparent is that this passage is concerned first and foremost with the prohibition against consuming blood. The subject of atonement here is secondary. We are told that the reason for this prohibition is that the blood contains the life or vitality of the animal. Strong's number 3722 is the Hebrew word "Kaphar"; Gesenius' Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon explains this to mean (1) to cover over, to over spread as with pitch. (2) to obtain forgiveness. (3) to make expiation for an offender, to free him from charge.

Another reason is that consuming blood was a very important part of the idolatrous religious practices of the people and nations surrounding Israel (Gen. 9:4 and Deut. 12:23).

Israel was clearly instructed by The Holy One of Israel through Moses not to imitate this abhorrent pagan practice in any manner (and this has serious implications for Christian communion, both Catholic and Protestant). Although the actual blood was later to be substituted with wine in many of the sacred banquets of pagan religions, there is ample evidence to support the claim that literal blood was consumed as part of the ritual worship of pagan deities, and this as a form of atonement.

Please listen to this! Since this passage from Lev. 17 is predominately concerned with the prohibition against consuming blood, we must look elsewhere in the Bible for instructions concerning atonement for sins. This passage in Leviticus will become clearer later on. The passage does say that since blood symbolizes the life of the animal, it can be used as a means of atoning for our sins. It does not say, however, that blood is the only means of atoning for sins. Indeed, The Holy Scriptures tell us of several other things that can be used instead of the blood of a sacrificial ram or bullock.

OTHER MEANS OF ATONEMENT…..IS THIS NEWS TO YOU?

"And Moses said unto Aaron, 'Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from [YHVH]; the plague is begun.' And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people: and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people." (Numbers 16:46-47)

Here, incense can be used to atone for sins in the same manner as the blood sacrifices of animals.

Notice what else could be used in place of blood:

"The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less than half a shekel (offering of money), when they give an offering unto [YHVH], to make an atonement for your souls. And thou shalt take the atonement money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before [YHVH], to make an atonement for your souls." (Exodus 30:15-16)

Here, one's offering to the LORD can be used to atone for sins in the same manner as the blood sacrifices of animals.

The phrase "to make atonement for your souls" in these verses is the same expression as in Leviticus 17:11:

"We have therefore brought an oblation [again items of worth and money] (Deut. 12:23-25, 30) for [YHVH], what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before [YHVH]." Numbers 31:50)

In these passages, money could be used to make atonement for the children of Israel. The principle here is not that atonement can be bought [this was the practice of the great universal church whose priests routinely sold forgiveness]. Rather, this is about doing charitable things with money. In this case, the money was to be used for the physical maintenance of the temple building.

DOES BLOOD COVER ALL SIN?

According to the Bible, blood sacrifices held only limited atonement capabilities. Foremost among it's limitations was that blood sacrifices were only brought for unintentional sins. If a person committed some sin out of ignorance, such as doing work on the Sabbath when perhaps they mistakenly thought it was Sunday, then atonement could be made through a sacrificial sin offering. Sacrifices did not help to atone for sins that were done intentionally. Notice the instructions to the priests concerning this:

"And [YHVH] spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of [YHVH] concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them: If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people; then let him bring for his sin, which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto [YHVH] for a sin offering. And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before [YHVH]; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before [YHVH]. And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation: And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before [YHVH], before the veil of the sanctuary. And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before [YHVH], which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation" Leviticus 4:1-7)

This claim that only blood could atone for sins raises many questions. What happens if someone could not afford to purchase a ram or bullock for his sin offering? Is it possible that a loving CREATOR would institute a system of atonement that could only be used by the wealthy?

"And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass, which he hath committed, two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, unto [YHVH]; one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering." Leviticus 5:7)

Here, if a person could not afford the sacrificial ram or bullock for a sin offering, certain types of small birds could be used instead.

Answer for yourself: However, what if someone was so destitute, that he couldn't afford even these small birds?

"But if his means are insufficient for two turtledoves or two young pigeons, then for his offering for that which he has sinned, he shall bring the tenth of an ephah of fine flour for a sin offering; he shall not put oil on it or place incense on it, for it is a sin offering." (Leviticus 5:11)

This is very interesting, but seriously damaging to the Christian doctrine. If birds could not be afforded, some simple flour could be used instead and would be just as effective in the eyes of Israel's CREATOR. The scriptures are quite clear on this. Since flour could be used for a sin offering, it is evident that blood was not the sole means of atonement. The Christian position that only the shed blood of 'Jesus' could atone for sins is falling by the wayside in light of the Holy Scriptures. Actually, considering the beating and torture which 'Jesus' is said to have suffered at The hands of the Romans, you have to wonder why he didn't just bring a sack of flour to the Romans and let them whip, beat, mock and crucify it instead!!!

WHAT IF THERE WAS NO TEMPLE OR AARONIC PRIEST …HOW WAS ATONEMENT ACHIEVED?

While the Temple stood, sacrifices without question served as part of the atonement process. If you read the first articles in this series then you understand the meaning of the presentation of the "blood" on the altar within the Temple.

Answer for yourself: What, though, was to be the fate of the people who did not have access to the Temple?

Answer for yourself: What were the Israelite people supposed to do after 586 B.C.E. when the first Temple was destroyed and they were exiled to Babylon?

Answer for yourself: What did the Jewish people do in the times of the Maccabees when the Syrian-Greeks were in control of the Temple and did not allow sacrifices?

After king Solomon completed the spectacular temple building in Jerusalem, he dedicated it with a very moving speech. This lengthy and very beautiful speech can be read in the books of 1 Kings 8 and II Chronicles 6. Notice, however, that Solomon doesn't speak about sacrifices at all! If sacrifices were the focal point of the temple, this omission would be very curious. Rather, the focus of the Temple was shown to be the Ark, containing the Laws which our CREATOR wanted us to live by. The Temple was first and foremost a symbol of the Shechinah, or presence of The Holy One of Israel.

"I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever. (I Kings 8:13)

"And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them" (Exodus 25:8).

Toward the end of the speech, Solomon addresses the subject of the Israelite people being denied access to the temple:

"If they return to You with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their enemies who have taken them captive, and pray to You toward their land which You have given to their fathers, the city which You have chosen, and the house which I have built for Your name; then hear their prayer and their supplication in heaven Your dwelling place, and maintain their cause, and forgive Your people who have sinned against You and all their transgressions which they have transgressed against You..." (I Kings 8:46-50)

This passage helps us understand Leviticus 17:11 properly. The Bible clearly teaches that blood sacrifices were not necessary in order to atone for sins. Prayer and repentance are shown to be the effective means of atonement. Certainly, when the Temple stood, and if one could afford an animal, a sacrifice was brought as part of the atonement process for unintentional sins. What Leviticus 17:11 teaches us is that when we bring such an animal as a sacrifice, we are not allowed to consume its blood, because as the life force, it is the part of the animal that affects our atonement. In addition, we were not to consume the blood because this was the practice of the pagan people who worshipped the sun-god 'baal.'

WAS YESHUA AN ACCEPTABLE SACRIFICE?

Another focal point of the NT is the Christian claim that the crucifixion of 'Jesus' served as the final atoning sacrifice for the sins of the world. However, if the sacrificial instructions set forth by the Law of Moses are examined closely, and you see the guidelines set forth for how sacrifices are to be brought, it will be clear that 'Jesus' could never serve as an atoning sacrifice. Clearly, not just any blood shed in any manner would satisfy the biblical requirements for atonement. Notice the instructions set forth in the Torah concerning sacrifices:

"For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls..." (Lev. 17:11)

Notice that the blood of the acceptable sacrifice was to be shed upon the holy alter of the temple, and not on the pagan phallic symbol of the cross. Besides Yeshua died on a stake without a crossbar as was customary of the Romans. Clearly, not just any spilled blood is acceptable as a sacrifice. YHVH set forth very meticulous rules and laws governing acceptable sacrifices brought to Him. "Jesus'" crucifixion may qualify as an atonement according to theGreek Testament of Mithraism but since his blood was not offered on the altar, it is not in compliance with what The Holy Scriptures of Israel's CREATOR requires.

There are many other factors that would render the crucifixion of 'Jesus' an unacceptable sacrifice according to scriptural guidelines. According to the Biblical rules in Leviticus, all sacrifices had to be offered by a Levite

Priest, a descendant of Aaron. According to the "gospel" accounts, 'Jesus' was killed by pagan, gentile Roman soldiers.

Biblical law also prohibited any sacrifice that was blemished or maimed:

"Ye shall offer at your own will a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you. And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace offerings unto [YHVH] to accomplish his vow, or a freewill offering in beefs or sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein. Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen [cyst], or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto [YHVH], nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto [YHVH]. (Leviticus 22:19-21).

Now we have a problem. The "gospels" of the NT clearly teach that 'Jesus' was beaten and whipped, which would have made him blemished and maimed and therefore an unfit sacrifice. Frequently, Christians react to this line of reasoning by protesting that it is improper to be so literal, and that "Jesus'" death was more of a symbolic or spiritual sacrifice. Christians will insist, indeed the NT itself makes the claim, that 'Jesus' was literally our Passover sacrifice. Remember in the book of John, when the Roman soldiers pierced 'Jesus' [after he was already dead, mind you]? Here we are told that they did not break his legs because this would violate the rules of the proper Passover sacrifice (Matthew 27:26, Mark 15:19, and John 19:3). The legs of the crucified were sometimes broken to hasten death. It was necessary that crucifixion victims must prop themselves up using their legs in order to facilitate breathing. This could prolong death for days at times. The legs were broken so that proper breathing could be prevented, and the lungs crushed the diaphragm and breathing was extremely difficult.:

"But coming to 'Jesus,' when they saw that he was already dead, they did not break his legs...in order that the Scripture might be fulfilled: Not a bone of him shall be broken." (John 19:33-36)

The gospel of John portrays 'Jesus' as the Passover lamb which was not supposed to have any of its bones broken (cf. Exodus 12:46, Numbers 9:12). If Christians insist that 'Jesus' was the literal Passover sacrifice, and his blood atoned for our sins, then 'Jesus,' as that sacrifice, was subject to the literal guidelines set by the Law of Moses given by CREATOR of Israel governing an acceptable sacrifice. Christians always seem to want to have it both ways. The NT itself proposes that 'Jesus' was a literal sacrifice. When confronted with the clear Biblical instructions on how acceptable sacrifices were to be offered, however, they will complain that this is just legalistic nit picking.

You may wonder why I present this material to you, our readers. Simply, knowing what I know and what I have uncovered which is not taught to the Christian Church but which Jews seem to have always known, behooves me to share it with my brothers and sisters in hopes that they might learn as well the truth behind the New Testament and repent thereby accepting the true faith of Yeshua. Such honors God and guarantees acceptance when we die. More to follow. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #7

WHY WAS YESHUA PATTERNED AFTER THE PASSOVER SACRIFICE...SHOULD IT NOT HAVE BEEN YOM KIPPUR?

It really does not make sense to type 'Jesus' as the Passover sacrifice anyway. We know from Exodus 12 that the Passover sacrifice did not serve as atonement for sins, it merely commemorates the exodus from Egypt. Even when the lamb was slaughtered in Egypt and its' blood smeared on the door-posts, the blood did not serve to atone for the sins of anyone. It was a sign for the angel of death to pass over Israelite homes during the plague of the first born. The only people in danger were first-born males. The blood wasn't a help to other people in the family, and didn't serve as an atonement for the first born or save the mothers or sisters of any family.

It would have made much more sense to type 'Jesus' after the Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) sacrifice, which actually was an atonement for the sins of all the people. The problem here was that according to Leviticus 16:10, 21-22, the animal that atoned for the sins of the nation was not killed, but sent live out into the desert. (THINK)...it was not killed...it lived...as we saw earlier in the real Isaiah...."life" atones..not death!

Now the followers of 'Jesus' had another problem. According to the prophecies of ancient Israel, the Messiah was not supposed to die before completing His mission. The followers of 'Jesus,' who claimed that he was Israel's Messiah, now had to deal with 'Jesus'' embarrassing death at the hands of the Romans. So they correlated him with the slain Passover sacrifice. This tap dance around the scriptures to try and legitimize 'Jesus' as the Messiah cannot negate the clear lesson from Leviticus and the Day of Atonement that the shedding of blood is not a pre-requisite for atonement.

CAN YESHUA OR ANY OTHER PERSON ATONE FOR YOUR SINS?

Answer for yourself: Where did this idea originate that one man, or that anyone for that matter, could atone and pay for the sins of one or more people?

Maybe you don't know or have never read on the subject. Many don't and have not done adequate study to know the answer. Others have. It should be perfectly clear to you, if you have ever looked into the subject, that such notions stem from the Babylonian mystery religion of ancient Mesopotamia. The Greeks and Romans, as well as their ancestors, had multiple legends whereby heroes died for followers, cities, friends, for the law, for the truth, etc. Many such "deaths" were thought to bring atonement to those who believed in such sacrificial acts. This is fact when can be demonstrable to anyone who inquires.

What is certain is that the idea that an innocent person can be killed instead of those who are guilty is not consistent with what the Bible teaches. After the sin of the Golden Calf, YHVH was so outraged that His intentions were to totally annihilate and destroy the Israelite people. Moses offers to die in their place. Notice the response to Moses suggestion:

"Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin...; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And [YHWH] said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." (Exodus 32:32-33)

Throughout the Bible, YHVH says that one person cannot die for the sins of another:

"Fathers shall not be put to death for their sons, nor shall sons be put to death for their fathers; everyone shall be put to death for his own sin" (Deuteronomy 24:16)

"But everyone will die for his own sin; each man who eats sour grapes, his teeth will be set on edge" (Jeremiah 31:30)

"The person who sins will die. The son will not bear the punishment for the father's iniquity, nor will the father bear the punishment for the son's iniquity; the righteousness of the righteous will be upon himself, and the wickedness of the wicked will be upon himself" (Ezekiel 18:20)

"He who justifies the wicked, and he who condemns the righteous, both of them are an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 17:15).

"No man ['Jesus' included] can by any means redeem his brother, or give to 'God' a ransom for him" (Psalms 49:7)

Unlike the Greek Testament in the Christian Bible, The Holy Scriptures of the One True CREATOR of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob clearly teach that we are responsible for our own actions and sins. We alone must account and pay the price. God does not change! No virgin born savior deity from Babylonian mythology can contradict the clear instructions of CREATOR of Israel.

Answer for yourself: Why are there two theologies concerning atonement in your Bible; one in the Old Testament by the God of Israel who says He changes not, and then the Pauline corpus of material in the New Testament that contradicts it by paralleling pagan mystery religions and their false atonements of their false gods? This is very evident when the Old Testament is compared with the NT, and if you say you never saw it dear one you never looked deep enough for it is there!

NOW FOR THE REALLY BIG QUESTION

Here is a question that Christian ministers have danced around for two thousand years, but have never truthfully answered. This question bothered me all the years I pastored.

Answer for yourself: If indeed 'Jesus' came as the final sacrifice to atone for the sins of the world, why do The Holy Scriptures proclaim that the Third Temple will be built and sacrifices resumed during the Messianic era?

The vast majority of average Christians are completely ignorant of these prophecies, as they have been cleverly hidden by their ministers. Notice the clear teachings of The Holy Scriptures regarding this:

"Even those I will bring to My holy mountain, and make them joyful in My house of prayer. Their burnt offerings and their sacrifices will be acceptable on My altar; for My house will be called a house of prayer for all the peoples." (Isaiah 56:7)

"From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia My worshipers, My dispersed ones will bring My offerings." (Zephaniah 3:10)

"All the flocks of Kedar will be gathered together to you, the rams of Nebaioth will minister to you; they will go up with acceptance on My altar, and I shall glorify My glorious house." (Isaiah 60:7)

"And I will make a covenant of peace with them; it will be an everlasting covenant with them. And I will place them and multiply them, and will set My sanctuary in their midst forever." (Ezekiel 37:26)

"And He will sit as a smelter and purifier of silver, and He will purify the sons of Levi and refine them like gold and silver, so that they may present to [YHWH] offerings in righteousness. Then the offering of Judah and Jerusalem will be pleasant to [YHWH], as in the days of old and as in former years." (Malachi 3:3-4)

LET THERE BE NO DOUBT

(Ezekiel 45:17) "And it shall be the princes part to provide the burnt offerings, the grain offerings, and the libations...to make the atonement for the house of Israel."

Apparently, dear reader, 'Jesus' sacrifice did not make atonement for the sins of all the world. If the death of 'Jesus' had atoned for all sins for all time, why will atonement need to be made during the messianic era?

Answer for yourself: How do you answer the true words of Israel's CREATOR, Mr. Christian minister? These questions caused me to study like I never had to find the answers. The root of the whole problem lies in the texts and their authority. As a Christian Pastor I came to realize after many years of serious study following Seminary that the New Testament was little more than a propagandist Roman document full of anti-Semitic ideas and teachings. Considering all the manuscripts available to day totally a little less than 6000 pieces, there are over 300,000 contradictions and no two are "identical" or "read the same". Surely God could do better. As if that was not enough, my heart broke within me when I discovered my KJV Old Testament was a purposefully falsified and altered translation of the Jewish Masoretic text which had been "doctored" as had the New Testament. It took over ten years to substantiate these discrepancies beyond any doubt and were a major factor in my resignation from my Pastorate. I was an ordained Pastor of an apostate faith. Such shame no man can know. I had believed "the" lie and the "very elect" was deceived. I accepted everything on "faith" never questioning anything. I was gullible for the LORD until YHVH put in my heart and head the desire to study out the conflicting errors of my Christian theology. The fruit I lay before you for your inspection as a gift to God and as a love offering in hopes your hunger for truth is greater than you commitment to tradition.

YHVH AND MERCY

The Christian claim that only through bloodshed can atonement be made show that Christians are unfamiliar with how compassionate and merciful the Holy One of Israel really is. Sometimes, He forgives us simply because He is kind, loving, compassionate and merciful. Even when we don't seek our LORD appropriately, He has the ability to reach out to us with love and forgive us:

"Who is a [Elohiym] like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not His anger for ever, because He delighteth in mercy." (Micah 7:18)

"Their heart was not steadfast toward Him, nor were they faithful in His covenant. But He, being compassionate, forgave their iniquity...remembering that they were but flesh." (Psalms 78:36-39)

"You have not brought Me the sheep of your burnt offerings...or the fat of your sacrifices, but you have burdened Me with your sins...Nevertheless, I will wipe out your transgressions for My own sake, and I will not remember your sins." (Isaiah 43:23-25)

Truly, truly the Holy one of Israel is a just and merciful CREATOR.

WHAT DO THE PROPHETS HAVE TO SAY?

Answer for yourself: If the Christian claim that one must be covered by the shed blood of the Messiah in order to make atonement for his sins is valid, why can this claim not be validated by the writings of the prophets?

Time and time again, the writings of the prophets emphasize prayer and repentance as the method to atone for sins. I challenge any Christian to produce a scripture from Unaltered Holy Hebrew Scriptures (OT that Jesus used) that teaches us that we must believe in the atoning blood of a Messiah in order to obtain salvation [even the Christian Bible does not say it]. What the prophets teach us is that our own obedience to the laws of Israel's CREATOR combined with sincere repentance and prayer for forgiveness will atone for sin if done with the proper attitude of humility.

- "That every man will turn from his evil way, then I will forgive their iniquity and their sin." (Jeremiah 36:3)
- "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to [YHWH], and He will have compassion on him; and to our [Elohiym]. for He will abundantly pardon." (Isaiah 55:7)
- "And if My people who are called by My name humble themselves and pray, and seek My face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." (II Chronicles 7:14).
- "But if the wicked man turns from all his sins which he has committed and observes all My statutes and practices justice and righteousness, he shall surely live; he shall not die. All his transgressions which he has committed will not be remembered against him; because of the righteousness which he has practiced he shall live...When a wicked man turns away from his wickedness which he has committed and practices justice and righteousness, he will save his life...Repent and turn away from all your transgressions, so that iniquity may not become a stumbling block to you (Ezekiel 18:21- 22,27,30).
- "By loving kindness and truth iniquity is atoned for..." (Proverbs 16:6).
- "If you return to [Elohiym] you will be restored; if you remove unrighteousness far from your tent...then you will delight in [Elohiym]..." (Job 22:23-27).

Clearly, the central teaching of The Holy Scriptures is that we must break away from our sinful past and sincerely repent. This is the only way to restore our relationship with the Holy One of Israel. If one strays from the path set forth by the laws of our God, one must repent and return to the path. This is how forgiveness is obtained. Even when sacrifices were offered, they in and of themselves did not effect atonement. You now have see that in the first articles in this series. The sacrifice was part of the process but only a "picture" of the sacrificer after his repentance. What is repentance? Returning to ETERNAL by forsaking our evil ways and praying for forgiveness. The prophets were constantly correcting the Israelite people for relying on blood sacrifices as the essential element of atonement instead of or without repentance and obedience to ETERNAL's laws:

- "What are your multiplied sacrifices to Me? says [YHWH]. I have had enough of burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed cattle. And I take no pleasure in the blood of bulls, lambs, or goats...Wash yourselves, make yourselves clean; remove the evil of your deeds from My sight. Cease to do evil, learn to do good; seek justice, reprove the ruthless , defend the orphan, plead for the widow. Come let us reason together says [YHWH], 'Though your sins are as scarlet, they will be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they will be like wool, if you consent and obey..."(Isaiah 1:11-18).
- "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord." (Proverbs 15:8).
- "To do righteousness and justice is more acceptable to [YHWH] than sacrifice." (Proverbs 21:3)
- "For I delight in loyalty rather than sacrifice, and in the knowledge of [Elohiym] rather than burnt offerings." (Hosea 6:6).
- "Has [YHWH] as great a delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken more than the fat of rams." (I Samuel 15:22)
- "With what shall I come to [YHWH], and bow myself before the [Elohiym] on high? Shall I come to Him with burnt offerings, with yearling calves? Does [YHWH] take delight in thousands of rams, in ten thousand rivers of oil? Shall I present my firstborn for my rebellious acts, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He has told you, O man, what is good; and what does [YHWH] require of you but to do justice, to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God" (Micah 6:6-8)

Answer for yourself: Do you now begin to see what the very wise king Solomon was trying to explain in 1 Kings 8, when he said that even though the Israelite people may not always have access to the sacrifices and the Priesthood, they would always have access to the Holy One of Israel?

Solomon, the wisest man who ever lived, understood that repentance and not blood is the Scriptural form of atonement.

Answer for yourself: Remember the story of Jonah?

He was sent to the evil city of Nineveh {non-Jews) to warn them of their impending destruction. Jonah does not come into the city and tell the people that unless they begin offering sacrifices they are doomed. He does not tell them that unless they accept on faith that the shed blood of Israel's Messiah will atone for their sins they are lost. No! He warns them to repent. Their response to his warnings is: they fast, pray, and turn from their evil.

Answer for yourself: What is YHVH's response to their repentance?

"When [Elohiym] saw their deeds that they turned from their wicked way, then [Elohiym] relented concerning the calamity which He had declared He would bring upon them, and He did not do it." (Jonah 3:10).

EVEN NEBUCHADNEZZAR IS TOLD HOW TO ATONE FOR HIS SINS….VERY INTERESTING....

"Therefore, O king, may my advice be pleasing to you: Redeem your sins by doing righteousness, and your iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." (Daniel 4:27).

THE POWER OF PRAYER FOR ATONEMENT

After the ten northern tribes split away from Judah, a civil war prevented most of Israel from Temple worship. The prophet Hosea addressed this situation and instructed the people accordingly:

"Return, O Israel, to [YHWH] your God, For you have stumbled because of your iniquity. Take words with you and return to [YHWH]. Say to Him, 'Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously, for we will render as bullocks the offerings of our lips'." (Hosea 14:1-2)

We are able to approach our god directly with prayer, which is possible at all times and regardless of the size of our bank accounts; and He assures us that sincere prayer can achieve forgiveness for our sins:

- "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O [YHWH], the [Elohiym] of my salvation. And my tongue shall sing aloud of Your righteousness. O [YHWH], open my lips, and my mouth shall show forth Your praise. For You do not delight in burnt offerings. The sacrifices of [Elohiym] are a broken spirit, a broken and contrite heart. These, O [Elohiym], You will not despise." (Psalms 51:14-17)"
- "I will praise the name of [Elohiym] with a song, and will magnify Him with thanksgiving. This shall please [YHWH] better than an ox or bullock that has horns and hoofs." (Psalm 69:30-31)
- "For You, [YHWH], are good, and ready to forgive, and abundant in loving kindness to all who call upon You. Give ear, O [YHWH] to my prayer, and give heed to the voice of my supplications." (Psalm 86:5-6)
- "And listen to the supplications of Your servant and of Your people Israel, when they pray toward this place; hear from heaven Your dwelling place, hear and forgive." (II Chronicles 6:21)

The Holy Scriptures of Israel are very clear. Prayer, a humble attitude, and above all, sincere heartfelt repentance is what the Holy One of Israel requires of His people in order to atone for sins. No doubt He knew thousands of years in advance that there would come a time when some would wrongly rely on the blood of a deified human sacrifice to vicariously replace obedience to His laws. It is evident to anyone with eyes to see that a comparison between The Holy Scriptures of Israel and the Greek NT to 'Baal' will reveal two entirely different religions. One is dedicated to the One True ETERNAL of Israel; the other is dedicated to just another of many mythological savior gods of the Babylonian mysteries.

The time will come when Israel's true messiah will usher in an era of peace when all nations will believe in and seek to worship the one true Holy One of Israel of our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. At that time, the proponents of Christianity will deeply repent of the day when they taught the beloved nation of Israel and the descendants of Abraham to break the first commandment and worship another besides the Holy One of Israel.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #8

Bet Emet stands for "truth" as the name implies; House of Truth. Such truth has been dug out of man-made traditions and anti-Semitic teachings held sacred by millions for almost 2 millennia. What I am going to do next is somewhat dangerous but I want you warn you ahead of time. I am going to make an assumption that I know is totally false for the purpose of teaching another truth which will shed even more light upon the truths of atonement.

LET'S ASSUME.....ALTHOUGH IT IS WRONG....JUST FOR A MINUTE.....

Let us assume that the traditional Christian teaching about Jesus' death being a sacrifice for atonement was true. So we approach what is said next with the erroneous assumption that that Jesus' death was for our sin. Now lets proceed.

ATONEMENT FOR BOTH TABLETS OF THE LAW OR ONLY FOR THE FIRST TABLET? THIS WILL SURPRISE YOU!

Answer for yourself: As a Christian, being told your whole life that Jesus' death was an atonement for your sin, then is this "atonement" as seen in his sacrifice (a type and shadow of sin offerings) an atonement for all kinds of sin?

Honestly, the answer is "NO" not all sin, because in the sacrifice of lambs, on Yom Kippur for instance, they only atoned for sins of the First Tablet of the Law and not the Second Tablet of the Law.

This is very important to recognize especially when one makes parallels to Jesus as a "type and shadow" of Old Testament truths regarding atonement. And few Christians have ever studied enough to know this....but the Jews did!

You can be a Christian you whole life and go to church your whole life and NEVER know that even when sacrifices were brought to the Temple that they not only ONLY atoned for unintentional sins....but also ONLY atoned for the sins of the First Tablet of the Law and not for ANY sins committed which were violations of the Second Tablet of the Law!

Answer for yourself: Even if Jesus' death was an atonement for sin, then if being truthful to the rule of "types and shadows" how is it possible that his death and shed blood atoned as the "Lamb of God" for sins that never were atoned for by any animal sacrifice?

THINK!

Knowing this, that Jesus is type and shadow of the Suffering Servant of God, instead of a representative of the "many" "Suffering Servants" of Israel as he really was, then you can see how a false security in focusing on the blood could, and does lead, others to think light of sin and compromise with sin much more than they should (not knowing that such sins of the Second Tablet of the Law are not handled by the sacrifices for atonement).

Answer for yourself: What? Is this news to you? Did your pastor ever tell you this? Mine never did!

Answer for yourself: Then how are we to get atonement for such things we do when we sin if sacrifices NEVER covered it before?

Answer for yourself: Did God give us a "way" for atonement for such sins and because as Christians and followers of Jesus in Christianity he we failed to understand the sacrificial system correctly and miss this important message?

Such knowledge comes only if you study the Sacrificial process in detail. If Christians trusting the blood for "everything" only knew that the atonement provided by the Suffering Servant Israel (as typified in Jesus) atoned only for the First Tablet of the Law they would most likely think twice before sinning, thus understanding they are not "under the blood" for all things, that their moral responsibility and fear of God is a requirement in being co-laborers with God in their own salvation. Now you should better understand the passage which says "work out YOUR salvation with fear and trembling

If we truly understand the Sacrificial system, and you should now if you have been reading these articles, then you know that Jesus, and the Suffering Servant of God (Israel) did not die for atonement for ALL SINS! Without this knowledge of sins atoned only for the First Tablet of the Law (sins between man toward God) we will not have a strong enough deterrent to avoid sinning sins involved in the Second Tablet of the Law…sins between man and man. Thus, understanding the Sacrificial system and the dynamics involved, the more correct interpretation would be "Christ died because of sins." And in this death of Yeshua as a paradigm of all of Israel [Suffering Servant] was efficacy for sins of the First Tablet of the Law ONLY and not the Second Tablet of the Law. The Second Tablet of the Law is atoned for by your repentance, confession, prayer, restitution, alms, etc., as Isaiah and other Prophets teach in the Hebrew Scriptures where were later altered by the Alexandrian Essenes and later Romans to exclude such concepts from the Hebrew Scriptures when translated into the Greek and Latin!

Let us not forget that Israel is a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood. A Priest's function is to make intercession for another and aid in another's reconciliation. As you saw earlier that prayer was one of the several forms of atonement, then this should renew your appreciation for the Jewish people who, on Yom Kippur, stand in the gap for the world in their prayer services. They literally, as Priests to YHVH, pray for the world and their sins that God would be merciful and forgive their sin. This is such a Holy thing which is not understood by Christians let alone Christian missionaries who are fixated on converting every Jew to Christianity?

Answer for yourself: If such a demonic and diabolical plan was ever to succeed, God forbid, then who would stand in the gap for the world on Yom Kippur.....Baptists, Catholics, Charismatics? Christianity does not ever recognize or observe the commanded Holy Days in the Bible.

ARE YOU GUILTY OF BREAKING THE SECOND TABLET OF THE LAW.....AND NOT KNOWING IT?

So many might have read this article so far and say…"so what…I don't break the commands of the Second Tablet of the Law?"

Not so fast now.

Christians, because of their perverse theology, break them at will, and what is so devious, is that they do it without ever knowing. My purpose is not to offend anyone, but if I could be honest with you and God for a moment I want you to grasp this next sentence. When I graduated from Seminary I had learned a lot, but most was religious propaganda to support a particular denominational position. It was only after years of intense study following Seminary did I come to the knowledge of the truth that I had hoped to find there but didn't. And if I can say that then what is the the level of understanding of the typical pew setter in the Churches who never reads books or studies his own faith in-depth?

If you were aware of what is contained in the Second Tablet of the Law you would be overwhelmed and I would hope, once realizing the magnitude of such violations of God's will by the typical Christian following "Christian doctrine" then your tears would run like rivers and your conduct change.

TAKE TITHING FOR EXAMPLE

This is a commandment between man and man, as the Bible commands that the tithe be used for certain things only. These "things" were always "people" in one way or another, for only if the giving of one's finances was to God and Godly pursuits would the Kingdom of Heaven be manifested on earth as it is in Heaven. God does not need our money; other do. For example the Tithe is commanded every 2 our of 6 years to be given wholly to the poor, the lame, blind, sick, infirm, widows, orphans, etc. Only is these needy people, make in the image of God, receive your blessings and care will they experience the love of God the way He intended. God intended their need be met; not miraculously from heaven, but by you!

Two years out of six you were commanded by God to "keep" your tithe and use in for "whatever your soul lusted after." Now, understand this was to be in a Godly pursuit. For example the celebration of the Sabbaths and the Seven Biblical Festivals. Also, you were commanded to share it with the poor as they again might experience in "earnest" the Kingdom of Heaven God had prepared for them. Notice it was you again who were to give to these people.

Lastly, two years out of six you were to give your tithe, and I paraphrase, to the choir, the janitors, and the levities. The levities basically are the choir. They also taught the people. They were NOT preachers but teachers. Notice also this is one of the gifts to the body as Paul states. Conspicuously absent from such a list of gifts is a "preacher." Understand if I am a good teacher, then you the student, become the proclaimer or the "preacher." That is how God intended it to work.

Now, the vast, vast majority of Christian Churches do not allocate their funds in the above manner as taught by the Holy Scriptures. Ask for our teachings on the Tithe and you can quickly see in detail of what I speak. This means that no matter how much you give to your church, if your spiritual authorities do not obey the Commandments of giving and appropriate your monies in areas not sanctioned by God in His Word then they have robbed from God not matter what Scriptures they read when they take up the offering. And you become an accomplice to stealing from God as you are accountable for His Word whether you know His Word or not. You will be judged by it.

Now as you can see, you can give to your Christian Church all day long and "feel" good about it, but you violate the Commands of God in doing so. Now understand you violate God Commandments of giving by so trusting your Church with your money.

Answer for yourself: If you have believed in Jesus' death for your sin, as if such "death" and "shed blood" does not and never did atone for violations of the Second Tablet of the Law....then you do realize you die in your sin and never know until you see God face to face?

Answer for yourself: You really have two problems. You didn't know well enough the Commandments about tithing to even questions what your Church is doing and you did not know well enough the Sacrificial System to know that some sins are never covered by it. Then do you realize that your erroneous understandings of such things as caused you to ignorantly continue to rob God and assure your rebuke when you meet up with Him since the work of Jesus you have been taught to "trust" in never applied in the first place?

Answer for yourself: Do you grasp the horrible consequences of such ignorance of the truths of God's Word and the sure fate that awaits you because Christianity has not studied hard enough to see the truth since blinded by anti-Semitism of the Church Fathers since the 2nd century?

Well if you tithe according to the manner of most Christian Churches today you not only rob from God but from those created in His image as well. If you continue to give to churches which don't obey the Laws and Commandments concerning tithing you are a partaker of their sins and there is no atonement for that sin for you when you die unless your repent now of such behavior! Sadly few Christians know what the Jewish Scriptures command regarding "how to tithe". Giving your tithe to the Christian Church where the elders fail to appropriate the correct percentages into the designated areas commanded by the Torah guarantees you that your rob God! While pastoring in Dallas as a Staff Pastor on staff of a mega church, the last two years I could no longer tithe to the church where I Pastored having learned the truth about the tithe. Contention was an understatement but when truth comes error must leave

Repentance toward that sin, a new obedience, a new conduct, and confession of that sin is our only methods of atonement and if not done, will ensure we enter into the World to Come with sins in those areas where atonement has not been proved.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

You have see that it a life, you life, that makes atonement for sin. Such repentance, confession, prayer, and new obedient conduct is the only reassurance that at-that-moment you are right with God. Being so, and having done so, then you have the right to be on the altar of God and you are ...in your heart. You need not bring an animal sacrifice for you and your life are already one! The animal, if you remember, was only a physical demonstration of the atonement you already have acquired by your actions. Such is the mercy of God to reveal to us, His people, how we can cleans ourselves.

The Gentile Christian Church, over the centuries, has stolen such truths from you and corrupted the truth and recorded it in their anti-Semitic document...the New Testament

There is no atonement for the sins of the Second Tablet of the Law unless you make it for yourself!

You now understand our lives, or our "souls", will be devoted to error instead of truth and our lives will not provide atonement unless we repent. But one must know the truth in order to repent or else he never knows he is wrong. That is why study is so important. This is only one small example.

After years of dedicated intense study I found that worshipping according to Christian teachings often is sin as the vast majority of Christianity today has changed the Sabbath as well as made obsolete the Holy Days and Festivals of God and there are commandments regarding Gentile believers keeping them. Remember your poor tithe goes to these observances as well.

You might not be a murderer with a gun, but our word "kill" is equated by the Rabbis to mean gossip, slander, blasphemy, as well as the failure to take care of the poor, widows, and the orphans. The Rabbis group this with murder which again is sin of the Second Tablet of the Law.

Answer four yourself: Can you see how involved this can get and how important for the Christian who loves God to know and make adjustments with his life while he can?

"FAITH OF JESUS" OR "FAITH IN JESUS"

In discussion of these aspects of the Sacrificial system, we must never forget that we are called to accept the "faith of Jesus" and not just have "faith in Jesus." In these articles I have presented the faith of Yeshua in light to his views on atonement. Yeshua believed the Tanakh (Law, Prophets, Writings). If we are to approximate holiness by living Christ-like that means we have to have a new understanding of how we are to live and we must become familiar with the Laws of God which regulate man's conduct in life. Only then will our lives, lived in conformity to the Laws of God, result in atonement. At your death you will appreciate the atonement your life procured through your obedience and repentance when shown your lives and conduct are in error. Such Laws, statutes, and ordinances reveal to us, in 248 positive commandments, what God is and does, and in 365 negative commandments what God is not and what He does not do. Only in incorporating them into our lives can be assured that what we do and believe is correct. Only then can our lives [souls] be an atonement. Failure to measure our conduct as compared with these commandments only assures we live by our own understanding, and that cannot be trusted for our hearts, according to Jeremiah are desperately wicked and we cannot know them for sure. Having this knowledge, the rest is up to you. Shalom.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA

The following is a summary of information taken from the Catholic Encyclopedia, Volume IV, along with commentary. Properly his name is Titus Flavius Clemens (c. 150-215 AD), but he is known in church history by the former designation to distinguish him from Clement of Rome. Date of birth unknown; died about the year 215. St. Clement was an early Greek theologian and head of the catechetical school of Alexandria. Athens is given as the starting-point of his journeyings, and was probably his birthplace. He became a convert to the Faith and travelled from place to place in search of higher instruction, attaching himself successively to different masters: to a Greek of Ionia, to another of Magna Graecia, to a third of Coele-Syria, after all of whom he addressed himself in turn to an Egyptian, an Assyrian, and a converted Palestinian Jew. At last he met Pantaenus in Alexandria, and in his teaching "found rest".

THE ALEXANDRIAN INFLUENCE UPON CLEMENT AND HIS RELIGIOUS BELIEF SYSTEM

St. Clement of Alexandria was a convert to the Christian faith, through the direction of St. Pantaenus. He became St. Pantaenus's disciple and assistant at the Christian School of Alexandria. This is where Clement would be influenced by the various theologies circling at Alexandria which would lay the groundwork for his later "interpretations" of Jesus. It was at Alexandria that Clement was first introduced to the Essene concept of the "Angel-Messiah" and it would be natural for him to apply such ideas to Jesus; especially in light that many considered him "the" Messiah. Under St. Pantaenus, he helped create the Coptic alphabet and translate Scripture into Coptic. Clement was a highly regarded philosopher, and he became St. Pantaenus's successor to the School of Alexandria (before 190 AD). As a philosopher, and head of the Catechitical School in Alexandria, St. Clement of Alexandria is considered the "father" of Christian philosophy. Following earlier examples, like St. Justin Martyr, St. Clement saw the strength of philosophy, and believed God had inspired the Greeks with philosophy, to become a preparatory tool for Greeks for the Gospel. Through philosophy, he brought many other converts into Christianity, as well as strengthened the faith of those who were already Christians in Alexandria. His theology and philosophy delved into new areas for Christians, and so became the example to his successors of what Christian philosophers should be like, including his famous student, Origen. The philosophers were critics or eclectics, and Plato was the most favored of the old masters. Neo-Platonism, the philosophy of the new pagan renaissance, had a prophet at Alexandria in the person of Ammonius Saccas. Philo, their foremost thinker, became a sort of Jewish Plato.

The place of Alexandria itself was well chosen, not only because of the Essene influence but the great library that was there. It was natural that Christian speculation should have a home at Alexandria. This great city was at the time a centre of culture as well as of trade. Not to be underestimated is Alexandria and the religious center in which it functioned because of its unique location. Being a center for trade in the world at that time it served as a melting pot for all religious ideas; even more so because of the great library there as well as the university and the Essene influence with their university as well. This great university had grown up under the long-continued patronage of the State. The intellectual temper of Alexandria was broad and tolerant, as became a city where so many races and their theologies mingled. Alexandria was also the center for the Essenes in Egypt. The influence of the Essenes and their theology (which was a mixture of sun-worship and Judaism) would have a lasting impact upon Clement. The Jews, the Hellenized Jews, along with the Essenes who were there in very large numbers breathed its liberal atmosphere, and had assimilated secular culture along with its liberal religious beliefs of the day. They there formed the most enlightened colony of the Dispersion. Having lost the use of Hebrew, they found it necessary to translate the Scriptures into the more familiar Greek. Not being able to read Hebrew was a detriment of unparalleled portion as it made necessary the use of the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures. This Septuagint became the Bible for the Jews in Alexandria as well as the Greek converts to the Christian faith. The Greek-Jewish Essenes who translated the Scriptures into Greek from Hebrew in the second century B.C.E. in Alexandria often inserted their own philosophies into the translation to promote their own particular theologies. Christian Ginsburg details for us on page 32 of his monumental work The Essenes, Their History and Doctrines, that when these Greek-Jews of Alexandria were employed to translate the Prophets and the Psalms into Greek, that they availed themselves of the opportunity to introduce their tenants and rites into their version of the translation. This version is called the Septuagint and is a grossly mistranslated version of the Jewish Scriptures. Millions of Christians are not aware of this and many of the Christian scholars stop short to examine the evidence for themselves; simply they just don't know it happened. Not being able to read Hebrew for themselves, they accept the Greek translation bequeathed to them as if it came for God. Your evaluation of the facts concerning this translation will show you otherwise. C.D.F. Moule, in The Birth Of The New Testament, records for us on page 59 that the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures is "a wildly inaccurate translation." Likewise, Lucetta Mowry, in The Dead Sea Scrolls and the Early Church, again tells us on page 11-12: "...the Qumran authors....altered the stories of the Pentateuch by pious and frequently fanciful embellishments. A more serious purpose of alteration was the attempt to use the stories as authoritative expression of the tenants of the Sect....rewriting familiar events of Israel's history and by inserting legendary details to make the Law of Moses correspond with Qumran thought. These documents, together with the commentaries, testify to the Sect's interest in supplementing biblical authority by adapting canonical works to its own purpose. The community desired in particular to prove that its members were the true heirs of Israel's tradition and that the promise of redemption revealed by God to the patriarchs and to Moses now belonged to their brotherhood." This is just the tip of the iceberg and you should understand that men like Clement, who grew up and was schooled in Alexandria, not only heard this Essene theology and their teachings on the Angel-Messiah, but their documents, even the Greek translation of the Jewish Bible had such tenants of the group included within it. This explains the natural tendency for these early Greek Fathers to accept and promote a theology that was in opposition to what the conservative Jews of Palestine believed as preserved in their Jewish Scriptures, which now read quite differently from the Greek translation of the Essenes in Alexandria.

Alexandria was, in addition, one of the chief seats of that peculiar mixed pagan and Christian speculation known as Gnosticism. Basilides and Valentinus taught there. It is no matter of surprise, therefore, to find some of the Christians affected in turn by the scientific spirit. At an uncertain date, in the latter half of the second century, "a school of oral instruction" was founded. Lectures were given to which pagan hearers were admitted, and advanced teaching to Christians separately. It was an official institution of the Church. Pantaenus is the earliest teacher whose name has been preserved. As stated earlier, Clement first assisted and then succeeded Pantaenus in the direction of the school, about A.D. 190. He was already known as a Christian writer before the days of Pope Victor (188-199). These facts are very important as they explain how "pagan ideas" and parts of various "pagan religious belief systems" would be mixed into the overall scheme of Clement's theology. These ideas are read today in his writings as if they are God sent. Of most importance is the influence of Alexandria, and its university which served as a cauldron for the tolerant acquisition of various theologies. You need to be aware that this fact is of major importance in his ideas concerning the Angel-Messiah and his legacy of writings left to us where Jesus is read as if a god. It was at Alexandria where this concept of the Angel-Messiah thrived. Coupled with that fact that many scholars regard Clement as the founder of the Alexandrian school of theology, which emphasized the divine nature of Christ, one quickly can see how the "human Messiah" of Judaism is fused with the "cosmic divine godman from Essene solar myths" which were held strongly by the Phytagorean-Buddhist Greek Jews of Alexandria. Needles to say Clement, being a pagan before his conversion, was already familiar with such concepts and it is one short step to connecting such ideas with a "crucified Rabbi named Yeshua." It was Alexandrian theologians such as Saint Cyril and Saint Athanasius who took the lead in opposing Adoptionism and Nestorianism. Understand that Adoptionism was the earliest belief concerning Jesus as held by the Jews who knew him and followed him. This "truth," as earlier held by the Ebionites for that matter, would later be lost under the influence of the preaching of such men like St. Clement, St. Cyril, and St. Athanasius. Today Gentile Christianity is steeped in idolatry because of it.

St. Clement's understanding of Scripture was that it was filled with many layers of knowledge, and saw the need for an allegorical or spiritual level of understanding, above and beyond its literal level. This is just the opposite of how the Rabbis taught Scripture was to be interpreted! Clement is recorded in his writings his belief that the Holy Spirit, in directing the creation of Scripture, inspired the deeper meanings, to further inspire Christians to continue to search and learn from its many depths. He believed Scripture was also written in this manner, so as to confound those who would otherwise try to abuse it, because it would therefore require the unity of the faith to protect and guard true understanding of Scripture. "Wherefore the holy mysteries of the prophecies are veiled in the parables-- preserved for chosen men, selected to knowledge in consequence of their faith..." (St. Clement of Alexandria, Stromata 6:15).

Thus you can understand why scholars have found it no easy task to sum up the chief points of Clement's teaching. His writings lack technical precision and make no pretense to orderly exposition. As if his allegorical method of interpretation over the literal was not enough, he admitted the authority of the Church's tradition. He would be, first of all, a Christian, accepting "the ecclesiastical rule", but he would also strive to remain a philosopher, and bring his reason to bear in matters of religion. "Few are they", he said, "who have taken the spoils of the Egyptians, and made of them the furniture of the Tabernacle." You should ask yourself if such a methodology was wise! This quote alone betrays the Egyptian-Christian synthesis of ideas to be found in his interpretation of the Christian faith. He set himself, therefore, with philosophy as an instrument, to transform faith into science, and revelation into theology. In closing, he misused the text by his faulty exegesis. Unfortunately, he interpreted the Scripture after the manner of Philo. He was ready to find allegory everywhere. The facts of the Old Testament became mere symbols to him. Such hermeneutics and method of interpretation did great damage to the "truth" let alone the proper interpretation of the Scriptural texts. This does not even take into account the "fraudulent Greek text" which was in used in Alexandria in the days of Clement.

The bottom line is that the Alexandrian influence upon Clement, coupled with a "wildly inaccurate Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures, moved the blossoming Christian Church further away from the truths of the earliest followers of Jesus.

ST. ATHANASIUS

Athanasius, often called Athanasius, Saint (circa 293-373), was a Christian theologian and bishop as well as a Doctor of the Church, who championed the cause of Christian theology (orthodoxy) in the 4th-century struggle against Arianism. Born in Alexandria, Egypt, Athanasius received a classical education before entering the famous theological school of his native city. He was ordained a deacon as a young man and served as secretary to the bishop of Alexandria. It was then that he began to take a prominent position in the great theological struggle that culminated in the Council of Nicaea in 325. At Nicaea, Athanasius opposed Arius, the Alexandrian priest who advanced the doctrine known as Arianism; his life is intimately connected with the progress of the Arian controversy, and he was by far the most formidable antagonist encountered by that heresy. Athanasius formulated the homoousian doctrine, according to which the Son of God is of the same essence, or substance, as the Father; Arius, on the other hand, maintained that the Son was of a different substance from that of the Father and was merely a creature, much more perfect that any other creature, who was used by God in subsequent works of creation. Athanasius became bishop of Alexandria around 328 A.D. During the Arian controversy, politics mingled with theology, and each side labored to win the favor of the Roman emperor Constantine the Great. The Arian Party was both influential and very active at the imperial court. Athanasius was exiled five times; more than one-third of his episcopate was spent away from his see. His fifth and final exile lasted only four months and ended in 364. He spent the rest of his life in quiet labor at his post in Alexandria.

What I wish to bring to your attention is that he, like many other, was educated at Alexandria where he came in contact with many theological ideas which conflicted with the Jewish belief; especially concerning the Messiah which was already transformed from the traditional Jewish understanding by the Astro-theology of the Essenes in Alexandria.

JESUS CHRIST AS THE CREATOR....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Christian dogma teaches that it was not "God the Father, but "God the Son" who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is.

The writer of the fourth Gospel says:

"All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made" (John. 1:8).

Again:

"He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10).

Again we can read many passages indicating the same...that creation was the work of the "Son of God and not God the Father":

Heb 1:2 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; (KJV)

Eph 3:9 9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: (KJV)

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Samuel Johnson, D. O. Allen (Allen's India, pp. 137 & 380), and Thomas Maurice (Indian Antiquities, vol. ii. p. 288), tell us that, according to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna, the Son, and the second person in the ever-blessed Trinity, "who is the origin and the end of all the worlds; all this universe came into being through him, the eternal maker" (Oriental Religions, p. 502).

In the holy book of the Hindoos, called the Bhagvat Geeta, may be found the following words of Chrishna, address to his "beloved disciple" Ar-jouran:

"I am the Lord of all created things" (Lecture iv. p. 51). "Mankind was created by me of four kinds, distinct in their principles, and in their duties; know me then to be the Creator of mankind, uncreated, and without decay" (Geeta, p. 52).

In Lecture VII, entitled: "Of the Principles of Nature, and the Vital Spirit," he also says:

"I am the creation and the dissolution of the whole universe. There is not anything greater than I, and all things hang on me."

Again in Lecture LX., entitled, "Of the Chief of Secrets and Prince of Science," Chrishna says:

"The whole world was spread abroad by me in my invisible form. All things are dependent on me." "I am the Father and the Other of this world, the Grandsire and the Preserver. I am the Holy One worthy to be known; the mystic figure O.M. (the Hindoo ineffable name and the mystic emblem of deity which is never uttered aloud, but only mentally by the devout....it signifies Brahma, Vishnou, and Siva, the Hindoo Trinity)..I am the journey of the good: the Comforter; the Creator; the Witness; the Resting-place; the Asylum and the Friend" (Geeta, p. 80).

In Lecture X., entitled, "Of the diversity of the Divine Nature," he says:

"I am the Creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Those who are endured with spiritual wisdom, believe this and worship me; their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice amongst themselves and delight in speaking of my name, and teaching one another my doctrine" (Geeta, p. 84).

Innumerable texts, similar to these, might be produced from the Hindoo Scriptures, but these are sufficient to show, in the words of Samuel Johnson quoted above, that, "According to the religion of the Hindoos, it is Chrishna who is the origin and the end of all the worlds;" and that "all this universe came into being through him, the Eternal Maker."

The Chinese believed in One Supreme God, to whose honor they burnt incense, but of whom they had no image. This "God the Father" was NOT the Creator, according to their theology or mythology; but they had another god, of whom they had statues or idols, called Natigai, who was the god of all terrestrial things; in fact, God, the Creator of this world which was inferior or subordinate to the Supreme Being from whom they petition for fine weather, or whatever else they want. He was their mediator.

According to ancient Persian mythology, there is one supreme essence, invisible and incomprehensible, named "Zeruane Akerene," which signifies "unlimited time," or "the eternal." From him emanated Ormuzd, the "King of Light," the "First-born of the Eternal One," etc. Now, this "First-born of the Eternal One" is he by whom all things were made, all things came into being through him; he is the Creator.

A large portion of the Zend-Avesta, the Persian Sacred Book or Bible, is filled with prayers to Ormuzd, God's First-Born. Let us look at just a couple of examples:

"I address my prayer to Ormuzd, Creator of all things; who always has been, who is, and who will be forever; ..."

"O Creator, I obey thy laws..."

The writer of the Gospel of John copies the same invocation as you can see in the following where he says that Jesus taught that prayers are to be offered in his name as was the pattern of Sun-worship above.

John 14:13 13 And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. (KJV)

YET THIS IS A DIRECT CONTRADICTION OF THE TEACHNGS OF JESUS:

Luke 11:1-2 1 And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples. 2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth. (KJV)

According to the religion of the ancient Assyrians, it was Marduk, the Logos, the Word, "the eldest son of Hea," "the Merciful One," "the Life-giver," etc., who created the heavens, the earth, and all that therein is (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 404).

Adonis, the Lord and Savior, was believed to be the Creator of men, and god of the resurrection of the dead (Dunlap, Mysteries of Adoni, p. 156).

Prometheus, the Crucified Savior, is the divine forethought, existing before the souls of men, and the creator Hominium (Ibid., p. 156).

The writer of "The Gospel according to St. John," has made Christ Jesus co-eternal with God, as well as Creator, in these words:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God". "The same was in the beginning with God" (John 1:1-2).

Again, in praying to his Father, he makes Jesus say:

"And now, O father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was" (John 14:5).

Paul is made to say:

Col 1:15-17 15 Who is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: 16 For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: 17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist. (KJV)

Again:

"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday , to-day, and forever" (Heb. 13:8).

St. John the Divine, in his "Revelation," has made Christ Jesus say:

"I am the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end"..."which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty" (Rev. 1:8, 22, 13)...."the first and the last" (Rev. 1:17, Rev. 12:13).

Hondoo Scripture also makes Chrishna "the first and the last," "the beginning and the end." We read in theGeeta, where Chrishna is reported to have said:

"I myself never was not" (Geeta, p. 35). "Learn that he by whom all things were formed " (meaning himself) "is incorruptible" (Geeta, p. 36). "I am eternity and non-eternity" (Lecture IX, p 89). "I am before all things, and the mighty ruler of the universe" (Lecture X. p. 83). " I am the beginning, the middle, and the end of all things" (Lecture X, p. 85).

Ar-jouan, his disciple, address him thus:

"Thou are the Supreme Being, incorruptible, worthy to be known; thou are prime supporter of the universal orb; thou art the never-failing and eternal guardian of religion; thou art from all beginning, and I esteem thee" (Lecture IX. p. 91). "Thou art "the Divine Being, before all other gods" (Lecture X. p. 84).

In another Holy Book of the Hindoos, called Vishnu Purana, we also read that Vishnu, in the form of Chrishna, "who descended into the womb of the (virgin) Devaki, and was born as her son" was "without beginning, middle, or end" (Vishnu Purana, p. 440).

Buddha is also Alpha and Omgea, without beginning or end, "The Lord," "the Possessor of All," "He who is Omnipotent and Everlastingly to be Contemplated," "the Supreme Being, the Eternal One."

Lao-Kiun, the Chinese virgin-born God, who came upon earth about six hundred years before Jesus, was without beginning. It was said that he had existed from all eternity (Prog. of Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 200).

According to the Zend Avesta, Ormuzd, the first-born of the Eternal One, is he "who is, always has been, and who will be forever" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. ii. p. 207).

Zeus was Alpha and Omega. an Orphic lines runs thus:

"Zeus is the beginning, Zeus the middle, out of Zeus all things have been made" (Muller, Chips, vol. ii. p. 15).

Bacchus, was without beginning or end. An inscriptions on an ancient medal, referring to him, reads thus:

"It is I who leads you; it is I who protects you, and who saves you. I am Alpha and Omega."

Beneath this inscription is a serpent with his tail in his mouth, thus forming a circle, which was an emblem of eternity among the ancients.

Without enumerating them, we can from the evidence say that the majority of the virgin-born gods were like Christ Jesus...without beginning or end..and that many of them were considered Creators of all things. This has led M. Dridon to remark (Hist. de. Dieu) that in early works of art, Christ Jesus is made to take the place of the Father in creation and in similar labors, just as in heathen religions an inferior deity does the work under a superior one.

Now this Redeemer and Savior was, as you have seen, the Sun, and Prof. Max Muller tells us that in the Vedic mythology, the Sun is not the being Deva only, "who performs his daily task in the sky, but he is supposed to perform much greater work. He is looked upon, in fact, as the Ruler, as the Establisher, and the Creator of the World " (Muller, Origin of Religions, p. 264).

Having been invoked as the "Life-bringer," the Sun is also called, in the Rig Veda, "the Breath of Life of all that move and rest;" and lastly he becomes "The Maker of all things," by whom all the worlds have been brought together (Muller, Origins of Religions, p. 268).

There is a prayer in the Vedas, called "Gayatree," which consists of three measured lines, and is considered the holiest and most efficacious of all their religious forms. Sir William Jones translated it thus:

"Let us adore the supremacy of that spiritual Sun, the godhead, who illuminates all, who re-creates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return; whom we invoke to direct our undertakings aright in our progress toward his holy seat."

With Seneca (a Roman philosopher, born at Cordova, Spain, 61 B.C.) then we can say:

"You may call the Creator of all things by different names (Bacchus, Hercules, Mercury, etc.), but they are only different names of the same divine being, the Sun."

Now we find the exact same things said about Jesus in the New Testament as its writers attribute "creation" to the Son of the Sun; to Jesus:

Again, we have the "pattern" of Sun-worship reapplied to the life of a Jewish Rabbi and hoped for Messiah by the Gentile Church....Judaism, the faith of Jesus, teaches monothesiem and that all things were created by God the Father only:

- Gen 1:1 1 In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. (KJV)
- Gen 1:21 21 And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.
- Gen 1:27 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. (KJV)
- Gen. 2:3 3 And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made. (KJV)
- Gen 2:4 4 These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the LORD God made the earth and the heavens, (KJV)
- Gen 5:1 1 This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 5:2 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created. (KJV)
- Gen 6:7 7 And the LORD said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them. (KJV)
- Deut 4:32 32 For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? (KJV)

As if you didn't notice God existed long before the "sun" which He created later:

- Gen 1:14-19 14 And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years: 15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so. 16 And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. 17 And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, 18 And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good. 19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day. (KJV)

But primitive man, knowing God through what he could only see, fashioned myths and beliefs involving the cosmos to explain to himself the God he could not see, and we have this legacy in the Roman New Testament in which we are lead to believe as did the ancients that "Sun became the Son."

jesus christ as the creator...truth..or sun myth retold?

JESUS CHRIST'S DESCENT INTO HELL ...TRUTH...OR A SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

The doctrine of Christ Jesus' descent into hell is emphatically part of the Christian belief, although not alluded to by Christian divines excepting when unavoidable. In the first place, it is taught in the Creed of the Christian Church.

The Nicene Creed was created at the Synod at Nicea in 325 A.D. and set forth this Creed: We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, maker of all things visible and invisible; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the only-begotten of his Father, of the substance of the Father, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father. By whom all things were made, both which be in heaven and in earth. Who for us men and for our salvation came down [from heaven] and was incarnate and was made man. He suffered and the third day he rose again, and ascended into heaven. And he shall come again to judge both the quick and the dead. And [we believe] in the Holy Ghost. And whosoever shall say that there was a time when the Son of God was not, or that before he was begotten he was not, or that he was made of things that were not, or that he is of a different substance or essence [from the Father] or that he is a creature, or subject to change or conversion--all that so say, the Catholic and Apostolic Church anathematizes them (From The Seven Ecumenical Councils, ed. H. Percival, in the Library of Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers, 2nd series (New York: Charles Scribners, 1990), Vol XIV, 3).

Notice if you will the "third day" portion; this is a clear reference to the New Testament doctrine of Jesus' descent into hell prior to the resurrection.

The gospels pretend to be matter of fact stories of some events in the life of the Christian God. The various "Creeds" reflect such a story. They tell what people saw or heard. They claim they saw Jesus rise to heaven, but it is difficult to know how they could have known he descended to hell, unless they simply had the risen Jesus confessing it in one of his mysterious post mortem appearances. Anyway, it was not expressly written into the gospels. Nevertheless, it became and remains a firm belief among Christians that Jesus did descend to Hell. A Christian writer explains that the early Christians were united on the doctrine of Christ's underground mission. It was too well settled to admit of dispute

The Apostles' Creed teaches the doctrine explicitly and it was once thought of as equal in authority to the gospels, being supposedly written by the apostles themselves.

The New Testament attests to this as well: Peter (1 Peter 3:18) is thought to be referring to the descent into Hell when he writes: being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. Prison must mean Hell.

In Acts 2:31 we find that his soul was not left in hell. The writer plainly considered Jesus's soul had been there. The most positive declaration that Christ did descend into hell could not make it more certainly a scriptural Christian doctrine.

WHERE DID SUCH A BELIEF ARISE?

Answer for yourself: Where then did such a belief arise?

You need to know that the most important event in the lives of Pagan Saviours, after their crucifixion, is that of their descent into the infernal regions. In the Hindu bible, written more than three thousand years ago, the Saviour Krishna:

…went down to hell to preach to the inmates of that dark and dreary prison, with the view of reforming them, and getting them back to heaven, and was willing himself to suffer to abridge the period of their torment.

Elsewhere we find that Krishna even descended into hell to teach souls in bondage. We have references to prison and to bondage. Hell is a prison and souls are in bondage. Souls are therefore in prison just as Peter says. The writers of the Gospel of Luke and the first epistle of Peter seem greatly indebted to the Hindu bible in these passages.

Another God who descended into hell was Quexalcoatl of Mexico (300 BC). The story will be found in the Codex Borgianus, wherein is related the account of his death, and burial after crucifixion, his descent into hell, and subsequent resurrection. After Adonis descended into hell, he rose again to life and immortality. Prometheus of Caucasus (600 BC) also suffered and descended into hell, rising again from the dead, and ascending to heaven. Horus first reigned a thousand years, then died, and was buried for three days, at the end of which time he triumphed over Typhon, the evil principle, and rose again to life evermore. And Osiris of Egypt also descended into hell and after a period of three days rose again. Homer and Virgil speak of Hercules, Ulysses and AEneas descending into Hades. The Gods became incarnate, and descended into hell to teach humility and set an example of suffering. The story of their descent into hell was doubtless invented to occupy them during their three days in the tomb.

THE EARLY CHURCH FATHERS TEACH THE SAME DOCTRINE ABOUT THE CHRIST

The doctrine was also taught by the Fathers of the Church. St. Chrysostom (born 347 A.D.) asks:

"Who but an infidel would deny that Christ was in hell?" (quoted by Bonwick; Egyptian Belief, p. 46).

And St. Clement of Alexandria, who flourished at the beginning of the third century, is equally clear and emphatic as to Jesus' descent into hell. He says:

"The Lord preached the gospel to those in Hades, as well as to all in earth, In order that all might believe and be saved, wherever they were. If, then, the Lord descended to Hades for no other end but to preach the gospel, as He did descend, it was either to preach the gospel to all, or to the Hebrews only. It accordingly to all, then all who believe shall be saved, although they may be of the Gentiles, on making their profession there"

Origen, who flourished during the latter part of the second, and beginning of the third centuries, also emphatically declares that Christ Jesus descended into hell (Origen, Contra Celsus, bk.ii. c. 48).

Ancient Christian works of art represent his descent into hell (Jameson, Hist. Of Our Lord in Art, vol. ii. pp. 364-365).

The apocryphal gospels teach the doctrine of Christ Jesus' descent into hell, the object of which was to preach to those in bondage there, and to liberate the Saints who had died before his advent on earth.

On account of the sin committed by Adam in the Garden of Eden, all mankind were doomed, all had gone to hell excepting those who had been translated to heaven—even those persons who were "after God's own heart," and who had belonged to his "chosen people." The coming of Christ Jesus into the world, however, made a change in the affairs of man. The saints were then liberated from their prison, and all those who believe in the efficacy of his name, shall escape hereafter the tortures of hell. This is the doctrine to be found in the apocryphal gospels, and was taught by the Fathers of the Church (Jameson, Hist. Of Our Lord in Art, vol. ii. pp. 250-251).

THE GOSPEL OF NICODEMUS

In the Gospel of Nicodemus (apoc.) is to be found the whole story of Christ Jesus' descent into hell, and of his liberating the saints. It goes like this:

Satan, and the Prince of Hell, having heard that Jesus of Nazareth was almost to descend to their domain, began to talk the matter over, as to what they should do, etc. While thus engaged, on a sudden, there was a voice as of thunder and the rushing of winds, saying: " Lift up your gates, O ye Princes, and be ye lifted up, O ye everlasting gates, and the King of Glory shall come in."

When the Prince of Hell heard this, he said to his impious officers: "Shut the brass gates . . . and make them fast with iron bare, and fight courageously."

The saint having heard what had been said on both sides, immediately spoke with aloud voice, saying: "Open thy gates, that the King of Glory may come in." The divine prophets, David and Isaiah, were particularly conspicuous in this protect against the intentions of the Prince of Hell.

Again the voice of Jesus was heard saying: " Lift up your gates, O Prince; and be ye lifted up, ye gates of hell, and the King of Glory will enter in." The Prince of Hell then cried out: " Who is the King of Glory" upon which the prophet David commenced to reply to him, but while he was speaking, the mighty Lord Jesus appeared in the form of a man, and broke asunder the fetters which before could not be broken, and crying aloud, said: " Come to me, all ye saints, who were created in my image, who were condemned by the tree of the forbidden fruit . . . live now by the word of my cross."

Then presently all the saints were joined together, hand in hand, and the Lord Jesus laid hold on Adam's hand, and ascended from hell, and all the saints of God followed him (Nicodemus; Apoc. Ch. xvi and xix).

When the saints arrived in paradise, two " very ancient men " met them, and were asked by the saints: " Who are ye, who have not been with us in hell, and have had your bodies placed in paradise?" One of these " very ancient men" answered and said: " I am Enoch, who was translated by the word of God, and this man who is with me is Elijah the Tishbite, who was translated in a fiery chariot" (Nicodemus; Apoc. Ch. xx).

THE NEW TESTAMENT'S WITNESS

The doctrine of the descent into hell may be found alluded to in the canonical books; thus, for instance, in I Peter:

"It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. For Christ also bath suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: by which he also went and preached unto the spirits in prison" (I Peter 3:17-19).

Again, in "Acts," where the writer is speaking of David as prophet, he says:

"He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption" (Acts 2:31).

The reason why Christ Jesus has been made to descend into hell, is because it is a part of the universal mythos, even the three days' duration. The Saviors of mankind had all done so, he must therefore do likewise. The Gentile redactors and writers of the New Testament only "patterned" the life of Jesus after their own pagan beliefs. Events in the life of the pagan Sun-gods and Saviors were transposed into the life of Christ.

Crishna, the Hindu Savior, descended into hell, for the purpose of raising the dead (the doomed), before he retired to his heavenly seat (Asiatic Researches, vol. i. p. 237; Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 168).

Zoroaster, of the Persians, descended into hell (Monumental Christianity, p. 286).

Osiris, the Egyptian Savior, descended into hell (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 256; Bonwick Egyptian Belief, pp. 125).

Horus, the virgin-born Savior, descended into hell.

Adonis, the virgin-born Savior, descended into hell (Bell, Pantheon, vol. i. p. 12).

Bacchus, the virgin-born Savior, descended into hell (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 322; Dupuis, Origin of Religious belief, p. 257; Dunlap, Mysteries Adoni, p. 33).

Hercules, the virgin-born Savior descended into hell (Taylor, Mysteries, p. 40; Mysteries of Adoni, pp. 94-96).

Mercury, the Word and Messenger of God, descended into hell (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii. p. 72).

Baldur, the Scandinavian god, being killed ,descended into hell (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 169).

Quetzalcoatle, the Mexican crucified Savior, descended into hell (Mexican Antiquities, vol. i. vi. P. 166).

All these gods, and many others that might be mentioned remained in hell for the space of three days and three nights. "They descended into hell, and on the third day rose again."

SO WHY THE THREE DAY TIME PERIOD THAT THEY HAD TO REMAIN IN HELL?

One only need look at the stars to know the story. Also, this explains why nation after nation had the same story of the Sun-gods. They all studied the stars.

Thus the story of the three days' entombment has an astronomical explanation...the winter soltice. The sun lies still and apparently motionless, neither ascending nor descending, for nearly three days at the midwinter solstice. It was thought by primitive man that the sun was in a tomb for three days having descended to Hell, the lowest point of its annual cycle. In tracking the course of the sun man could detect the time when the sun shown least every year. For 3 days when the sun is the lowest in the horizon it appears to be motionless for 3 days then beings it northward ascent again. These 3 "shrortest" days of the year provided the least amount of light of the whole year. The sun was believed to have died. The prayer was that it would rise again and the prayer always worked, the sun was born-again each year at midwinter (raised from the dead) as it began it northward track in the sky. However the battle of light with darkness (temptation) continued until the vernal equinox and only when the days became longer than the nights were the ancient astrologer priests happy to celebrate the sun's rebirth. So, the birth of god was at the midwinter solstice but he was fully born again at the vernal equinox (spring). Hence, spring was chosen to represent this "three days' descent of the gods into hell and death because very shortly the days would get longer and spring would arrive with its new life and vegetation after the "death" of winter.The Persians had an astronomical figure representing the descent of a god into hell and returning at the time that Orsus, the goddess of spring, had conquered the god of winter. The author of Revelation describes the Lamb of God (Rev 12) as conquering the dragon, which is the Scorpion or Dragon of the first month of winter, October, being conquered by the Lamb of March or spring.

NOW FOR SOME TOUGH QUESTIONS

If you are a "thinking believer" then you can easily see that the above story concerning Jesus is pure fiction based upon the primitive fears and suspicions of mankind. Hopefully today we know better. But to the point.

We possess a document that is touted to be "inspired, infallible, and inerrant;" the New Testament. As you can see we have a sever problem here both in I Peter and Acts let alone the doctrines emanating from such a book as expressed in the "Creed" of the Church.

Answer for yourself: If I Peter can be shown to be in error, what other "errors" are contained within it let alone other books in the New Testament?

Answer for yourself: If the writer of I Peter got it wrong about the descent into hell, what about other doctrines within the same verse: atonement, redemption, etc? Could he be wrong about these as well?

Answer for yourself: What about the book of Acts as well as it represents the Pauline mission with its doctrines as well?

WHAT DOES A JEWISH JESUS WHO PREACHED REPENTANCE AND OBEDIENCE TO THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD GOT TO DO WITH SUN-MYTHS AND PAGAN SAVIORS?

DID GOD SEND HIS MESSIAH INTO THE WORLD IN PAGAN "DRAG?"

THE GOSPEL OF THE HEBREWS.....WAS NOT THE GOSPEL OF MATTHEW THAT WE NOW HAVE

The Gospel Of The Hebrews c. 70-150 C.E.

It is both odd and unfortunate that no copies of any of the so-called "Judeo-Christian" gospels have survived antiquity, though the texts, kept by early Christians who maintained deep-seated Jewish beliefs, were often quoted by Christian writers throughout the first five centuries. These short citations are our only windows through which we might study the traditions of the communities that used them. The Gospel of the Hebrews is the most often quoted of the Judeo-Christian gospels, though it must be noted that at least two other texts (Ebionites and Nazoreans) were referred to by the same title, and we can only make educated guesses as to which gospel each fragment was derived from. At least eight early writers had either referenced or cited from Hebrews, each offering their own interpretations and assessment of validity. From these we know the date of composition is no later than mid-second century, possibly much earlier. It was said to have been written in Hebrew, though much of its theology parallels Egyptian tradition. The gospel shows no direct dependence upon the canonical gospels, though it shares a verse with the Gospel of Thomas (GosThom 2). Among the most unique traditions is the depiction of Mary, like the Johannine logos, as divine—in fact, that she was the incarnation of Michael, who was the personification of the Holy Spirit. Also, Jesus first appears to his brother James following the resurrection. Since James the Just was traditionally held to have founded the church at Jerusalem, it is no surprise that the Hebrew gospel elevates his authority by making him the first to witness the risen Christ.

The Gospel of the Hebrews is a syncretistic, Jewish-Christian document which presents traditions of Jesus' preexistence and coming into the world, his baptism and temptation, some of his sayings, and the report of a resurrection appearance to his brother, James the Just. This is the Jewish-Christian gospel most frequently mentioned by name in the early church; it is also the only one whose original title has been transmitted from antiquity. The title seems to indicate the identity of the group who used this gospel, and may suggest that this was the gospel of predominately Greek-speaking Jewish Christians. The Gospel of the Hebrews has no connection with other Jewish-Christian gospels, displaying no kinship with the Gospel of Matthew. It is instructive to note that most of the extant fragments come from quotations in the writings of persons who lived in Alexandria, Egypt. The Gospel of the Hebrews may have been known to Papias (a church writer who died cat A.D. 130, whose five-volume "Exegesis of the Sayings of the Lord" is now lost, preserved only in a few quotations in the writings of Eusebius). Hegesippus (late in the second century) and Eusebius (early in the fourth century) attest to the existence of this gospel, but do not quote from it. Fragments are preserved in the writings of Clement of Alexandria (late in the second century), Origen (early in the third century), and Cyril (Bishop of Jerusalem, cat 350 C.E.). Jerome (ca. 400 C.E.) also preserves several fragments, all of which he probably reproduced from the writings of Origen. The extent of this gospel is no longer known. According to the list of "canonical" and "apocryphal" books drawn up by Nicephorus (Patriarch of Constantinople, 806-818 C.E.), the Gospel of the Hebrews contained 2200 lines, only 300 fewer than Matthew! The report of a resurrection appearance of Jesus to his brother, James, indicates the position of authority assigned to James in the Gospel of the Hebrews. It is well known that James was the leading figure of the conservative Jewish church in Jerusalem. Reports of his "con-version" by a vision of the risen Lord are well documented in the church

(compare 1 Cor. 15:7), and are based on an early, probably sound tradition. According to the report in the Gospel of the Hebrews, James was the very first witness of the resurrection, and thus its principal guarantor. He is so distinguished that he is even said to have taken part in the Last Supper of Jesus. The esteem in which James is held in this gospel may be used to locate the authority and secure the identity of the tradition of those communities which appealed to him as their leader. The accounts of Jesus' preexistence, coming, baptism, and temptation are abbreviated mythological narratives. They presuppose a myth of the descent of divine Wisdom, embodying herself definitively in a representative of the human race for the revelation and redemption of humankind. Such a myth was widespread in the Greco-Roman world and underlies many of the earliest Christological formulations of believers in Jesus, as evidenced, for example, in Pauline (Phil. 2:6-11), synoptic (Matt. 11:25-30; Luke 7:18-35;11:49-51), and Johannine traditions John 1:1-18), as well as in those of the Gospel of Thomas. More-over, the second saying of the Gospel of Thomas is also cited as part of the Gospel of the Hebrews, suggesting that this was a free-floating saying at home in Egypt as well as in Syria. The wisdom saying may permit the suggestion that the majority of the sayings in the Gospel of the Hebrews had the same character as those of the synoptic gospels. The extant fragments of the Gospel of the Hebrews display no dependence upon the writings of the New Testament. Unfortunately, it cannot be determined whether other portions of the text that are no longer preserved are in any way contingent upon these or any other writings which we now possess. The earliest possible date of the composition of the Gospel of the Hebrews would be in the middle of the first century, when Jesus traditions were first being produced and collected as part of the wisdom tradition. The latest possible date would be in the middle of the second century, shortly before the first reference to this gospel by Hegesippus and the quotations of it by Clement and Origen. Based on the parallels in the morphology of the tradition, an earlier date of composition is more likely than a later one. Internal evidence and external attestations indicate that Egypt was its place of origin. In the gospel citations of this gospel, care should be taken to distinguish between the actual quotations of the text of the Gospel of the Hebrews and the interpretive comments of the church writers who recorded the citations.

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION....TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

Much of the life Jesus Christ, as recorded in the New Testament, are nothing more than allegorical representations of the Sun God. Long before Jesus the Ancients formulated their Mythology (Religion), after the Image of Astronomical Phenomena. They saw this as the best way to connect with the Creator God, that is by patterning their religious rituals in accordance with the most visible and observable aspect of God's creation, the Cosmos. Many of the stories and accounts in the life of Jesus in the New Testament are actually various dramas (metaphorical representations) of Solar Mythology. We are presently focusing on the Solar-Lunar aspects of ancient mythology and modern religion. We shall at this point commence a dissection of the New Testament gospels. As done previously, I wish to evaluate the most salient and popular episodes within these scriptures and show their parallel to the lives of the other mythical saviors that we have already discussed. And we will illustrate that much within the Gospels are analogous to Solar Mythology. Let me say this is done only to separate the lies and falsehoods from the truth about Jesus so those who follow him and his example can do so in truth.

First, we have the miraculous conception of a virgin.

- Mat 1:18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.
- Mat 1:19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.
- Mat 1:20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.
- Mat 1:21 And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.
- Mat 1:22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,
- Mat 1:23 Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

THE ASTRONOMICAL ANALOGY

The astronomical explanation of the first three points is as follows, The Miraculous Conception, as I explained in a previous article, refers to the Conjugation (Conception) that annually takes place at the vernal equinox. God, the Father, the Sun personified, at this time (the vernal equinox) is joined (the crossing of the celestial equator and the ecliptic of the sun) to commence the Gestation of the Son (Sun) of God (Father Sun), that will be born 280 days later on December 25th. There were many such "birth" of Sons of Sungods on this day; Jesus is just one in a long line of them!

The ancients felt that an offspring of a god, a son of god, should have a purer maternal origin than mortals, and this was evidence of his supernatural or divine origin. A man, even if he were thought of as a god, had to be born of a woman, and this could not be concealed, but paternal parentage is never so obvious, being known only to the mother, if anyone.

The purity of his maternal parentage required these Gentile Saviors to be born of a pure woman—a maiden. Hence, the Gentile saviours often were born of virgins and this "concept" continued even for the Gentile redactors of the New Testament. Besides normal conception ordinary birth was also too ignominious for a god. It had to be spotless, or immaculate. Jesus Christ in an apocryphal gospel, like Chrishna was born through his mother's side, rather than the impure route. Though not in the canonical works, some of the Christian fathers endorsed this story. I have even read Catholic dogma where it testifies that Jesus was born not through Mary's vagina, the normal birth canal, but through her navel!

Not only saviours but famous men, like Plato, Pythagoras, Alexander, Augustus and others, were thought to have been born miraculously. Plato was born of Paretonia, begotten of Apollo, not Ariston, his father, according to one authority.

The doctrine of immaculate conception is ancient but the manner of the holy conception was different in different countries. Zoroaster was immaculately conceived by a ray from the Divine Reason or Word and this was adopted by medieval artists.

But the idea of being overshadowed by the Holy Ghost seems to have been most current. God, the father of a god was believed to overshadow the mother of a god, to impregnate her. In 550 BC, Pythais, the mother of Pythagoras, conceived by a spectre or ghost of the god Apollo, the Sun-god.

Answer for yourself: Does the ghost of the sun god differ in principle from the Christian Holy Ghost?.

Juno of Rome grew pregnant at the touch of a flower to give birth to Mars. No impregnation could have been purer. So the most immaculate conception of all was that of the god of War! If it sounds absurd, how is it more senseless than conception by a ghost? Botany has shown that, at least, a flower can fertilize other flowers but no science has yet investigated the virility of ghosts.

The Greek Juno, Hera, was immaculately impregnated by the wind to give birth to Vulcan. Here is a close parallel indeed for the word habitually translated as spirit or ghost in the scriptures and continued into the Greek of the New Testament really means breath or wind! So literally the virgin Mary was impregnated by the wind just like Hera. The author of the Perennial Calendar tells us the miraculous conception of Juno Jugulis, the blessed virgin queen of heaven, fell on the second of February, the day of the early Christian festival of the date of the conception of the ever Blessed Virgin Mary.

A Chinese sect worshiped a saviour known as Xaca, who was conceived of his mother, Maia, by a white elephant, which she saw in her sleep, and for greater purity, she brought him forth from one of her sides. In Chinese popular religion, the virgin mother Shing-Mon gave birth to the God Yu from a conception by a water lily. The procreative refinement evinced here is equal to that of Juno. In another story Yu was conceived of a star!

Tamerlane's mother conceived having had sexual intercourse with the god of Day. The mother of Ghengis Khan, being too modest to claim that she was the mother of the son of God, said only that he was the son of the sun.

Osiris of Egypt and even Julius Caesar were immaculately conceived—the latter being the son of the beautiful virgin Cronis Celestine, and begotten by the Father of all Gods, Jupiter. His heir and nephew, Augustus Caesar, was curiously his half brother, as another son of Jove, by whose divine lust he was immaculately conceived in the temple of Apollo.

Both Buddha and Chrishna, of India, were immaculately conceived. The mother of Chrishna was overshadowed by the supreme God, Brahma, and the Holy Ghost was Naraan. Chrishna's mother had given birth seven times previously but remained a virgin. Philostratus, a disciple of Apollonius of Cappadocia, who was contemporary with Jesus Christ , tells that Damis, the mother of Apollonius, gave birth to this god and rival saviour of Jesus Christ, by being overshadowed by the god, Proteus.

Several of the virgin mothers of gods and great men go ten months between conception and delivery.

Plainly the tradition of the miraculous conceptions of gods, sons of gods, saviours and messiahs was prevalent in the world from ancient times on, beginning long before the mother of Jesus was overshadowed by the ghostly representative of the Most High. The belief in immaculate conception extended to every nation in the world. Grote, referring to Greece, declares that the furtive pregnancy of young women, often by a god, is one of the most frequently recurring incidents in the legendary narratives of the country.

Both the prevalence and antiquity of the idea of immaculate conception among the heathen is conceded by earlier Christian writers in their arguments from precedents of the divinity of Christ. St. Augustine, Origen and Lactanius tried to persuade us of the immaculate virginity of the mother of Jesus Christ by the example of similar pagan events. The doctrine of immaculate conception is, then, conceded as long anterior to Christ and therefore not unique in his case.

PROBLEMS WITH THIS DOCTRINE

- The gospels show that Christ himself did not claim to have a miraculous birth. He did not once allude to it, though as the principal evidence of his divinity, as Christians claim, he would have done so.
- His paternal genealogy, as made out by Matthew and Luke, completely confounds his virgin birth. They both trace his lineage through Joseph, which they could only do if Joseph was his father.
- His own disciple, Philip, declared him to be the son of Joseph, and several texts show that it was the original belief.
- The story of the virgin birth rests on the slender foundations of an angel and a dream. Mary got it by an angel, and Joseph by a dream, and thereby we have the whole of the story of the divinity of Jesus Christ.
- However, we have neither Joseph's nor Mary's report of these things, but only Matthew and Luke's. We do not know that either of them ever saw or spoke with Joseph or Mary on the subject.
- If Christ were a miraculously born god, would his mother would have reproved him for misconduct when she found him in the temple, as she, if no one else, must have known his nature?
- If Mary conceived miraculously, why was it kept so long from Joseph? Did the concubine of God intend to deceive her lawful husband? An angel had to be sent from heaven to let him into the secret.
- Why did not God inform Joseph by inspiration instead of using the round about way of sending an angel to do it?
- Mary was found with child of the Holy Ghost,* but as we are told nothing more about the circumstances, does it not leave us suspicious?
- Since it all seems to have been based on dreams, was carried on through dreams, and has no better foundation than dreams, why should we give it better credit than similar stories found in heathen mythology? Or is it that Gentile Christianity is just a dreamy religion?
- In an educated and scientific age, should we accept reports of the birth of a God based on no better a foundation than dreams, angels and the legends of oriental mythology? In particular, can any scientist entertain the idea of infinite beings, themselves mere conjecture, actually impregnating human females?

- Ancient Eastern belief was that sexual intercourse was sinful, procreation was impure and human children were born thus contaminated. Human beings were imperfect and any god sent into the world as a saviour had to avoid such contamination. The solution was that incarnate gods entered the world through human virgins to avoid the impurity and the slander that the saviour might have arisen in more normal ways if the mother were not a virgin. Can any unbiased deny that this is the source of the origin of the story of Christ's virgin birth?
- If Christ had to come into the world avoiding the impurity of human conception and birth, why did he not descend directly from heaven in person? If he can descend on the clouds at his—still awaited—second advent, why could he not do the same at his first advent, thereby pre-empting reasons for doubt and saving far more of fallen humanity?
- Could anyone, free of religious guilt and indoctrination, presented with these stories as the truth today, willingly and joyfully accept them as proof that someone was a god? Or would they consider them to be fraudulent inventions, intended to gull the credulous?
- If you have never taken the time as a Christian to study the origins of your faith I highly suggest it. If you would only familiarize yourself with the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. one can quickly see how under the influence of Constantine, a Sun-worshipper, that in the conversion of the Empire to the Christian faith then its leader, Jesus, had to be moulded into the image of prior Sun-gods. Such was Constantine's wish and whatever the emperor desired was done or else. Check it out!

Answer for yourself: Does this event as depicted in the New Testament now seem "Divine and unique" to you any longer?

THE TRUTH ABOUT WHAT WAS FOUND AT QUMRAN

There sure is a lot of talk about the Dead Sea Scrolls and what was discovered at Qumran. Sadly few know of what they are speaking of as rumor has again replaced solid facts and easily discernible evidence. The debate today, among those pseudo-scholars who have read at least one book on the subject, rages between which texts of the Bible found at Qumran are "authoritative." Many, too many, reply upon the Greek translation of the Jewish Bible for their Old Testaments today, and that for several reasons. First of all, this Greek translation was the translation used by the Greek-speaking church and later it would be the ultimate source and standard for all English translations since the beginning. Coupled with this was the discovery of portions of the Greek translations of the Jewish Scriptures at Qumran. With the failure of the church to read and understand Hebrew the Jewish Hebrews texts, along with the loss of the Hebrew language among the Hellenized Jews of the Second Temple period, even in the days of Jesus, Aramaic had replaced the use of Hebrew among all but the intellectuals and spiritual leadership. Needless to say the ability to read Hebrew fell into disuse long, long ago, and few early Church Fathers could handle the language. Therefore, for them their Bible had to be Greek.

This Greek Septuagint translation of the Torah was done between 285 and 244 B.C.E., as my quote from the Judaica below attests to. Further more, the other books of the Tanach were translated during the following 2 centuries, i.e. between 244 and 44 B.C.E.

"Septuagint, the oldest Greek translation of the Bible...the legend contained in the apocryphal letter of Aristeas, according to which 72 elders of Israel, six from each tribe, translated the LAW [Torah] into Greek in Alexandria, during the reign of Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285-244 B.C.E.)...The designation Septuagint was EXTENDED to the rest of the Bible and non-canonical books that were translated to Greek during the following two centuries" (Encylopaedia Judaica, Volume 14, p1178).

As stated above Biblical manuscripts were recovered in the Qumran excavations; some were Greek, some Aramaic, and some Hebrew. What escapes almost all today, even some scholars it seems, is that the Essenic community possessed conflicting "Bibles." In other words, the Greek read often exactly opposite to what the Hebrew would read.

Answer for yourself: How can this be and yet be the Word of God?

Without serious investigation on your part you most likely never knew this fact in the first place. Besides that, most today, if they know anything at all, have failed to be told about these alarming inconsistencies in the Biblical texts recovered there. There seems to be a general acceptance that the Greek manuscripts found there only solidify the authority already accepted for the Septuagint (the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures).

Let me say that the facts state otherwise along with some scholars who will attest to such. Let us examine just what was found there and see if the manuscripts discovered there confirm the authority of the Greek Bible over the Hebrew Old Testament.

THE FACTS DON'T LIE.....SO WHAT ARE THEY?

The Biblical manuscripts found in the Qumran, are distributed as follows: 60% Proto-Masoretic texts, 20% Qumran style manuscripts, 10% Nonaligned texts, 5% Proto-Samaritan texts, and 5% Septuagintal type texts.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice only 5 % of all the manuscripts found there were Greek? That means the vast majority of the texts were in Hebrew or Aramaic. So much for the fact that the Essenes accepted the authority of the Greek Old Testament and its variant readings over the Palestinian Massoretic text.

Further more, the Qumran style manuscripts have their bases in the proto-Masoretic texts. The Masoretic type texts were dominant in the time of the Hasmonean period (about 160 B.C.E.). (p172 of Reclaiming the Dead Sea Scrolls by Shiffman)

Furthermore, most of the text that vary from the Masoretic (4 LXX manuscript fragments, for example, dating to the 1st and second century B.C.E.), come from cave 4. This is the cave where the texts were not preserved carefully in jars. It is conjectured, that cave 4 was a geniza for the depositing of texts that were damaged or had textual errors.

Some say, 'Cave 4 is close to to Qumran, and had shelves, so it must have been where they kept the books they were currently using.' I disagree. The geniza of Cairo shows that flawed texts, text no longer usuable or never usable, that contained the Name of God were stored nearby. Many synagogues today have genizas in the synagogue itself. It would have been more likely for the people of Qumran to have stored the books they used daily or weekly directly in their settlement, in a building where it could be easily used. These cave 4 scrolls, were, in my opinion, part of a genizia of texts that were in error or unacceptable in other ways, yet could not be merely thrown out, as they contained the Name of God or were part of faulty Scriptural texts.

Additionally, another quote from the Encyclopaeadia Judaica supports this. "In talmudic and midrashic literature, however, it is [geniza] used as a nomen actionis (Shab. 16:1; Lev. R. 21:12; Meg. 26b), as a place for the putting away of all kinds of sacred articles, such as sacred books no longer usable, as well as the books of Sadducees and heretics, and other writings of which the sages disapproved but which were not required to be burned" ("Genizah", Encyclopaeadia Judaica)

Cave 7 contained a collection of only Greek texts, including 2 LXX fragments on paprus. (Shiffman, p 212).

Clearly, by the time of the Hasmoneans (who were before Jesus in history) at least, the Masoretic texts were the majority texts. Jesus himself followed the same division of the Tanach into Torah, Prophets, and Psalms (ie writings), as it says in Luke 24:44. Jesus never made mention of the "four divisions" of the Greek Bible which was existing in his day.

The texts are sacred to us, so the task of copying them is considered of utmost importance. A number of safe guards are taken to preserve the accuracy by the scribe himself. The congregation who gets the scroll is another check in the accuracy of the scroll. They always have someone checking the Hebrew as the scroll is read, comparing it to a scroll that is known to be Kosher (i.e., without errors). Based on the Biblical scrolls found in Qumran, the Jewish scribes have done a remarkably accurate job of passing the text down for the last 2200 years.

In the approximately 2000 years since the writing of the Dead Sea Scroll Isaiahs, it is interesting to note that the only difference between those and the Masoretic text are minor spelling errors in the DSS Isaiah versions. Scholars interpret this and understand that such "accuracy" for such older manuscripts (the DSS Isaiah almost 1000 years older than any known existing Hebrew manuscript before the find at Qumran) lends credibility and assurance that the older existing Massoretic texts which were previously only known from the 9th century A.D., were just as equally meticulously preserved as well from their earlier sources. So this meticulousness in care and copying of the Hebrew manuscripts has been attested to and proven by archeological finds. Such precision and care can be expected to be applied to all the translations by the Jewish scribes. And when Qumran reveals Massoretic and pre-Massoretic texts existing contemporary to the Septuagint, then there is no longer any need for doubt reading its accuracy. The problem comes when one realizes that and can no longer blame the divergent readings of the Massoretic texts as Jewish reactionism to Christianity in the Middle Ages. This simply will not hold water any longer. One must now deal with these divergent readings found at Qumran and as attested in the Jewish Tanakh as they oppose many readings in the Greek Septuagint and the later Christian translations.

It is also important to note that in communities as far apart as Syria or Yemin and England, isolated from each other, the Torah is the same. This is amazing given the distance between them before the age of mass communication and given the isolation of the 2 communities from each other. They were not comparing notes, but copying the Torah from previous ones in their possession. This attests to the accurate transmission of the Torah and Tanach following the scribal methods.

In contrast, early in Church history, a Church Father set out to make a standard version of the LXX, due to the fact that there were so many versions out there.

Origen became alarmed at the state of the Greek text of the Bible: the latter not only differed considerably from the Hebrew text of the Jews, which he believed to be the original one, but it appeared in a wide range of forms in the manuscripts current among the Christians. His purpose in producing his enormous work known as the Hexapla ("the sixfold," completed in 245 C.E.) was to reconstitute and standardize the "genuine" text of the Septuagint, essential both to sound exegesis and effective apologetics.

The Hexapla did not become preeminent throughout the Christian world, since, at the end of the fourth century, Jerome referred to the existence of two other recensions, one Egyptian by Hesychius, and the other made in Asia Minor by Lucian. The existence of these three versions might in itself afford a sufficient explanation of the many discrepancies displayed by the Septuagint manuscripts (Encyclopaedia Judaica, "Bible: Translations").

Considering the painstaking accuracy with which the Tanach is copied, I would rather rely on the oldest Hebrew manuscripts we have today and their translation rather than the Greek mistranslation, no matter how good it might be or others attest to it. You see, the language of the translation limits its accuracy. Greek is very different from Hebrew, and the translation was designed to meet the needs of a Greek-speaking audience. The language you use colors the meaning, and the LXX is thus colored by the Greek language let alone purposefully mistranslated in many, many places. Something that might be of interest to you. Origen, one of the Church father's, believed that the Hebrew text of the Jews was the original text. (Encylopaedia Judaica, "Bible", p853). Many modern translations, such as the NRSV, make use of the Hebrew Masoretic text.

THE HEBREW MASORETIC TEXT....OR THE GREEK SEPTUAGINT...WHICH IS FROM GOD?

"What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God." (Rom. 3:1-2)

According to the Bible, the Hebrews were given charge of keeping and copying God's word. The word "oracle" means revelation, prophecy, canon, or edict. It was unto the Jew, that the Old Testament revelation and canon were committed. This is why twice in the Old Testament they were instructed not to add to or take from the word of God:

"Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you." (Deut. 4:2).

"Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." (Prov. 30:6).

MAKING SURE THE COMMANDMENTS WERE OBEYED WHEN COPYING THE MANUSCRIPTS

The faithful Hebrew scribe took this task very seriously. Precise steps were taken by the scribes in preparing both the parchment upon which they wrote, and in preparing themselves in order to copy God's Holy word. According to the Hebrew Talmud, the rules of the scribe consisted of the following:

1). The skins of the parchments had to be prepared in a special way and dedicated to God so that they would be clean in order to have God's words written on them.

2). The ink which was used was black and made in accordance to a special recipe used only for writing scripture.

3). The words written could not be duplicated by memory but must be reproduced from an authentic copy which the scribe had before him. And, the scribe had to say each word aloud when he wrote them.

4). Each time the scribe came across the Hebrew word for God, he had to wipe his pen clean. And when he came across the name of God, Jehovah (YHWH), he had to wash his whole body before he could write it.

5). If a sheet of parchment had one mistake on it, the sheet was condemned. If there were three mistakes found on any page, the whole manuscript was condemned. Each scroll had to be checked within thirty days of its writing, or it was considered unholy.

6). Every word and every letter was counted. If a letter or word were omitted, the manuscript was condemned.

7). There were explicit rules for how many letters and words allowed on any given parchment. A column must have at least 48 lines and no more than 60. Letters and words had to be spaced at a certain distance and no word could touch another.

CONFIRMING TESTIMONY TO THE METICULOUSNESS IN THE COPYING OF THE JEWISH BIBLE

Commenting on these rules, Dr. H.S. Miller writes, "Some of these rules may appear extreme and absurd, yet they show how sacred the Holy Word of the Old Testament was to its custodians, the Jews (Rom. 3:2), and they gave us strong encouragement to believe that we have the real Old Testament, the same on which our Lord had and which was originally given by inspiration of God" (General Biblical Introduction, p. 185).

In his book, The Text of the Old Testament, Dr. Ernst Wurthwein writes, "This was the purpose of the scribes' meticulous work. They counted the verses, words, and letters of the Law and other parts of the Scriptures as a procedural aid in preparing manuscripts and in checking their accuracy." (Eerdmans Publishing, 1979, p. 19).

The Jewish historian Josephus (37-95 AD) comments on the preciseness of the Jewish scribes and their faithfulness in copying the Old Testament scriptures. "...for during so many ages as have already passed, no one has been so bold as either to add anything to them; but it becomes natural to all Jews, immediately and from their very birth, to esteem those books to contain divine doctrines, and to persist in them, and, if occasion be, willingly to die for them." (Flavius Josephus, Against Apion 1:8). Some have taken Josephus' statement to mean the contents of the Old Testament. Other have understood it to mean the canon of the Old Testament. Either way, his statement affirms the sacredness the Hebrews have for Holy Scripture.

WHAT THE DEAD SEA SCROLLS TAUGHT US...THAT WE HAD WRONG

For years it had been thought that the Bible which Christ used was the Greek Septuagint (also known as the LXX). The common thought was that the Jews at the time of Christ had all but lost their use of Hebrew. Since the international language of that day was Greek, the hypothesis was that Christ did not use the Hebrew scriptures, but read from the Greek LXX. However, with the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls it has been established that the Jews did not lose there use of Hebrew. In fact, most of their writings (both sacred and otherwise) were written in Hebrew.

Alan Millard has written the following about the Dead Sea Scrolls (DSS) and their relation to ancient languages. "Aramaic, Greek, Latin... was Hebrew spoken too? For years scholars believed not, or that it was restricted to religious circles, synagogue readings and prayers, and the Temple. Counting in favor of a wider knowledge is the presence of Hebrew inscriptions on the other side of Hasmonean coins. That might mean no more than Latin legends on coins of recent times--a grand style which the educated could understand. However, recent discoveries have thrown new light on the question. Books in a style of Hebrew imitating the Old Testament yet distinct from it, and some in Hebrew more like that of the Mishnah make up a larger section of the Dead Sea Scrolls" (Discoveries From the Time of Jesus, Lion Pub., Oxford; p. 35. Professor Millard has served with the British Museum in the Department of Western Asiatic Antiquities and is Rankin Reader in Hebrew and Ancient Semitic languages at the University of Liverpool).

WHICH OLD TESTAMENT DID JESUS READ...THE JEWISH ONE OR THE ONE WE HAVE TODAY AS CHRISTIANS WHICH CAME FROM THE GREEK?

This discovery confirms what we find in the Gospels concerning the Hebrew Old Testament used by Jesus. In Matthew, Jesus proclaims; "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." (Matt. 5:18). It is interesting that he used the words "jot" and "tittle." In the Wycliffe Bible Commentary, Dr. Homer Kent of Grace Theological Seminary writes, "Jot. Smallest letter of the Hebrew alphabet (yodh). Tittle. Tiny projection on certain Hebrew letters." (p.937). The smallest part of the letters Jesus used to describe the fact that the law would not pass until all was fulfilled, were Hebrew. This would be odd if Jesus were reading from a Greek Old Testament.

Further, Jesus says in Luke 11:51; "From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation.". This statement attests that Jesus used the Hebrew canon of scripture and not the Greek translation which was available in his day. The order of books found in our Old Testament run from Genesis to Malachi. The Greek LXX has the same order but adds additional books (the Apocrypha). The Hebrew canon, while containing the same books as our Old Testament, places the order of the books differently. The Hebrew Bible runs from Genesis to 2 Chronicles with the minor prophets in the middle and not the end as in our Old Testament. We know that Abel was killed by his brother according to Genesis 4:8. Zacharias was killed in 2 Chronicles 24:20-22. Thus showing the first and last to die according to the Jewish Bible. Dr. Merrill Tenney agrees by simply stating, "Able was the first martyr of the OT history. Zacharias was the last, according to the order of books in the Hebrew Bible, which, unlike the English Bible, ends with Chronicles." (Ibid. p.1049). With these things in mind, we can safely say the Bible of Jesus was a Hebrew Bible.

THE MASORETIC TEXT:

The Masoretic Text is the traditional Hebrew Old Testament text of both Judaism and Protestantism (The Catholic Church, historically, used the Latin translation of Jerome based on the Greek LXX). Masoretic comes from the word "Masora" which usually refers to the notes printed beside the Hebrew text by Jewish scribes and scholars.

Until recently, the oldest manuscripts of the Hebrew Old Testament dated from the ninth century and onward. These Hebrew manuscripts of the middle ages are in general agreement. The Biblia Hebraica by Kittel is the basic Hebrew Old Testament used by scholars and translators and is based on the Masoretic Text from this time period. However, with the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls manuscripts which date from around 168 BC to about 68 AD. Thus providing us with Hebrew manuscripts which outdate the previous manuscripts by about 1,000 years. What is interesting to the student of textual criticism and the believer in Biblical preservation, is the fact that a large number of the DSS agree with the Masoretic Text and against the Septuagint reading! Although there are some manuscripts within the findings of the DSS which agree with the LXX and also reflect a differing Hebrew Text with a number of variants, the fact remains that we now have manuscripts dating from the time of Jesus or before which agree with the Masoretic Text. This give additional credence to the preciseness and integrity of the Hebrew scribes in their accuracy of reproducing the manuscripts throughout the ages. And, most importantly, it shows the preservation of the Old Testament Text in Hebrew by God.

Dr. Emanuel Tov of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and one of the editors of the DSS writes: "Of similar importance are the new data about the context of the biblical scrolls, since different texts are recognizable [this is explained when one understands the evolution of the Essene sect and their evolving religious beliefs from fundamental Judaism in 170 B.C. E. to Pythagorean-Buddhist apocalypticism in pre 70 A.D.]. Some texts reflect precisely the consonantal framework of the medieval MT (Masoretic Text). Others reflect the basic framework of the MT, although their spelling is different. Still others differ in many details from the MT, while agreeing with the Septuagint or Samaritan Pentateuch. Some texts do not agree with any previously known text at all, and should be considered independent textual traditions. Thus, the textual picture presented by the Qumran scrolls represents a textual variety that was probably typical for the period." (The Oxford Companion to the Bible edited by Bruce Metzger and Michael Coogan, 1993; p.160)

Norman Geisler and William Nix attest to most of the DSS reflecting the Masoretic Text. In their book, A General Introduction to the Bible, they write, "The (Dead Sea) scrolls give an overwhelming confirmation of the fidelity of the Masoretic text." (p. 261). They go on to cite Millar Burrows' work, "The Dead Sea Scrolls," "It is a matter of wonder, " states Burrows, "that through something like a thousand years the text underwent so little alteration. As I said in my first article on the scroll, 'Herein lies its chief importance, supporting the fidelity of the Masoretic tradition.'" (Ibid.). Ernst Wurthwein cites R. de Vaux as saying, "The script is more developed, the Biblical text is definitely that of the Masora, and it must be concluded from this that the documents from Qumran (i.e. DSS) are older, earlier than the second century [B.C.E.]" (Wurthwein, p. 31). Concerning the scrolls of Isaiah found in Cave 1 at Qumran, Wurthwein writes, "The scrolls (1QIsa. a.) has a popular type text which supports (the Masoretic Text) essentially, but which also offers a great number of variants. . .A second Isaiah manuscripts (1QIsa. b.) is fragmentary, but stands much closer to the Masoretic text." (Ibid. p. 32).

Additional manuscripts have also been found which support the Masoretic Text. Again Wurthwein informs us of the following: "Also important are the remains of fourteen scrolls with Biblical texts from the period before AD 73, discovered while excavating the rock fortress of Masada in the Judean desert in 1963-1965. These agree extensively with the traditional Biblical texts--only in the text of Ezekiel are there a few insignificant variants." (Ibid. p. 31). To these we can also add the Geniza Fragments which date from the fifth century AD. These manuscripts were discovered in 1890 at Cairo, Egypt. They were located in a type of storage room for worn or faulty manuscripts, which was called the Geniza. The fragments number around 200,000 and reflect Biblical texts in Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic. The Biblical texts discovered support the Masoretic Text.

In one sense, the Masoretic Text may be thought of as the Textus Receptus of the Old Testament. In fact, some scholars have referred to it as such. Like the Textus Receptus of the New Testament, the Masoretic Text is based on the majority of manuscripts and reflects the traditional text used. Although there are differences found in some Masoretic Texts, these differences are minor and usually deal with, orthography, vowel points, accents, and divisions of the text. In 1524/25, Daniel Bomberg published an edition of the Masoretic Text based on the tradition of Jacob ben Chayyim. Jacob ben Chayyim was a Jewish refugee who later became a Christian. It was his text which was used by the translators of the King James Bible for their work in the Old Testament, and it was the basis of Kittel's first two editions of his Hebrew text. Wurthwein notes that the text of ben Chayyim, "enjoyed an almost canonical authority up to our own time." (Ibid. p. 37).

For about six generations the Masoretic Text was reproduced by the ben Asher family. Moses ben Asher produced a text in 895 AD known as Codex Cairensis containing the writing of the Prophets. Codex Leningradensis dates to 1008 AD and was based on the work of Aaron ben Moses ben Asher, the son of Moses ben Asher. This Codex is the oldest manuscript containing the complete Bible. Some of the differences found within this family of manuscripts are the basis of Kittel's third edition of his Biblia Hebraica and has been used by scholars in producing modern translations of the Bible, such as the New International Version (1978), the New King James Version (1982), and the New Revised Standard Version (1989).

For the most part, scholarship agrees that the Masoretic Text became the standard authorized Hebrew text around 100 AD in connection with the completion of the New Testament.

Thus we see that the Masoretic Text existed prior to the writings of the New Testament, was used as the official Hebrew Old Testament at the time of the establishing of the Biblical canon, and has been used since as the official representation of the Hebrew originals.

THE GREEK SEPTUAGINT:

The most noted Old Testament translated into Greek is the Septuagint (also known as the LXX). The conventional thought is that the LXX was translated from the Hebrew text by Hellenistic Jews during the period from 275 to 100 BC at Alexandria, Egypt. This has been proven legend today! And, as pointed out by scholars such as Ralph W. Klein, the LXX used a differing Hebrew text and not that of the Masoretic Text type, as reflected in some of the finding among the DSS. The LXX was used by Jerome in producing his Old Testament of the Latin Vulgate used by the Roman Catholic Church, and the LXX remains the official Old Testament of the Greek Orthodox Church. This accounts for the additional books found in the Catholic and Orthodox Churches known as the Apocrypha, because they are contained in the text of the LXX.

The association of the Latin numbers LXX (meaning 70) with the Septuagint comes from the legend concerning the origin of this Greek translation. According to the Letter of Aristeas seventy Jewish scholars were chosen to translate the Law of Moses into Greek so that it could be added to the great library of Ptolemy Philadelphus in Alexandria, Egypt. The letter states that the High Priest in Jerusalem sent 72 scholars to the Egyptian king. The High Priest writes, "In the presence of all the people I selected six elders from each tribe, good men and true, and I have sent them to you with a copy of our law. It will be a kindness, O righteous king, if you will give instruction that as soon as the translation of the law is completed, the men shall be restored again to us in safety." (Letter of Aristeas 2:34-35). Thus six scholars from the twelve tribes number seventy-two (it is to be assumed that the 70 is merely a rounding off of the 72).

One wide-spread myth concerning the LXX is an old story which states that the translators worked on their translation alone and compared their work each morning, only to find that each had translated the passage exactly the same. This, of course, has no historical foundation and some have falsely applied this story to the translators of the King James Bible. However, stories such as this one caused some to claim inspiration for the LXX.

Dr. Karlfried Froehlich notes this and writes, "Inspiration was also claimed for the Greek translation of the 'Seventy', which was endorsed by Alexandrian Jewish authorities. In Christian eyes, the legend of the Septuagint's miraculous origin, first told in the Letter of Aristeas, then elaborated by Philo, and further embellished by Christian authors such as Justin Martyr, Irenaeus of Lyons, Tertullian, and Augustine, even rendered the Septuagint superior to the Hebrew original." (The Oxford Companion to the Bible, p. 310).

Answer for yourself: Since when does "legend" render a fraud as superior a document which, upon comparison with the source document (the Jewish Palestinian text) be shown to contain hundreds of purposeful mistranslations for theological purposes?

Even if the story given in the Letter of Aristeas were true, the Greek translation deals only with the first five books of the Old Testament. Most scholars note that there are differences in style and quality of translation within the LXX and assign a much greater time frame than the seventy-two days allotted in the Letter of Aristeas. In his book, Textual Criticism of the Old Testament: The Septuagint after Qumran, Ralph Klein notes, "the Letter of Aristeas is riddled with many historical improbabilities and errors. . .And yet, however legendary and improbable the details, many still believe that some accurate historical facts about the LXX can be distilled from Aristeas: (1) the translation began in the third century BC; (2) Egypt was the place of origin; and (3) the Pentateuch was done first." (p. 2).

Dr. F. F. Bruce correctly points out that, strictly speaking, the LXX deals only with the Law and not the whole Old Testament. Bruce writes, "The Jews might have gone on at a later time to authorize a standard text of the rest of the Septuagint, but . . . lost interest in the Septuagint altogether. With but few exceptions, every manuscript of the Septuagint which has come down to our day was copied and preserved in Christian, not Jewish, circles." (The Books and the Parchments, p.150). This is important to note because the manuscripts which consist of our LXX today date to the third century AD. Although there are fragments which pre-date Christianity and some of the Hebrew DSS agree with the LXX, the majority of manuscripts we have of the LXX date well into the Christian era. And, not all of these agree.

The most noted copy of the LXX is that found in the Hexapla by Origen. Origen produced an Old Testament with six translations paralleled together, called the Hexapla which means sixfold. The fifth column was the LXX.

(The columns of the Hexapla were as follows: 1. The Hebrew text. 2. The Hebrew transliterated into Greek. 3. The Greek translation of Aquila. 4. The Greek translation of Symmachus. 5. The LXX. 6. The Greek translation of Theodotion.) However, we do not have Origen's Hexapla (with the exception of a few limited fragments). Sir Frederic Kenyon wrote, "A considerable number of MSS. exist which give information as to Origen's Hexaplaric text and particular passages in the other columns, but these do not go far towards enabling us to recover the LXX text as it existed before Origen; and this remains the greatest problem which confronts the textual student of the Septuagint. Until we can do that, we are not in a position fully to utilize the evidence of the Greek for the recovery of the pre-Masoretic Hebrew." (The Text of the Greek Bible, p.35). In other words, we cannot fully reconstruct Origen's fifth column, let alone a pre-Origenian Septuagint.

Origen's LXX was revised and edited by two of his disciples, Pamphilus and Eusebius. There were additional Greek translations of the Old Testament during this time which were also contained in the Hexapla, such as the work by Aquila and Theodotion. Some scholars believe that the translation produced by Theodotion replaced the LXX in the book of Daniel so that the readings there are really that of Theodotion and not of the LXX. However, others have claimed that this is not the case. Therefore, concerning Origen's Hexapla and the LXX the best scholars can say is that cited by Ernst Wurthwein, "Although no authentic manuscript of the Hexaplaric Septuagint has survived, there are manuscripts which represent the text of Origen more or less closely." (The Text of the Old Testament, p.57). Two such manuscripts which represent the text of Origen are Codex Vaticanus and Codex Sinaiticus.

THE LXX AND THE KJV TRANSLATORS

It is interesting to note in our study of manuscript evidence and the King James Bible, how the translators of the KJV viewed the LXX. This Greek work did not go unnoticed by these men as can be seen in the original preface to the KJV written by Dr. Miles Smith. The following are a few paragraphs from the KJV preface for the student to consider. Afterwards, comments will be made.

1) "Notwithstanding, though it was commended generally, yet it did not fully content the learned, no not of the Jews. For not long after Christ, Aquila fell in hand with a new Translation, and after him Theodotion, and after him Symmachus; yea, there was a fifth and a sixth edition, the Authors whereof were not known. (Epiphan. de mensur. et ponderibus.) These with the Seventy made up the Hexapla and were worthily and to great purpose compiled together by Origen."

2) "Yet for all that, as the Egyptians are said of the Prophet to be men and not God, and their horses flesh and not spirit (Isa 31:3); so it is evident, (and Saint Jerome affirmed as much) (S. Jerome. de optimo genere interpret.) that the Seventy were Interpreters, they were not Prophets; they did many things well, as learned men; but yet as men they stumbled and fell, one while through oversight, another while through ignorance, yea, sometimes they may be noted to add to the Original, and sometimes to take from it; which made the Apostles to leave them many times, when they left the Hebrew, and to deliver the sense thereof according to the truth of the word, as the spirit gave them utterance. This may suffice touching the Greek Translations of the Old Testament."

3) "Now to the latter we answer; that we do not deny, nay we affirm and avow, that the translation of the Bible in English, set forth by men of our profession, (for we have seen none of theirs of the whole Bible as yet) containeth the word of God, nay, is the word of God. As the King's speech, which he uttereth in Parliament, being translated into French, Dutch, Italian, and Latin, is still the King's speech, though it be not interpreted by every Translator with the like graadventure so fitly for phrase, nor so expressly for sense, everywhere. . The Romanists therefore in refusing to hear, and daring to burn the Word translated, did no less than despite the spirit of grace, from whom originally it proceeded, and whose sense and meaning, as well as man's weakness would able, it did express. . .The like we are to think of Translations. The translation of the Seventy dissenteth from the Original in many places, neither doth it come near it, for perspicuity, gravity, majesty; yet which of the Apostles did condemn it? Condemn it? Nay, they used it, . . .To be short, Origen, and the whole Church of God for certain hundred years, were of another mind: for they were so far from treading under foot, (much more from burning) the Translation of Aquila a Proselyte, that is, one that had turned Jew; of Symmachus, and Theodotion, both Ebionites, that is, most vile heretics, that they joined together with the Hebrew Original, and the Translation of the Seventy (as hath been before signified out of Epiphanius) and set them forth openly to be considered of and perused by all. But we weary the unlearned, who need not know so much, and trouble the learned, who know it already."

In the first paragraph we find that the KJV translators attest to Origen's Hexapla and early Greek translations of the Old Testament which post-date the birth of Christianity. These translations, along with the LXX, paralleled in the Hexapla.

The second paragraph shows that the KJV translators saw some of the limitations of the LXX. They recognized that the LXX was produced by Interpreters and not by inspired Prophets. Although the LXX translates many things well, it also failed many times and departed from the original Hebrew (i.e. Masoretic Text). Sometimes the LXX adds to the Hebrew, and at other times it omits. Which, according the KJV translators, made the New Testament writers to, "leave them many times, when they left the Hebrew, and to deliver the sense thereof according to the truth of the word, as the spirit gave them utterance." This simply means that when a New Testament writer cites the LXX, they freely corrected the LXX when it differed from the Hebrew, or as they were moved by inspiration.

The third paragraph is lengthy to show the context. The KJV translators promoted the use of translations. Not as we have come to understand it with a variety of versions differing from one another, but the importance of having the word of God translated into the language of those who cannot read Hebrew or Greek. Their argument was against the Catholic Church which at that time made it a practice of burning Bibles which were in any language other than Latin. The Catholic Church considered such translations as corrupt and worthy of burning. The KJV translators are arguing that the history of the Church demonstrates that even when a translation is poorly done, God can still use it and it should not be burned, as the Catholic Church had a practice of doing. They illustrate their point with the Greek translations of Aquila and Theodotion, which were translated by non-believers and yet their work was not burned by believers. They claim the same with the LXX.

THE LXX AND THE NEW TESTAMENT.....LET'S COMPARE AGAINST THE JEWISH PALESTINIAN MASORETIC TEXT...AND YOU SEE FOR YOURSELF

There are several places where the New Testament quotations of the Old Testament are said to be citations of the LXX. What you need to be concerned about is if this quotation from the LXX as found in your New Testament is faithfully represented as it is worded in the Jewish Scriptures. What you will see if you take the following test is that the New Testament writers are guilty of mishandling and abuse of Jewish Scripture in order to create a new religion and replace the faith of Jesus with one created about him. Without a good background in the Jewish Old Testament one reads the New Testament and notices that it is full of Old Testament quotes all the while believing that these Old Testament quotes refers in some way to Yeshua. But these as well as many other quotes in the New Testament supposedly referring to Yeshua have been lifted out of their original context and used in ways contrary to their original meanings. We end up thinking that the Old Testament was prophesying the coming of Yeshua, when in reality, the passages quoted by the New Testament writers had nothing to do with him at all.

Answer for yourself: How are you to know if what I said is true?

Let me show you! Now you can approach this two different ways. You can look up the New Testament quote and reference it to the more than likely mistranslated and misquoted passage in your Christian Old Testament (as taken from the LXX) and you won't detect any difference. Or you can go out an buy a Stone Edition Tanakh which is as faithful a Jewish translation of the Old Testament as you could get today. Then open all three books at once to the passage in question and compare them according to the following parameters:

Take your New Testament quote then run its source in your Christian OT and then in the Jewish Tanakh. Next compare these three passages according to the following parameters.

Let me give you again the mechanics involved in textual manipulation whereby we end up with something different in meaning that the original author intended.

- 1. Were the Jewish texts and phrases are lifted out of their places and contexts in the Hebrew Scriptures and given meanings which, at best, are forced and alien to what the original writer intended his audience to understand?
- 2. Preceding many of the prophetic verses in the New Testament is the emendation: "What was said through the prophet was thus fulfilled." In this way the writers of the Christian Scriptures endeavored to show that the Tanakh anticipated and predicted the events recorded in the New Testament. If you determined that the above #1 criteria was violated then understand what you are reading in the New Testament is anything but a "fulfillment."
- 3. Understand the techniques employed to establish false proof-texts: the citation of verses out of context, purposeful mistranslation, and purposeful misquotation to serve a theological agenda of the translators.
- 4. Sometimes a figurative or poetic phrase is mistaken for a straightforward statement and vice versa.
- 5. Sometimes sayings of different writers, living in different places, and in different centuries are run together.
- 6. Often two or more of these methods are used in a single quotation.

The following is a list provided by the American Bible Society (ABS) of LXX readings in the NT. The OT passage is given first, followed by the NT citation of it in parentheses. This list may not be complete but presented for your own homework.

As one can see, the list is rather lengthy (and I might add incomplete). It would be rather tedious to compare all the verses in this list. But that is exactly what you have to do if you are to see for yourself where the New Testamant rendering of a passage, as taken from your Christian Old Testament, as taken from the Greek translation is completely and diametrically opposed to the rendering as originally taken from the Jewish Masoretic text.

I would also recommend a final test to prove to you what I said is true. Buy another book: Anti-semitism in the New Testament by Lillian Freudmann. Read this book page by page with all three of the above Bibles open (the Jewish OT, the Christian OT, and the NT). Read page by page and compare every passage with these three sources all the while remembering that we non-Jews who are "believers" deserved a translation and not a free creationism! Read this book and then try to tell yourself that the NT is not forged because your Old Testament was forged to begin with!

I wish to be fair to the case in point. There are many times when the Greek of the LXX and the NT match word perfectly. To explain this the ABS states, "The writers of the New Testament generally quoted or paraphrased the ancient Greek translation of the Old Testament, commonly known as the Septuagint Version," (New Testament Passages Quoted or Paraphrased from the Septuagint, found in the TEV, Thomas Nelson Pub. 1976 ed. p. 367). The problem here is that once we open the possibility that many of the citations are not quotations but "paraphrases" of the LXX, we cannot be certain that it was in fact the LXX that was paraphrased.

Since there are differences between the NT citations and both the LXX and the Masoretic Text, the question arises as to what translation the writers of the NT used. At times it seems as if they are using the traditional Hebrew text, at other times it seems as if they are taking great liberties with the Hebrew text. Sometimes their quote matches the LXX, and at other times their citation differs from the LXX.

Answer for yourself: As Bible believing Christians, how do we resolve this dilemma?

Here is the Christian scholar's answer. I find it totally insufficient. Simply said, my research has shown that the Jewish texts were altered by the Greek-Jewish Pythagorean-Buddhists of Alexandria to promote their unique sect's religious beliefs. These alterations were only magnified as later recorded and quoted in the New Testament. The majority of Christian writers, when advised of this respond usually with this reply:

"Finally, we must remember that the writers of the NT had a unique position which we are not allotted today. They wrote under inspiration. They had the right to change the text, for it was in reality God who was doing the changing in that it is His word. This was recognized by the translators of the KJV. They understood that the Biblical writers would sometimes use a certain text and alter it, "as the spirit gave them utterance". Thus the writers of the NT had a unique liberty, and an awesome responsibly."

They just told you God cannot say the same thing twice nor make up his mind!

CLEMENT AND THE LXX:

In accordance with this same historical time frame, Sir Frederic Kenyon has pointed out that, "(The LXX) was not . . . accepted by the stricter Jews, who in controversy repudiated arguments based on Septuagint texts." (The Text of the Greek Bible, p.29). This is also true of Josephus who rejected the LXX because of its additions to the Hebrew canon of scripture.

Likewise, scholarship recognizes that the enhancement of the LXX in history came not from the Jewish scribes, but from sources within Christendom from around the third century.

In other words many alterations and interpolations to the Jewish Masoretic Text were made by Christians to make "prophecies" out of non-prophecies, to create Messianic passages which were never meant by the original writers to be Messianic, and literally "Jesusize" passages that never referred to him in the first place. In doing this they "added to" and "took away from the Word of God!"

Then these same forged passages were quoted in the New Testament writings and applied to Jesus when they were originally added to the Hebrew Scriptures by the Pythagorean-Greek Jews of Alexandria, Egypt, to refer to their sun-god myths and sun-god redeemers.

Then we lost the truth about the Historical Jesus!

As to its value in the study of textual criticism, Dr. Ernst Wurthwein writes, "No other version has received as much attention for textual criticism as (the LXX). Not only was it valued highly in antiquity, but in the nineteenth century many scholars practically preferred it over the Masoretic text. They believed that because of its pre-Christian origins it could assist in the recovery of an earlier, pre-Masoretic text that would be closer to the original than (the Masoretic Text). But today we recognize that (the LXX) neither was nor was intended to be a precise scholarly translation." (The Text of the Old Testament, pp 63-64). Later, Wurthwein quotes Dr. G. Bertram as writing, "The Septuagint belongs to the history of Old Testament interpretation rather than to the history of the Old Testament text. It can be used as a textual witness only after its own understanding of the Old Testament text has been made clear." (Ibid. pp. 67-68).

That is what Bet Emet is trying to tell you. The Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures had it's own agenda...and it was not the proliferation of truth!

Therefore we can see that the LXX does not shed light on the text of the original Hebrew, but only on how some deviated from and re-interpreted the Hebrew text to further their sects authority and religious ideology.

Further, we also can see that the Biblical guardians of the Old Testament, the Jews, were not in favor of the readings found in the LXX, nor in the additions it made to the Hebrew canon of scripture.

JOSEPHUS ON THE SEPTUAGINT (LXX)...THE PREFACE OF HIS ANTIQUITIES OF THE JEWS

1. THOSE who undertake to write histories, do not, I perceive, take that trouble on one and the same account, but for many reasons, and those such as are very different one from another. For some of them apply themselves to this part of learning to show their skill in composition, and that they may therein acquire a reputation for speaking finely: others of them there are, who write histories in order to gratify those that happen to be concerned in them, and on that account have spared no pains, but rather gone beyond their own abilities in the performance: but others there are, who, of necessity and by force, are driven to write history, because they are concerned in the facts, and so cannot excuse themselves from committing them to writing, for the advantage of posterity; nay, there are not a few who are induced to draw their historical facts out of darkness into light, and to produce them for the benefit of the public, on account of the great importance of the facts themselves with which they have been concerned. Now of these several reasons for writing history, I must profess the two last were my own reasons also; for since I was myself interested in that war which we Jews had with the Romans, and knew myself its particular actions, and what conclusion it had, I was forced to give the history of it, because I saw that others perverted the truth of those actions in their writings.

2. Now I have undertaken the present work, as thinking it will appear to all the Greeks worthy of their study; for it will contain all our antiquities, and the constitution of our government, as interpreted out of the Hebrew Scriptures. And indeed I did formerly intend, when I wrote of the war, to explain who the Jews originally were, - what fortunes they had been subject to, - and by what legislature they had been instructed in piety, and the exercise of other virtues, - what wars also they had made in remote ages, till they were unwillingly engaged in this last with the Romans: but because this work would take up a great compass, I separated it into a set treatise by itself, with a beginning of its own, and its own conclusion; but in process of time, as usually happens to such as undertake great things, I grew weary and went on slowly, it being a large subject, and a difficult thing to translate our history into a foreign, and to us unaccustomed language. However, some persons there were who desired to know our history, and so exhorted me to go on with it; and, above all the rest, Epaphroditus, a man who is a lover of all kind of learning, but is principally delighted with the knowledge of history, and this on account of his having been himself concerned in great affairs, and many turns of fortune, and having shown a wonderful rigor of an excellent nature, and an immovable virtuous resolution in them all. I yielded to this man's persuasions, who always excites such as have abilities in what is useful and acceptable, to join their endeavors with his. I was also ashamed myself to permit any laziness of disposition to have a greater influence upon me, than the delight of taking pains in such studies as were very useful: I thereupon stirred up myself, and went on with my work more cheerfully. Besides the foregoing motives, I had others which I greatly reflected on; and these were, that our forefathers were willing to communicate such things to others; and that some of the Greeks took considerable pains to know the affairs of our nation.

3. I found, therefore, that the second of the Ptolemies was a king who was extraordinarily diligent in what concerned learning, and the collection of books; that he was also peculiarly ambitious to procure a translation of our law, and of the constitution of our government therein contained, into the Greek tongue. Now Eleazar the high priest, one not inferior to any other of that dignity among us, did not envy the forenamed king the participation of that advantage, which otherwise he would for certain have denied him, but that he knew the custom of our nation was, to hinder nothing of what we esteemed ourselves from being communicated to others.

Accordingly, I thought it became me both to imitate the generosity of our high priest, and to suppose there might even now be many lovers of learning like the king; for he did not obtain all our writings at that time; but those who were sent to Alexandria as interpreters, gave him only the books of the law, while there were a vast number of other matters in our sacred books. They, indeed, contain in them the history of five thousand years; in which time happened many strange accidents, many chances of war, and great actions of the commanders, and mutations of the form of our government. Upon the whole, a man that will peruse this history, may principally learn from it, that all events succeed well, even to an incredible degree, and the reward of felicity is proposed by God; but then it is to those that follow his will, and do not venture to break his excellent laws: and that so far as men any way apostatize from the accurate observation of them, what was practical before becomes impracticable and whatsoever they set about as a good thing, is converted into an incurable calamity. And now I exhort all those that peruse these books, to apply their minds to God; and to examine the mind of our legislator, whether he hath not understood his nature in a manner worthy of him; and hath not ever ascribed to him such operations as become his power, and hath not preserved his writings from those indecent fables which others have framed, although, by the great distance of time when he lived, he might have securely forged such lies; for he lived two thousand years ago; at which vast distance of ages the poets themselves have not been so hardy as to fix even the generations of their gods, much less the actions of their men, or their own laws. As I proceed, therefore, I shall accurately describe what is contained in our records, in the order of time that belongs to them; for I have already promised so to do throughout this undertaking; and this without adding any thing to what is therein contained, or taking away any thing therefrom.

4. But because almost all our constitution depends on the wisdom of Moses, our legislator, I cannot avoid saying somewhat concerning him beforehand, though I shall do it briefly; I mean, because otherwise those that read my book may wonder how it comes to pass, that my discourse, which promises an account of laws and historical facts, contains so much of philosophy. The reader is therefore to know, that Moses deemed it exceeding necessary, that he who would conduct his own life well, and give laws to others, in the first place should consider the Divine nature; and, upon the contemplation of God's operations, should thereby imitate the best of all patterns, so far as it is possible for human nature to do, and to endeavor to follow after it: neither could the legislator himself have a right mind without such a contemplation; nor would any thing he should write tend to the promotion of virtue in his readers; I mean, unless they be taught first of all, that God is the Father and Lord of all things, and sees all things, and that thence he bestows a happy life upon those that follow him; but plunges such as do not walk in the paths of virtue into inevitable miseries. Now when Moses was desirous to teach this lesson to his countrymen, he did not begin the establishment of his laws after the same manner that other legislators did; I mean, upon contracts and other rights between one man and another, but by raising their minds upwards to regard God, and his creation of the world; and by persuading them, that we men are the most excellent of the creatures of God upon earth. Now when once he had brought them to submit to religion, he easily persuaded them to submit in all other things: for as to other legislators, they followed fables, and by their discourses transferred the most reproachful of human vices unto the gods, and afforded wicked men the most plausible excuses for their crimes; but as for our legislator, when he had once demonstrated that God was possessed of perfect virtue, he supposed that men also ought to strive after the participation of it; and on those who did not so think, and so believe, he inflicted the severest punishments. I exhort, therefore, my readers to examine this whole undertaking in that view; for thereby it will appear to them, that there is nothing therein disagreeable either to the majesty of God, or to his love to mankind; for all things have here a reference to the nature of the universe; while our legislator speaks some things wisely, but enigmatically, and others under a decent allegory, but still explains such things as required a direct explication plainly and expressly. However, those that have a mind to know the reasons of every thing, may find here a very curious philosophical theory, which I now indeed shall wave the explication of; but if God afford me time for it, I will set about writing it after I have finished the present work. I shall now betake myself to the history before me, after I have first mentioned what Moses says of the creation of the world, which I find described in the sacred books after the manner following.

ANTIQUITIES OF THE JEWS...BOOK XII

CONTAINING THE INTERVAL OF A HUNDRED AND SEVENTY YEARS.

FROM THE DEATH OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT TO THE DEATH OF JUDAS MACCABEUS.

CHAPTER 1.

HOW PTOLEMY THE SON OF LAGUS TOOK JERUSALEM AND JUDEA BY DECEIT AND TREACHERY, AND CARRIED MANY THENCE, AND PLANTED THEM IN EGYPT.

1. NOW when Alexander, king of Macedon, had put an end to the dominion of the Persians, and had settled the affairs in Judea after the forementioned manner, he ended his life. And as his government fell among many, Antigonus obtained Asia, Seleucus Babylon; and of the other nations which were there, Lysimachus governed the Hellespont, and Cassander possessed Macedonia; as did Ptolemy the son of Lagus seize upon Egypt. And while these princes ambitiously strove one against another, every one for his own principality, it came to pass that there were continual wars, and those lasting wars too; and the cities were sufferers, and lost a great many of their inhabitants in these times of distress, insomuch that all Syria, by the means of Ptolemy the son of Lagus, underwent the reverse of that denomination of Savior, which he then had. He also seized upon Jerusalem, and for that end made use of deceit and treachery; for as he came into the city on a sabbath day, as if he would offer sacrifices he, without any trouble, gained the city, while the Jews did not oppose him, for they did not suspect him to be their enemy; and he gained it thus, because they were free from suspicion of him, and because on that day they were at rest and quietness; and when he had gained it, he ruled over it in a cruel manner. Nay, Agatharchides of Cnidus, who wrote the acts of Alexander's successors, reproaches us with superstition, as if we, by it, had lost our liberty; where he says thus: "There is a nation called the nation of the Jews, who inhabit a city strong and great, named Jerusalem. These men took no care, but let it come into the hands of Ptolemy, as not willing to take arms, and thereby they submitted to be under a hard master, by reason of their unseasonable superstition." This is what Agatharchides relates of our nation. But when Ptolemy had taken a great many captives, both from the mountainous parts of Judea, and from the places about Jerusalem and Samaria, and the places near Mount Gerizzim, he led them all into Egypt, and settled them there. And as he knew that the people of Jerusalem were most faithful in the observation of oaths and covenants; and this from the answer they made to Alexander, when he sent an embassage to them, after he had beaten Darius in battle; so he distributed many of them into garrisons, and at Alexandria gave them equal privileges of citizens with the Macedonians themselves; and required of them to take their oaths, that they would keep their fidelity to the posterity of those who committed these places to their care. Nay, there were not a few other Jews who, of their own accord, went into Egypt, as invited by the goodness of the soil, and by the liberality of Ptolemy. However, there were disoders among their posterity, with relation to the Samaritans, on account of their resolution to preserve that conduct of life which was delivered to them by their forefathers, and they thereupon contended one with another, while those of Jerusalem said that their temple was holy, and resolved to send their sacrifices thither; but the Samaritans were resolved that they should be sent to Mount Gerizzim.

CHAPTER 2.

HOW PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS PROCURED THE LAWS OF THE JEWS TO BE TRANSLATED INTO THE GREEK TONGUE AND SET MANY CAPTIVES FREE, AND DEDICATED MANY GIFTS TO GOD.

1. WHEN Alexander had reigned twelve years, and after him Ptolemy Soter forty years, Philadelphus then took the kingdom of Egypt, and held it forty years within one. He procured the law to be interpreted, and set free those that were come from Jerusalem into Egypt, and were in slavery there, who were a hundred and twenty thousand. The occasion was this: Demetrius Phalerius, who was library keeper to the king, was now endeavoring, if it were possible, to gather together all the books that were in the habitable earth, and buying whatsoever was any where valuable, or agreeable to the king's inclination, (who was very earnestly set upon collecting of books,) to which inclination of his Demetrius was zealously subservient. And when once Ptolemy asked him how many ten thousands of books he had collected, he replied, that he had already about twenty times ten thousand; but that, in a little time, he should have fifty times ten thousand. But be said he had been informed that there were many books of laws among the Jews worthy of inquiring after, and worthy of the king's library, but which, being written in characters and in a dialect of their own, will cause no small pains in getting them translated into the Greek tongue; that the character in which they are written seems to be like to that which is the proper character of the Syrians, and that its sound, when pronounced, is like theirs also; and that this sound appears to be peculiar to themselves. Wherefore he said that nothing hindered why they might not get those books to be translated also; for while nothing is wanting that is necessary for that purpose, we may have their books also in this library. So the king thought that Demetrius was very zealous to procure him abundance of books, and that he suggested what was exceeding proper for him to do; and therefore he wrote to the Jewish high priest, that he should act accordingly.

2. Now there was one Aristeus, who was among the king's most intimate friends, and on account of his modesty very acceptable to him. This Aristeus resolved frequently, and that before now, to petition the king that he would set all the captive Jews in his kingdom free; and he thought this to be a convenient opportunity for the making that petition. So he discoursed, in the first place, with the captains of the king's guards, Sosibius of Tarentum, and Andreas, and persuaded them to assist him in what he was going to intercede with the king for. Accordingly Aristeus embraced the same opinion with those that have been before mentioned, and went to the king, and made the following speech to him: "It is not fit for us, O king, to overlook things hastily, or to deceive ourselves, but to lay the truth open. For since we have determined not only to get the laws of the Jews transcribed, but interpreted also, for thy satisfaction, by what means can we do this, while so many of the Jews are now slaves in thy kingdom? Do thou then what will be agreeable to thy magnanimity, and to thy good nature: free them from the miserable condition they are in, because that God, who supporteth thy kingdom, was the author of their laws as I have learned by particular inquiry; for both these people, and we also, worship the same God the framer of all things. We call him, and that truly, by the name of GREEK, [or life, or Jupiter,] because he breathes life into all men. Wherefore do thou restore these men to their own country, and this do to the honor of God, because these men pay a peculiarly excellent worship to him. And know this further, that though I be not of kin to them by birth, nor one of the same country with them, yet do I desire these favors to be done them, since all men are the workmanship of God; and I am sensible that he is well-pleased with those that do good. I do therefore put up this petition to thee, to do good to them."

3. When Aristeus was saying thus, the king looked upon him with a cheerful and joyful countenance, and said, "How many ten thousands dost thou suppose there are of such as want to be made free?" To which Andreas replied, as he stood by, and said," A few more than ten times ten thousand." The king made answer, "And is this a small gift that thou askest, Aristeus?" But Sosibius, and the rest that stood by, said that he ought to offer such a thank-offering as was worthy of his greatness of soul, to that God who had given him his kingdom. With this answer he was much pleased; and gave order, that when they paid the soldiers their wages, they should lay down [a hundred and] twenty drachmas for every one of the slaves? And he promised to publish a magnificent decree, about what they requested, which should confirm what Aristeus had proposed, and especially what God willed should be done; whereby he said he would not only set those free who had been led away captive by his father and his army, but those who were in this kingdom before, and those also, if any such there were, who had been brought away since. And when they said that their redemption money would amount to above four hundred talents, he granted it. A copy of which decree I have determined to preserve, that the magnanimity of this king may be made known. Its contents were as follows: "Let ail those who were soldiers under our father, and who, when they overran Syria and Phoenicia, and laid waste Judea, took the Jews captives, and made them slaves, and brought them into our cities, and into this country, and then sold them; as also all those that were in my kingdom before them, and if there be any that have been lately brought thither, - be made free by those that possess them; and let them accept of [a hundred and] twenty drachmas for every slave. And let the soldiers receive this redemption money with their pay, but the rest out of the king's treasury: for I suppose that they were made captives without our father's consent, and against equity; and that their country was harassed by the insolence of the soldiers, and that, by removing them into Egypt, the soldiers have made a great profit by them. Out of regard therefore to justice, and out of pity to those that have been tyrannized over, contrary to equity, I enjoin those that have such Jews in their service to set them at liberty, upon the receipt of the before-mentioned sum; and that no one use any deceit about them, but obey what is here commanded. And I will that they give in their names within three days after the publication of this edict, to such as are appointed to execute the same, and to produce the slaves before them also, for I think it will be for the advantage of my affairs. And let every one that will inform against those that do not obey this decree, and I will that their estates be confiscated into the king's treasury." When this decree was read to the king, it at first contained the rest that is here inserted, and omitted only those Jews that had formerly been brought, and those brought afterwards, which had not been distinctly mentioned; so he added these clauses out of his humanity, and with great generosity. He also gave order that the payment, which was likely to be done in a hurry, should be divided among the king's ministers, and among the officers of his treasury. When this was over, what the king had decreed was quickly brought to a conclusion; and this in no more than seven days' time, the number of the talents paid for the captives being above four hundred and sixty, and this, because their masters required the [hundred and] twenty drachmas for the children also, the king having, in effect, commanded that these should be paid for, when he said in his decree, that they should receive the forementioned sum for every slave.

4. Now when this had been done after so magnificent a manner, according to the king's inclinations, he gave order to Demetrius to give him in writing his sentiments concerning the transcribing of the Jewish books; for no part of the administration is done rashly by these kings, but all things are managed with great circumspection. On which account I have subjoined a copy of these epistles, and set down the multitude of the vessels sent as gifts [to Jerusalem], and the construction of every one, that the exactness of the artificers' workmanship, as it appeared to those that saw them, and which workman made every vessel, may be made manifest, and. this on account of the excellency of the vessels themselves. Now the copy of the epistle was to this purpose: "Demetrius to the great king. When thou, O king, gavest me a charge concerning the collection of books that were wanting to fill your library, and concerning the care that ought to be taken about such as are imperfect, I have used the utmost diligence about those matters. And I let you know, that we want the books of the Jewish legislation, with some others; for they are written in the Hebrew characters, and being in the language of that nation, are to us unknown. It hath also happened to them, that they have been transcribed more carelessly than they ought to have been, because they have not had hitherto royal care taken about them. Now it is necessary that thou shouldst have accurate copies of them. And indeed this legislation is full of hidden wisdom, and entirely blameless, as being the legislation of God; for which cause it is, as Hecateus of Abdera says, that the poets and historians make no mention of it, nor of those men who lead their lives according to it, since it is a holy law, and ought not to be published by profane mouths. If then it please thee, O king, thou mayst write to the high priest of the Jews, to send six of the elders out of every tribe, and those such as are most skillful of the laws, that by their means we may learn the clear and agreeing sense of these books, and may obtain an accurate interpretation of their contents, and so may have such a collection of these as may be suitable to thy desire."

5. When this epistle was sent to the king, he commanded that an epistle should be drawn up for Eleazar, the Jewish high priest, concerning these matters; and that they should inform him of the release of the Jews that had been in slavery among them. He also sent fifty talents of gold for the making of large basons, and vials, and cups, and an immense quantity of precious stones. He also gave order to those who had the custody of the chest that contained those stones, to give the artificers leave to choose out what sorts of them they pleased. He withal appointed, that a hundred talents in money should be sent to the temple for sacrifices, and for other uses. Now I will give a description of these vessels, and the manner of their construction, but not till after I have set down a copy of the epistle which was written to Eleazar the high priest, who had obtained that dignity on the occasion following: When Onias the high priest was dead, his son Simon became his successor. He was called Simon the

Just because of both his piety towards God, and his kind disposition to those of his own nation. When he was dead, and had left a young son, who was called Onias, Simon's brother Eleazar, of whom we are speaking, took the high priesthood; and he it was to whom Ptolemy wrote, and that in the manner following: "King Ptolemy to Eleazar the high priest, sendeth greeting. There are many Jews who now dwell in my kingdom, whom the Persians, when they were in power, carried captives. These were honored by my father; some of them he placed in the army, and gave them greater pay than ordinary; to others of them, when they came with him into Egypt, he committed his garrisons, and the guarding of them, that they might be a terror to the Egyptians. And when I had taken the government, I treated all men with humanity, and especially those that are thy fellow citizens, of whom I have set free above a hundred thousand that were slaves, and paid the price of their redemption to their masters out of my own revenues; and those that are of a fit age, I have admitted into them number of my soldiers. And for such as are capable of being faithful to me, and proper for my court, I have put them in such a post, as thinking this [kindness done to them] to be a very great and an acceptable gift, which I devote to God for his providence over me. And as I am desirous to do what will be grateful to these, and to all the other Jews in the habitable earth, I have determined to procure an interpretation of your law, and to have it translated out of Hebrew into Greek, and to be deposited in my library. Thou wilt therefore do well to choose out and send to me men of a good character, who are now elders in age, and six in number out of every tribe. These, by their age, must be skillful in the laws, and of abilities to make an accurate interpretation of them; and when this shall be finished, I shall think that I have done a work glorious to myself. And I have sent to thee Andreas, the captain of my guard, and Aristeus, men whom I have in very great esteem; by whom I have sent those first-fruits which I have dedicated to the temple, and to the sacrifices, and to other uses, to the value of a hundred talents. And if thou wilt send to us, to let us know what thou wouldst have further, thou wilt do a thing acceptable to me."

6. When this epistle of the king was brought to Eleazar, he wrote an answer to it with all the respect possible: "Eleazar the high priest to king Ptolemy, sendeth greeting. If thou and thy queen Arsinoe, and thy children, be well, we are entirely satisfied. When we received thy epistle, we greatly rejoiced at thy intentions; and when the multitude were gathered together, we read it to them, and thereby made them sensible of the piety thou hast towards God. We also showed them the twenty vials of gold, and thirty of silver, and the five large basons, and the table for the shew-bread; as also the hundred talents for the sacrifices, and for the making what shall be needful at the temple; which things Andreas and Aristeus, those most honored friends of thine, have brought us; and truly they are persons of an excellent character, and of great learning, and worthy of thy virtue. Know then that we will gratify thee in what is for thy advantage, though we do what we used not to do before; for we ought to make a return for the numerous acts of kindness which thou hast done to our countrymen. We immediately, therefore, offered sacrifices for thee and thy sister, with thy children and friends; and the multitude made prayers, that thy affairs may be to thy mind, and that thy kingdom may be preserved in peace, and that the translation of our law may come to the conclusion thou desirest, and be for thy advantage. We have also chosen six elders out of every tribe, whom we have sent, and the law with them. It will be thy part, out of thy piety and justice, to send back the law, when it hath been translated, and to return those to us that bring it in safety. Farewell."

7. This was the reply which the high priest made. But it does not seem to me to be necessary to set down the names of the seventy [two] elders who were sent by Eleazar, and carried the law, which yet were subjoined at the end of the epistle. However, I thought it not improper to give an account of those very valuable and artificially contrived vessels which the king sent to God, that all may see how great a regard the king had for God; for the king allowed a vast deal of expenses for these vessels, and came often to the workmen, and viewed their works, and suffered nothing of carelessness or negligence to be any damage to their operations. And I will relate how rich they were as well as I am able, although perhaps the nature of this history may not require such a description; but I imagine I shall thereby recommend the elegant taste and magnanimity of this king to those that read this history.

8. And first I will describe what belongs to the table. It was indeed in the king's mind to make this table vastly large in its dimensions; but then he gave orders that they should learn what was the magnitude of the table which was already at Jerusalem, and how large it was, and whether there was a possibility of making one larger than it. And when he was informed how large that was which was already there, and that nothing hindered but a larger might be made, he said that he was willing to have one made that should be five times as large as the present table; but his fear was, that it might be then useless in their sacred ministrations by its too great largeness; for he desired that the gifts he presented them should not only be there for show, but should be useful also in their sacred ministrations. According to which reasoning, that the former table was made of so moderate a size for use, and not for want of gold, he resolved that he would not exceed the former table in largeness; but would make it exceed it in the variety and elegancy of its materials. And as he was sagacious in observing the nature of all things, and in having a just notion of what was new and surprising, and where there was no sculptures, he would invent such as were proper by his own skill, and would show them to the workmen, he commanded that such sculptures should now be made, and that those which were delineated should be most accurately formed by a constant regard to their delineation.

9. When therefore the workmen had undertaken to make the table, they framed it in length two cubits [and a half], in breadth one cubit, and in height one cubit and a half; and the entire structure of the work was of gold. They withal made a crown of a hand-breadth round it, with wave-work wreathed about it, and with an engraving which imitated a cord, and was admirably turned on its three parts; for as they were of a triangular figure, every angle had the same disposition of its sculptures, that when you turned them about, the very same form of them was turned about without any variation. Now that part of the crown-work that was enclosed under the table had its sculptures very beautiful; but that part which went round on the outside was more elaborately adorned with most beautiful ornaments, because it was exposed to sight, and to the view of the spectators; for which reason it was that both those sides which were extant above the rest were acute, and none of the angles, which we before told you were three, appeared less than another, when the table was turned about. Now into the cordwork thus turned were precious stones inserted, in rows parallel one to the other, enclosed in golden buttons, which had ouches in them; but the parts which were on the side of the crown, and were exposed to the sight, were adorned with a row of oval figures obliquely placed, of the most excellent sort of precious stones, which imitated rods laid close, and encompassed the table round about. But under these oval figures, thus engraven, the workmen had put a crown all round it, where the nature of all sorts of fruit was represented, insomuch that the bunches of grapes hung up. And when they had made the stones to represent all the kinds of fruit before mentioned, and that each in its proper color, they made them fast with gold round the whole table. The like disposition of the oval figures, and of the engraved rods, was framed under the crown, that the table might on each side show the same appearance of variety and elegancy of its ornaments; so that neither the position of the wave-work nor of the crown might be different, although the table were turned on the other side, but that the prospect of the same artificial contrivances might be extended as far as the feet; for there was made a plate of gold four fingers broad, through the entire breadth of the table, into which they inserted the feet, and then fastened them to the table by buttons and button-holes, at the place where the crown was situate, that so on what side soever of the table one should stand, it might exhibit the very same view of the exquisite workmanship, and of the vast expeses bestowed upon it: but upon the table itself they engraved a meander, inserting into it very valuable stones in the middle like stars, of various colors; the carbuncle and the emerald, each of which sent out agreeable rays of light to the spectators; with such stones of other sorts also as were most curious and best esteemed, as being most precious in their kind. Hard by this meander a texture of net-work ran round it, the middle of which appeared like a rhombus, into which were inserted rock-crystal and amber, which, by the great resemblance of the appearance they made, gave wonderful delight to those that saw them. The chapiters of the feet imitated the first buddings of lilies, while their leaves were bent and laid under the table, but so that the chives were seen standing upright within them. Their bases were made of a carbuncle; and the place at the bottom, which rested on that carbuncle, was one palm deep, and eight fingers in breadth. Now they had engraven upon it with a very fine tool, and with a great deal of pains, a branch of ivy and tendrils of the vine, sending forth clusters of grapes, that you would guess they were nowise different from real tendrils; for they were so very thin, and so very far extended at their extremities, that they were moved with the wind, and made one believe that they were the product of nature, and not the representation of art. They also made the entire workmanship of the table appear to be threefold, while the joints of the several parts were so united together as to be invisible, and the places where they joined could not be distinguished. Now the thickness of the table was not less than half a cubit. So that this gift, by the king's great generosity, by the great value of the materials, and the variety of its exquisite structure, and the artificer's skill in imitating nature with graying tools, was at length brought to perfection, while the king was very desirous, that though in largeness it were not to be different from that which was already dedicated to God, yet that in exquisite workmanship, and the novelty of the contrivances, and in the splendor of its construction, it should far exceed it, and be more illustrious than that was.

10. Now of the cisterns of gold there were two, whose sculpture was of scale-work, from its basis to its belt-like circle, with various sorts of stones enchased in the spiral circles. Next to which there was upon it a meander of a cubit in height; it was composed of stones of all sorts of colors. And next to this was the rod-work engraven; and next to that was a rhombus in a texture of net-work, drawn out to the brim of the basin, while small shields, made of stones, beautiful in their kind, and of four fingers' depth, filled up the middle parts. About the top of the basin were wreathed the leaves of lilies, and of the convolvulus, and the tendrils of vines in a circular manner. And this was the construction of the two cisterns of gold, each containing two firkins. But those which were of silver were much more bright and splendid than looking-glasses, and you might in them see the images that fell upon them more plainly than in the other. The king also ordered thirty vials; those of which the parts that were of gold, and filled up with precious stones, were shadowed over with the leaves of ivy and of vines, artificially engraven. And these were the vessels that were after an extraordinary manner brought to this perfection, partly by the skill of the workmen, who were admirable in such fine work, but much more by the diligence and generosity of the king, who not only supplied the artificers abundantly, and with great generosity, with what they wanted, but he forbade public audiences for the time, and came and stood by the workmen, and saw the whole operation. And this was the cause why the workmen were so accurate in their performance, because they had regard to the king, and to his great concern about the vessels, and so the more indefatigably kept close to the work.

11. And these were what gifts were sent by Ptolemy to Jerusalem, and dedicated to God there. But when Eleazar the high priest had devoted them to God, and had paid due respect to those that brought them, and had given them presents to be carried to the king, he dismissed them. And when they were come to Alexandria, and Ptolemy heard that they were come,and that the seventy elders were come also, he presently sent for Andreas and Aristens, his ambassadors, who came to him, and delivered him the epistle which they brought him from the high priest, and made answer to all the questions he put to them by word of mouth. He then made haste to meet the elders that came from Jerusalem for the interpretation of the laws; and he gave command, that every body who came on other occasions should be sent away, which was a thing surprising, and what he did not use to do; for those that were drawn thither upon such occasions used to come to him on the fifth day, but ambassadors at the month's end. But when he had sent those away, he waited for these that were sent by Eleazar; but as the old men came in with the presents, which the high priest had given them to bring to the king, and with the membranes, upon which they had their laws written in golden letters he put questions to them concerning those books; and when they had taken off the covers wherein they were wrapt up, they showed him the membranes. So the king stood admiring the thinness of those membranes, and the exactness of the junctures, which could not be perceived; (so exactly were they connected one with another;) and this he did for a considerable time. He then said that he returned them thanks for coming to him, and still greater thanks to him that sent them; and, above all, to that God whose laws they appeared to be. Then did the elders, and those that were present with them, cry out with one voice, and wished all happiness to the king. Upon which he fell into tears by the violence of the pleasure he had, it being natural to men to afford the same indications in great joy that they do under sorrows. And when he had bid them deliver the books to those that were appointed to receive them, he saluted the men, and said that it was but just to discourse, in the first place, of the errand they were sent about, and then to address himself to themselves. He promised, however, that he would make this day on which they came to him remarkable and eminent every year through the whole course of his life; for their coming to him, and the victory which he gained over Antigonus by sea, proved to be on the very same day. He also gave orders that they should sup with him; and gave it in charge that they should have excellent lodgings provided for them in the upper part of the city.

12. Now he that was appointed to take care of the reception of strangers, Nicanor by name, called for Dorotheus, whose duty it was to make provision for them, and bid him prepare for every one of them what should be requisite for their diet and way of living; which thing was ordered by the king after this manner: he took care that those that belonged to every city, which did not use the same way of living, that all things should be prepared for them according to the custom of those that came to him, that, being feasted according to the usual method of their own way of living, they might be the better pleased, and might not be uneasy at any thing done to them from which they were naturally averse. And this was now done in the case of these men by Dorotheus, who was put into this office because of his great skill in such matters belonging to common life; for he took care of all such matters as concerned the reception of strangers, and appointed them double seats for them to sit on, according as the king had commanded him to do; for he had commanded that half of their seats should be set at his right hand, and the other half behind his table, and took care that no respect should be omitted that could be shown them. And when they were thus set down, he bid Dorotheus to minister to all those that were come to him from Judea, after the manner they used to be ministered to; for which cause he sent away their sacred heralds, and those that slew the sacrifices, and the rest that used to say grace; but called to one of those that were come to him, whose name was Eleazar, who w a priest, and desired him to say grace; who then stood in the midst of them, and prayed, that all prosperity might attend the king, and those that were his subjects. Upon which an acclamation was made by the whole company, with joy and a great noise; and when that. was over, they fell to eating their supper, and to the enjoyment of what was set before them. And at a little interval afterward, when the king thought a sufficient time had been interposed, he began to talk philosophically to them, and he asked every one of them a philosophical question and such a one as might give light in those inquiries; and when they had explained all the problems that had been proposed by the king about every point, he was well-pleased with their answers. This took up the twelve days in which they were treated; and he that pleases may learn the particular questions in that book of Aristeus, which he wrote on this very occasion.

13. And while not the king only, but the philosopher Menedemus also, admired them, and said that all things were governed by Providence, and that it was probable that thence it was that such force or beauty was discovered in these men's words, they then left off asking any more such questions. But the king said that he had gained very great advantages by their coming, for that he had received this profit from them, that he had learned how he ought to rule his subjects. And he gave order that they should have every one three talents given them, and that those that were to conduct them to their lodging should do it. Accordingly, when three days were over, Demetrius took them, and went over the causeway seven furlongs long: it was a bank in the sea to an island. And when they had gone over the bridge, he proceeded to the northern parts, and showed them where they should meet, which was in a house that was built near the shore, and was a quiet place, and fit for their discoursing together about their work. When he had brought them thither, he entreated them (now they had all things about them which they wanted for the interpretation of their law) that they would suffer nothing to interrupt them in their work. Accordingly, they made an accurate interpretation, with great zeal and great pains, and this they continued to do till the ninth hour of the day; after which time they relaxed, and took care of their body, while their food was provided for them in great plenty: besides, Dorotheus, at the king's command, brought them a great deal of what was provided for the king himself. But in the morning they came to the court and saluted Ptolemy, and then went away to their former place, where, when they had washed their hands, and purified themselves, they betook themselves to the interpretation of the laws. Now when the law was transcribed, and the labor of interpretation was over, which came to its conclusion in seventy-two days, Demetrius gathered all the Jews together to the place where the laws were translated, and where the interpreters were, and read them over. The multitude did also approve of those elders that were the interpreters of the law. They withal commended Demetrius for his proposal, as the inventor of what was greatly for their happiness; and they desired that he would give leave to their rulers also to read the law. Moreover, they all, both the priest and the ancientest of the elders, and the principal men of their commonwealth, made it their request, that since the interpretation was happily finished, it might continue in the state it now was, and might not be altered. And when they all commended that determination of theirs, they enjoined, that if any one observed either any thing superfluous, or any thing omitted, that he would take a view of it again, and have it laid before them, and corrected; which was a wise action of theirs, that when the thing was judged to have been well done, it might continue for ever.

14. So the king rejoiced when he saw that his design of this nature was brought to perfection, to so great advantage; and he was chiefly delighted with hearing the Laws read to him; and was astonished at the deep meaning and wisdom of the legislator. And he began to discourse with Demetrius, "How it came to pass, that when this legislation was so wonderful, no one, either of the poets or of the historians, had made mention of it." Demetrius made answer, "that no one durst be so bold as to touch upon the description of these laws, because they were Divine and venerable, and because some that had attempted it were afflicted by God." He also told him, that "Theopompus was desirous of writing somewhat about them, but was thereupon disturbed in his mind for above thirty days' time; and upon some intermission of his distemper, he appeased God [by prayer], as suspecting that his madness proceeded from that cause." Nay, indeed, he further saw in a dream, that his distemper befell him while he indulged too great a curiosity about Divine matters, and was desirous of publishing them among common men; but when he left off that attempt, he recovered his understanding again. Moreover, he informed him of Theodectes, the tragic poet, concerning whom it was reported, that when in a certain dramatic representation he was desirous to make mention of things that were contained in the sacred books, he was afflicted with a darkness in his eyes; and that upon his being conscious of the occasion of his distemper, and appeasing God [by prayer], he was freed from that affliction.

15. And when the king had received these books from Demetrius, as we have said already, he adored them, and gave order that great care should be taken of them, that they might remain uncorrupted. He also desired that the interpreters would come often to him out of Judea, and that both on account of the respects that he would pay them, and on account of the presents he would make them; for he said it was now but just to send them away, although if, of their own accord, they would come to him hereafter, they should obtain all that their own wisdom might justly require, and what his generosity was able to give them. So he then sent them away, and gave to every one of them three garments of the best sort, and two talents of gold, and a cup of the value of one talent, and the furniture of the room wherein they were feasted. And these were the things he presented to them. But by them he sent to Eleazar the high priest ten beds, with feet of silver, and the furniture to them belonging, and a cup of the value of thirty talents; and besides these, ten garments, and purple, and a very beautiful crown, and a hundred pieces of the finest woven linen; as also vials and dishes, and vessels for pouring, and two golden cisterns to be dedicated to God. He also desired him, by an epistle, that he would give these interpreters leave, if any of them were desirous of coming to him, because he highly valued a conversation with men of such learning, and should be very willing to lay out his wealth upon such men. And this was what came to the Jews, and was much to their glory and honor, from Ptolemy Philadelphus.

SO YOU THOUGHT YOU WERE A FOLLOWER OF JESUS.....YOU MIGHT NEED TO RECONSIDER

Let me begin with a quote from the New Testament…from an epistle written to non-Jews like most of our readers.

2 Cor. 13:5

Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your ownselves……

I think that this is a very good idea to prove to ourselves that what we believe is true; in fact I have practiced self-examination of such religious beliefs in light of the facts regarding the "real historical Yeshua" for over a decade. Because of such self-examination in light of my discoveries as I combed through 2000 years of Biblical history, culture, as well as in-depth analysis of Biblical language, I have been forced to change much of my religious belief system along the way. It is my desire that this article challenge you to scrutinize your religious beliefs as I have been challenged over the years. May God witness truth to your soul.

Answer for yourself: Was Yeshua a Christian and would he ascribe today to the vast majority of doctrines taught in his name in churches which go by his name as well?

Well let us investigate. But first we need to set the stage for what is coming next. Try and be as honest with yourself as possible in answering these next questions.

TO WHICH RELIGION WOULD A PERSON BE A MEMBER IF HE DID THE FOLLOWING?

- Was circumcised on the eighth day.
- Kept Sabbath from Friday sundown to Saturday sundown.
- Attended a synagogue regularly.
- Kept the Biblical Festivals such as Passover, Hag Ha Matzah (Unleavened Bread), Shavuot (Pentecost), Rosh HaShanah, Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), Sukkoth (Tabernacles) and Hanukkah.
- Was a citizen and friend of Israel and believed Israel is the example for all non-Jewish people in the world
- His Bible contained the Torah, the Prophets and the Writings ONLY!
- Quoted passages as authoritative from the Mishnah (the Oral Law).
- Taught that Deuteronomy 6:4 was the most important commandment.
- Wore a tallith and phylacteries in religious services
- Did not eat unclean foods
- Taught the eternalness of God's Covenants and His Laws

- Taught that faith without works is no faith at all
- Taught that salvation is more concerned with events in the here and now than what occurs beyond the grave

I suppose that most of you came up with the same answer…..you don't have to be a scholar to recognize that one that practiced such a faith does not practice Christianity.....he holds to the teachings of Judaism.

NOW, LET'S TAKE A LOOK AT ANOTHER PERSON. SEE IF YOU CAN IDENTIFY THE RELIGION OF THIS PERSON

- Keeps the Sabbath on Sunday which is the legacy of Sun worship today.
- Attends a church which most likely rejects most things Jewish.
- Keeps Easter and Christmas which were pagan festivals made to look religious to those who don't know the difference.
- Carries a Bible containing an Old Testament and a New Testament which ironically contradicts the Old.
- Stresses a person's beliefs over his actions.
- Teaches that people had to be "saved" by acknowledging a creed or an established set of beliefs in order to go to heaven.
- Teaches that they are not under the law and that the Law has passed away and they are under grace.
- Teaches that the church had replaced Israel as God's people and sees itself as the fulfillment of prophecies given to Israel.
- Teaches that you can eat anything…even Biblically unclean foods
- Attaches no special significance to circumcision

I bet you got the right answer again – a Christian.

GOING DEEPER THAN YOU POSSIBLY HAVE EVEN GONE BEFORE

Now let's take this discussion one more step by answering this question.

Answer for yourself: If a Jew wanted to become a member of a Christian religion could he continue practicing Judaism in the church?

The answer is so simple. You would only have to ask your Pastor that one question to get the answer. Probably in the 99.9% of the cases the answer would be - NO!

TURN ABOUT IS FAIR PLAY

Answer for yourself: If a Christian wanted to become a convert to Judaism could he continue practicing Christianity and the items listed above? Again the answer is rather obvious.

Now, the percentage moves upwards, probably in 100% of the cases the answer would be - NO!

It is very apparent that not only are Judaism and Christianity different religions, they are exclusive in many ways. This reveals an amazing fact which can be seen by asking one very simple question –

WHICH RELIGION DID YESHUA BELONG TO...CHRISTIANITY OR JUDAISM?

- Was circumcised on the eighth day.
- Kept Sabbath from Friday sundown to Saturday sundown.
- Attended a synagogue regularly.
- Kept the Biblical Festivals such as Passover, Hag Ha Matzah (Unleavened Bread), Shavuot (Pentecost), Rosh HaShanah, Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), Sukkoth (Tabernacles) and Hanukkah.
- Was a citizen and friend of Israel and believed Israel is the example for all non-Jewish people in the world
- His Bible contained the Torah, the Prophets and the Writings ONLY!
- Quoted passages as authoritative from the Mishnah (the Oral Law).
- Taught that Deuteronomy 6:4 was the most important commandment.
- Wore a tallith and phylacteries in religious services
- Did not eat unclean foods
- Taught the eternalness of God's Covenants and His Laws
- Taught that faith without works is no faith at all
- Taught that salvation is more concerned with events in the here and now than what occurs beyond the grave

Now for the easy part. The answer to the above question is a matter of historical record which is easily attested to by the New Testament itself-- Yeshua was a Jew, not a Christian and he was certainly not both. It is clear that Yeshua was a practicing Jew who lived a very observant Jewish life-style.

In fact we cannot find any instance whatsoever where Yeshua ever: Kept the Sabbath on Sunday, attended or affiliated with any group which rejected things Jewish, kept the pagan festival of Ishtar/Easter or the sun god's birthday (Saturnalia…December 25th….Christmas) which were pagan festivals made to look religious to us today, ever taught anything that contradicted the Old Testament as does much in the New Testament, ever stressed a person's beliefs over his actions, ever taught that people had to be "saved" by acknowledging a creed or an established set of beliefs in order to go to heaven, ever taught that people are not under the law or that the Law had passed away and they were under grace alone, ever taught that the church had replaced Israel as God's people, and ever taught that you can eat anything…even Biblically unclean foods.

YESHUA NEVER RENOUNCED JUDAISM OR QUIT BEING A JEW

An amazing discovery for any Christian is the fact that there is simply no evidence that Yeshua ever renounced Judaism and quit being a Jew. Also, his teachings do not indicate that he ever wanted any Jew to renounce their Judaism and join a new religion. If this revelation every breaks into your conscious mind then you will have to confront Gentile Christianity for what it has actually become despite Yeshua's wishes or example set for us.

Answer for yourself: How then, did Yeshua get credited with the distinct label that he was the person responsible for creating a new religion?

Answer for yourself: How did Yeshua get credit for creating another religion which opposed the religion and way of life he continued to live…even up to his death?

Let us try to answer questions raised by such an assumption:

LOOKING THROUGH THE EYES OF A JEWISH RABBI NAMED YESHUA

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi prohibit circumcision or downplay its significance?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi change the Sabbath to another day…let alone to the day set aside for sun worship by the pagans?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi create a replacement for the synagogue?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi substitute a pagan feast which was clearly idolatrous, Ishtar (Easter), for Passover?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi want his followers to celebrate the birth of a Roman god (Saturnalia -- December 25)?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi teach his students to not keep the biblical commandments or that they no longer applied when God already said they were forever?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi teach Gentiles to hate Jews?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi add books to the Torah in spite of the warning in Deuteronomy forbidding the changing or adding to the Word of God?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi replace Deuteronomy 6:4 as the most important commandment?

Answer for yourself: Would a rabbi teach Gentiles that it is permissible to eat unclean food when Noah, himself a non-Jew separated animals based on the principle of clean/unclean long before there were any Jews?

The answer to all the above questions is that a rabbi wouldn't, and that includes a rabbi named Yeshua!

TOUGH - THOUGHT PROVOKING QUESTIONS YOU NEED TO ANSWER FOR YOURSELF

Answer for yourself: If Yeshua didn't create a new anti-Jewish religion, who did?

Answer for yourself: Who is responsible and what were their motives in replacing the faith of Yeshua with a faith about Yeshua?

Answer for yourself: Was it the men who acquired leadership after Yeshua' departure and the death of the Apostles who did such a thing ?

Answer for yourself: Were those responsible for changing the faith of Yeshua actually Jews or Non-Jews and were their motives in changing Jewish doctrines consistent with anti-Semitism?

Answer for yourself: Did they continue teaching Yeshua's message and his gospel or did they change Yeshua's message in places, and are you, at the present not yet aware of it at your present level of knowledge?

THE BOOK OF ACTS PAINTS US A PICTURE WE WOULD DO WELL TO EXAMINE CLOSELY

The book of Acts provides us with some very valuable information too long overlooked by most Christians. Acts 21:17-25 records Paul's return to Jerusalem and his meeting with the leaders of the "church." Keep in mind that these were the men who had been personally taught by and lived with Yeshua. Their words provide us with some very enlightening information. The translation given below is based on a cultural and historical methodology. Your translation most probably reflects the doctrines of the Roman church and therefore may differ.

"You see, brother (referring to the Apostle Paul), how many thousands of Jews have become faithful (observant). All of them are zealous for the Torah (Law). They have been informed that you have taught the Jews of the Diaspora to not keep the Torah, that they should not circumcise their children or live according to the Jewish religion.... Take these men and do the following... so that everybody will know that there is no truth in these reports about your teachings, but that you yourself are living an observant life-style and keeping the Torah."

REMEMBERING THAT THIS IS A PICTURE OF JESUS' CHURCH……

A quick summary provides us with some very significant information. Understanding that this passage reflects events which occurred long after Yeshua's death then I ask you to be truthful to the text as well as yourself in asking yourself this: Is your church producing the same results?

- Jews who believe in Yeshua are becoming more faithful (observant to the Law) because of the message taught by Yeshua's followers.
- The message of Yeshua's church caused adherents to become zealous for the Torah (Law).
- The members of Yeshua's church kept the Laws of Moses (the Torah).
- The members of Yeshua's church circumcised their children.
- The members of Yeshua's church lived according to the traditions of the elders of Judaism (the Jewish religion).

Notice that Paul did as he was requested - Paul example, at least while he was in Jerusalem under the watchful eyes of the Apostles, wasn't teaching the Jews to abandon their religion. On the contrary, Paul's behavior and example was one as "under the law" and as one who lived an observant Jewish life-style.

Answer for yourself: How then could he have been the author of a doctrine that advocated rejecting the law as is ascribed to him by most Christians today?

Answer for yourself: Not meaning to over-stress this point, but are you really getting the importance of this message as taught by Yeshua's church in Palestine?

IS YOUR CHURCH PREACHING THE SAME GOSPEL AND MESSAGE AS YESHUA'S CHURCH?

Again looking at Acts 21 for our information……let us examine what we are taught by this New Testament picture:

- The message of the apostles caused Jews to repent and become observant Jews who practiced Judaism faithfully.
- The apostles were causing Jews to become eager for the Torah and to pursue it with fervor. It is clear that they were not teaching them that "they were under grace and no longer under the law" or that “the law has passed away after Yeshua’s death” as we have been told today. This one point is in complete opposition to most fundamental teaching of every modern Christian doctrine.

- The Jewish members of the early church continued to circumcise their children. In other words, they continued to see themselves as participant's in the Abrahamic Covenant, just as every practicing Jew does today. Their children were Jews, not members of some new mystical religion that replaced Judaism.
- The Jewish members of the early church continued to practice Judaism. They did not switch to a new religion.

HOW ARE WE TO INTERPRET PAUL’S ACTIONS?

When we look at Paul's actions, after being ordered by James to take several men with him to the Temple, thereby paying for their animal sacrifices in order to prove that he was an observant Jew by bringing blood sacrifices and sin offerings necessary in finishing his Nazarite vow, we are faced with two possibilities: (A) Paul intentionally deceived the apostles and the Jews in Jerusalem; or, (B) Paul's image and/or the teachings attributed Paul may have been altered by the Roman Church a hundred or more years later.

Answer for yourself: Did Paul intentionally deceive the apostles by faking his true beliefs when bringing sacrifices in the Temple after Yeshua’s death?

Answer for yourself: If Paul did deceive them, could you put much confidence in his teachings at other places in the New Testament? Remember he already has said that he can become anything to anyone to prove his argument and accomplish his goals.

Answer for yourself: On the other hand, if Paul's words were changed by the Roman Church could we base our foundational beliefs on forged documents?

Christianity, almost universally, requires a Jew to convert to Christianity before he can become a member of the church or be saved. This conversion process forces the Jew to renounce his or her Judaism and terminate or redefine many Biblical and Jewish practices.

Having read this article so far, please think deeply while answering these next questions:

Answer for yourself: Would your church require a Jew to renounce or stop practicing Judaism if he or she wanted to become a member?

Answer for yourself: How many circumcisions have you attended for the children of Jewish members of your church?

Answer for yourself: How many of your church's members are Jewish and are zealous for the Torah and are pursuing it with fervor?

Answer for yourself: Does your church conduct at least one Torah study per week?

Answer for yourself: How many of your church's Jewish members are observant Jews?

Answer for yourself: When was the last time you attended a Passover Seder, or a Rosh HaShanah or Yom Kippur service at your church?

Answer for yourself: Do you have a rabbi or a minister well educated in the Hebraic Roots of Christianity leading your church?

Your answers to the above questions are probably -- Yes, None, None, No, None, Never and Minister.

I want you take some time to think about the next question before you answer it.

Answer for yourself: What would your church require a rabbi to do if he applied for membership?

Answer for yourself: Would they allow him to continue to be a rabbi, practice Judaism, teach the Torah, wear his prayer shawl, observe all the Jewish festivals and teach the members that they were under the Law?

Answer for yourself: What if that rabbi was Yeshua?

Are you beginning to see the truth?

Without a great deal of effort it becomes glaringly apparent that neither Rabbi Yeshua, the apostles nor the Paul of Acts 21, would be allowed to join a Christian Church the likes of which we see today. On the other hand, it is also clear that Rabbi Yeshua would not participate in any religion that not only opposes, but is actively dedicated to destroying his Father's religion!

Gentile Christianity has for centuries felt it was given a mandate from God to "save the world." This is the goal and stated mission of Christianity.

THE SILENT SLAUGHTER OF TRUTH

Answer for yourself: How is this mission to "save the world" to be accomplished?

Just ask the Southern Baptist Convention who just last year vowed to win every Jew to Yeshua by the year 2000. To put it very simply, the goal is to convert every Jew (non-Christian) to Christianity. The Jewish convert must renounce his Judaism (or any non-Christian religion he may hold), agree to accept the doctrines of Gentile Christianity and oppose any religion that opposes Gentile Christianity.

Instead of a physical holy war (Jihad), Gentile Christianity has engaged in a doctrinal holy war. As I stated above, Christianity is an exclusive religion. Christians are not allowed to simultaneously practice Islam, Buddhism, Judaism or any other religion. Therefore, if Christianity was to attain its goal of "getting every person on the face of the earth to believe in Yeshua," including all the Jews, Judaism would be totally destroyed and cease to exist. If this were ever to happen, and I pray it does not, then Christianity would have the dubious honor which Hitler in vain tried to achieve; namely the eradication of not only the Jewish people from the face of this planet, but the total destruction of the true faith of Yeshua…Biblical Judaism.

This would accomplish something that the crusaders, the inquisition, Hitler and a number of others have failed to accomplish.

Answer for yourself: How do you think a Jewish Yeshua would react to the idea that such a mission was being carried out in his name?

This really gets weird when you think about it! Christians base their proof for their ultimate salvation on a Jewish rabbi named Yeshua (Jesus), who was an observant Jew who faithfully practiced Judaism. On the one hand, his religion would most probably not allow him to practice modern Christianity. On the other hand, modern Christianity would not allow him to practice its religion without first renouncing his religion -- Judaism!

This should present a very important challenge to every Christian:

If a Jewish Yeshua could not, and would not, practice a religion dedicated to destroying his religion, how can anyone who bases their salvation on Rabbi Yeshua participate in and perpetuate it?

Answer for yourself: Would Rabbi Yeshua agree with the church's salvation message which is based on such a system? Are you getting the drift of this discussion?

Answer for yourself: How did the religion that Rabbi Yeshua and his followers practice evolve into what it is today? To begin to unravel this problem lets ask how a religion whose foundational position focused on teaching its members "to keep the Law" became a religion whose main message was that "members are no longer under the Law."

Early Christian writers taught that the Law had been fulfilled with the coming of Yeshua. Fulfilled, as they defined it, meant that it had been canceled and therefore was of no importance to Christians. However, to Rabbi Yeshua, "fulfilled" meant (1) to keep the Law; and (2) to correctly interpret the teachings of the Bible. There is absolutely nothing said by Rabbi Yeshua that would support modern Christianity's doctrine of grace.

Next, the Roman Christian leaders focused on the story of God's unconditional and unending support. However, they claimed that this was something new and was created when God made a new covenant of grace. Again, this was unknown to Rabbi Yeshua and his apostles. Early Gentile Christian leaders and theologians continued to develop their new doctrines from the mid-second century on through the seventh century. As they refined their arguments they became much more antagonistic toward Judaism.

This Gentile anti-Judaic movement spanned almost all of Christianity -- from the Roman African communities represented by Tertullian (160-220 C.E.), to the Iranian monk Aphrahat (300-350 C.E.) of the eastern Syriac Christian tradition, and to Bishop John Chrysostom (349-400 C.E.) in Antioch.

Studies have clearly shown the extent to which leaders of the early church attacked Judaism for its position on the law, calling Jews "slavish adherents to the letter of the law." They claimed that Judaism was allowed to continue to exist primarily as an example of degradation.

Answer for yourself: What do you think that rabbi Yeshua would have thought about that position?

Origin, the third-century leader of the Christian community in Caesarea, summed up the difference between Judaism's and Roman Christianity's approaches to Scripture:

"It seems necessary also to explain how certain people by failing to read or understand Scripture correctly have given themselves up to a great many errors, since the way one ought to approach the understanding of divine letters is unknown to a great many people. And so, the Jews, through the hardness of their heart and because they wish to seem wise in themselves, have not believed in our Lord and Savior....

Now the reason that those we have just mentioned [Jews and heretical Christians] have a false understanding of these matters is quite simply that they understand Scripture not according to the spiritual meaning but according to the sound of the letter....

[But] a person ought to describe threefold in his soul the meaning of divine letters, that is, so that the simple may be edified by, so to speak, the body of the Scriptures; for that is what we call the ordinary and narrative meaning. But if any have begun to make some progress and can contemplate something more fully, they should be edified by the soul of Scripture. And those who are perfect... should be edified by that spiritual Law (Rom. 7:14) which has a shadow of the good things to come (Heb. 10:1), edified by the spirit of Scripture. Thus, just as a human being is said to be made up of body, soul, and spirit, so also is sacred Scripture, which has been granted by God's gracious dispensation for man's salvation."

This new scheme for reading Scripture, and the charge that Jews miss all but the literal meaning, made for powerful arguments. Origin's dichotomy between "letter" and "spirit," or in other words, between reading biblical materials either at their face value for norms of behavior and as a more generalized stance toward the world, set the stage throughout history for Christians to increase the fervor of the charge of legalism. Legalism became synonymous with Jewish, and therefore was viewed in a negative light. However, the word "legalism" simply means someone that "lives in accordance with or adheres to a legal system."

Answer for yourself: What would you call someone who "did not adhere to or live in accordance with a legal system"-- a Christian? The products of this anti-Jewish tradition still shapes the thoughts of over 1.6 billion Christians regarding Judaic law.

I am challenging every Christian to make a decision to return to the religion, teachings and life-style expounded by Rabbi Yeshua. Don't misunderstand what I am saying; I am not advocating adopting and accepting the current "theology or faith" about Yeshua; rather, return to the real faith of Yeshua and the place within it for the Gentile Godfearer. As I stated above, according to the book of Acts, your conversion experience to the faith of the Apostolic church of Yeshua as seen in Acts 21 should have made you zealous for the Torah and brought you back to an observant Biblical life-style as defined by the commandments of God.

Answer for yourself: Has it?

Becoming a member of Rabbi Yeshua's movement should have caused you to become a serious student of the Torah. You should be teaching the Torah to others, especially the flood of Gentiles who are coming to you to be taught.

Answer for yourself: Has it?

Answer for yourself: Is there any other way for you to be a "light to the Gentiles?"

If you are a Gentile, you will also need to take a very close look at Acts 15. Gentiles who were coming to the movement originated by Rabbi Yeshua were given very special instructions. First they were to place themselves under specific laws. For all practical purposes those laws were the Ten Commandments. Of special importance was their keeping the Jewish Sabbath and studying the Torah at the synagogue with the Jews.

Keeping the Jewish Sabbath is something that you can do immediately, however; many of you may find it difficult to locate a synagogue where you will be allowed to study the Torah. For very good reasons, after thousands of years of persecutions, the Jewish community is very cautious. I believe that as Christian Jews return to the synagogue, because of the teachings of Rabbi Yeshua, the doors will be opened wider to Gentiles desiring to know the God of Rabbi Yeshua.

Two things must be kept in mind as both Jews and Gentile Christians choose to return to the teachings of rabbi Yeshua. First, almost two thousand years of conflict between Judaism and Christianity has left many scars. Both religions have developed reactionary doctrines and theologies. A reactionary doctrine created as a reaction to the another religion's actions or doctrines.

An example would be the Jewish position concerning kneeling for prayer. Because Christians knelt for prayer, the Jews took the position that they should no longer kneel but stand for prayers. Judaism altered its form of worship because of this practice of Christianity. There have been many reactionary doctrines created both between and within both religions. This is an area of research that deserves much attention. I would challenge my readers to consider such a research project.

It must be kept in mind that the Judaism of Yeshua is not exactly the same as the Judaism of today. Also, the movement attributed to Yeshua is not the same as modern Christianity. Obviously, many things have taken place since the time of Yeshua which resulted in the separation and numerous differences between the two religions.

It is of the utmost importance for both Christians and Jews to understand these changes. You must know when the changes were made, identify the people who were responsible for making the changes, and discover why they made them. You must come to an understanding which changes were motivated by inspiration, which were produced by the hunger for power and wealth and which were the results of human frailties such as anger, rejection, fear and hatred.

As you embark on this journey you will quickly come to realize that you have stumbled upon the greatest cover-ups in history.

As you become more acquainted with the truth upon your study you will realize two very important things:

- Leaders, especially scholars, have always been aware of this information and have deliberately chosen to ignore it.
- This information has been virtually within the grasp of every American. In many cases it is as close as an encyclopedia or attainable today through the Internet.

Today, there are over 2.5 billion Christians on the face of the earth – the vast majority who believe in their heart they are true followers of Yeshua, but as I have shown you, are practicing a different religion from which Yeshua practiced. If they all returned to the teachings and life-style taught in Acts, we would see a moral and ethical revolution that would literally rock the foundations of the world and no longer would America, touted to be the most Christian nation in the world, be recognized as the world's most violent and law-breaking nation of the world. That should make you wonder what it would be like if Christians really followed the faith of Yeshua and if your church would really allow you to be like Yeshua.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #2

THE DETERMINING FACTOR FOR THE FULFILLMENT OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES AND THE UNVEILING OF KING MESSIAH…THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF ISRAEL

Yes there was a timetable for the Kingdom of God to appear. Yes there was a timetable for "the Messiah" to appear. Daniel chapter 9 teaches us that. But what most are not aware of is that this timetable is "conditional" on other factors that must be present for the fulfillment of the Messianic prophecies. This is terribly important to understand when one views "would-be Messiahs" and even Jesus for that matter.

Well there you have it; I just let the "cat" out of the bag. There were reasons why the Messianic prophecies were not fulfilled by Yeshua. There were reasons why Yeshua could not become the Messiah which the Jews waited for. But lets look at the book of Daniel again.

The part of the book of Daniel in which the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks occurs (chapter 9) has been dated about 164 B.C. The author of this portion of the book of Daniel is assuming the name of a man supposed to be living near the end of the sixth century B.C. The historical Daniel did not write it! But such Pseudepigrapha writing was very common by the Jewish in that day. Many wrote in the name of other "famous" men of the faith. Nothing new here.

This writer of Daniel 9 appears to have expected that the Era of Righteousness would come not very long after his actual time. Some thought it had come in the reign of John Hyrcanus I John Hyrcanus I died in 104 B.C.E. He was the son and successor of Simon, and ruled from 134 to 104 B.C.E. We do not know much about earlier calculations, and the one to which we have referred was worked out later when the hopes entertained of the Hasmoneans had been grievously disappointed. It is after 100 B.C. that the literature we have reveals a mounting interest in the Last Times and in the advent of messianic personalities. By the first century of our era it had become quite feverish, and had engendered a state of near hysteria among the people. You must grasp the situation at hand to properly understand the events which were to quickly unfold. It was wholly in keeping with the circumstances that a figure like John the Baptist should now appear proclaiming that the Kingdom of God was at hand, and calling upon the people to repent and save themselves from the Wrath to Come. Without wholesale repentance by the nation of Israel the prophecies would not be realized and King Messiah would not be revealed!

Answer for yourself: Why the emphasis placed upon "repentance" before the Kingdom was to come? More later but don't forget this very, very important issue because it will play an integral role in why the Kingdom did not appear and why Yeshua did not fulfill the expected Messianic prophecies.

It was no less appropriate that a man like Jesus should be convinced he was the Messiah and announce that 'the Time is fulfilled'. Yeshua taught repentance and it was the core of all that he embodied. The calculations of pious scribes confirmed the time, and if that was not enough, the conditions of the time reinforced the calculations. The time was ripe for a Divine intervention. The time was ripe for Israel to repent and turn her heart back to the "fathers" of the faith. Would she?

ISRAEL'S RESPONSIBILITY TO MERIT THE KINGDOM & HER KING….A TASK FAILED

Messianism was a product of the Jewish spirit. It was inspired by the Hebrew reading of the riddle of the creation and destiny of mankind. Though some of its features did not originate with the Hebrews, they absorbed them and brought them into relationship with a great vision of the ultimate Brotherhood of Man under the rule of the One God and Father of all men. The vision was not simply a cherished ideal: it was associated with a plan for its realization. Israel's role in the implementation of the Kingdom of God is crucial! Israel's role in preparing a place for Messiah to rule and reign is crucial! Israel's failure in this role would jeopardize the whole of the prophetic timetable as you will quickly come to see. Her failure would postpone the revelation of "the Messiah"!

If you have ever listened to anything….then listen and understand this. According to God's plan for the realization of the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth, God had chosen and set apart one nation among the nations of the world, neither numerous nor powerful, to be the recipient of his laws, and by observing them to offer a universal example. The Theocracy of Israel would be the persuasive illustration of a World Theocracy: it would be "a kingdom of priests and a holy nation" witnessing to all nations with a "King" at its head. Exod 19:6 teaches us that from the very moment a group of ex-slaves became a nation they by default incurred an eternal responsibility before God: "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel." One of the purposes of Israel's deliverance from Egypt was that they, as a holy nation and a royal priesthood before God, was to be a "light to the nations" in bringing the non-Jewish nations to God. That is what a priest does; he serves as an intermediary between man and God. Such is Israel's function then and now although you would not know it from the conditions that exist in Israel today. Needless to say often Israel failed her calling. And God would judge the nation because of it.

Now what is said next is of major importance in our understanding of the concept of Messiah and any possibility of connecting such a concept to Yeshua in the first century. Manifestly, according to this view, the redemption of humanity, and the appearance of the Kingdom of Heaven with it's Messianic King, waited upon the attainment by Israel of a state of perfect obedience to the will of God and His Commandments. By so much as Israel failed to meet the Divine requirements, by so much was the peace and well-being of mankind retarded and the appearance of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth retarded. This also meant that the appearance of King Messiah was to be hindered as well as the postponement of the fulfillment of the Jewish Messianic Prophecies in the Tanakh! The Messiah, if he were here and ready to begin his reign, would not be allowed to set upon the seat of the throne of David not would the many Prophetic passages be fulfilled in the Jewish Tanakh.

This concept has major implications for our understanding of Yeshua and the failure of the fulfillment of the Jewish Scriptures by him in the first century. Basically, Israel would either "merit" the Kingdom within the timetable according to the prophetic Scriptures of Daniel and by default her King, or else Israel would forestall such from happening. God would be the judge if Israel was worthy of the Kingdom and her King. If not, then her King would not appear. The Messiah, although present within this timetable would not be unveiled in the advent of Israel's spiritual failure as a priesthood to the world. This means the potential "would-be" Messiah, although alive in this time, would not be allowed to rule and reign. In the advent of Israel's failure in this regard the hundreds of true Jewish prophetic passages would not be fulfilled within the time period prophesied by Daniel.

The history of Israel, seen in this light, was a prolonged schooling in preparation for this glorious time. The national disposition to go astray occasionally was continually corrected by God through His infliction of appropriate punishments, conquest and oppression by foreigners, pestilence and famine, exile. Internally much depended on the guidance of rulers, priests and kings. These too were judged by whether they 'did right in the sight of the Lord'. Their failures called for an additional activity by messengers of God in a succession of prophets. If you just look at your Old Testaments you can easily see how God continually through Moses, the Judges, and then finally through the prophets to both Houses of Israel did God bring the message of "repentance" to His people. God was continually trying to prepare His nation for their highest calling: Priests to the nations. A priest is called to a higher holiness than regular people and the requirements for such an office are very stringent. Repentance was necessary for this nation of Priests. Repentance was necessary before the blessing of the Kingdom of God could be manifested along with all of its promised blessings. We must remember also that according to the "time table" of Daniel that no later than 70 C.E. the Kingdom was to appear along with King Messiah.

Given that Yeshua died just prior to the year 30 A.D. he is recorded by all three writers of the Gospels saying:

Mark 13:30

30 Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done.

Matt 24:34

34 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled.

Luke 21:32

32 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

SO WHAT DID YESHUA BELIEVE ABOUT THIS TIMETABLE OF DANIEL 9?

According to the above texts the Gospel writers share with us that evidently Yeshua understood and interpreted Daniel chapter 9 the way the traditional Rabbis did in his day! Jesus was not a Dispensational theologian as most Christian teachers are today. This should be very troublesome to you when you realize that Jesus believed entirely different from the way you have been taught in your Christian churches. We have the testimony of Jesus that the Kingdom had to come prior to 70 A.D. as determined by the Daniel 9 prophecy. Along with that one needs to have an understanding that a generation was understood to be 40 years. Given that he died in and around the year 30 A.D. then we easily see Yeshua's agreement with the then current and prevalent understanding of Daniel 9 as held by both Rabbis and the vast populace. This goes without saying but Yeshua never intended nor saw the Kingdom being postponed some 2000 years as Dispensationalist Christians maintain today. If you study you will find that such a "theology" as espoused by Christians today had its origin in the middle 1800's. You also need to understand that by altering the accepted oral traditions about Daniel 9 as well as altering the Jewish texts by adjusting the punctuation of the appointed verses in Christian Bibles and translations, these Christian redactors created a "new timetable" to explain away the failure of the prophecies to be fulfilled. This was done to protect the image of Yeshua because otherwise one who lacks understanding shared in these articles might come to the conclusion that Yeshua was wrong in his understanding; and we cannot have that. These same Gentile theologians who made Jesus literally "God" would not have this God-man be wrong about the Scriptures (Selah)! Little do they realize that Yeshua came to a point in his ministry when he knew his efforts would fail to bring wholesale repentance to Israel and that the messianic prophecies would remain unfulfilled and the Kingdom of God would not appear. There would come a point in Yeshua's ministry that he knew that his ministry would fail!

Now listen up; the failure does not lie with Yeshua but with Israel as they did not merit the Kingdom nor the Messiah as I will quickly show. The repentance and the turning of Israel's heart back to the fathers (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) would not happen in his day. There was only one recourse for a failed messianic reformer….he had to die. More to follow.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #3

Most likely the vast majority of our readership are Christians. We purposefully shaped this ministry for such a response for so much of what Christianity teaches today is totally wrong and inaccurate. Diligence in study will reveal that to a blind man but over the years of my Pastorate I found few, if any, Christians who really studied. It never ceased to amaze me when I would be in a discussion with a typical Christian about Messianism the topic would always come up about Yeshua fulfilling the Messianic prophecies. I always had fun asking them: "Which prophecy of the Old Testament did he fulfill that leads us to understand he was the Messiah?" Well of course I would get the typical New Testament quote or paraphrase of the numerous "fulfilled Messianic passages" from the New Testament. I would love watching their expressions when I retorted that these were not Old Testament fulfillments at all but were nothing more than Gentile scriptural creationisms arrived at by a host of manipulative techniques such as:

A QUICK PICTURE OF THE PROPHECIES THAT WERE TO BE FULFILLED BEFORE THE KINGDOM OF GOD WAS TO BE REALIZED

Belief in Yeshua as "the Messiah" is not easy when one reflects on the following which was prophesied to occur before or as the Messiah is revealed. I provide this for your reflection.

The Rabbis instruct us that when the "True" Moshiach comes there will be no doubt. It is said, "His arrival will be as evident as the hand on your arm." Asking then if the Moshiach has come in those days will be the same as asking is "Is this my hand?" His arrival will be accompanied by the following:

- Universal peace and freedom.
- Resurrection of the of God's people.
- Regathering of the clans of Israel.
- The Torah will go forth from Jerusalem.
- Rebuilding of the Temple
- Resumption of animal sacrifices in the Temple, and
- All nations will come to the land of Israel to observe Succoth.

As a believer in the "true" historical Yeshua I am saddened when I realize that when Jesus came and afterwards....

- Instead of universal peace came the wars...of 66 c.e. and 135 c.e.
- Instead of a resurrection, over a million Jews were killed and thousands sold in to slavery.
- Instead of a regathering, there was the scattering of the Jews in the diaspora.
- Instead of the Torah going forth from Jerusalem, the Torah was declared dead and replaced by the Greek New Testament.

- Instead of a Temple being rebuild, one was destroyed.
- Instead of the continuation of animal sacrifices, they ceased.
- Instead of all nations observing Succoth in Jerusalem, the Holy day was prevented from being observed in Jerusalem and the Gentile church replaced the Biblical Festivals with their pagan holidays

DANIEL'S TIMETABLE CAME AND WENT…AND WHO COULD HAVE BEEN THE "POTENTIAL MESSIAH" DURING THIS TIME?

The list of "potential" candidates is limited to say the least. More than likely Yeshua is our man. The Jews lived in hope that Yeshua was their Messiah up until his death. Even after his death Yeshua has said that "this" generation would not pass before all things be fulfilled. In reality this was Yeshua's statement of faith in hopes Israel would rise to the occasion and merit the prophecies being fulfilled. This meant the emergence of the Messiah. Knowing as well that in his ministry would not bring the desired results that would warrant the Kingdom and the emergence of himself as Israel's King, he was comforted with the hope of the Psalmist:

Ps 16:10

10 For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

In faith Yeshua was prepared to die if his death was expedient to the "blessed Hope;" the realization of the purpose of national Israel as a Priest to the nations. He understood he would be resurrected as God's holy anointed one and looked past the grave to the expectation of Israel's repentance that would bring the fulfillment of the Messianic prophecies and his enthronement as King.

Answer for yourself: Understanding that the Jewish prophecies were not fulfilled, and remain unfulfilled today, yet who on the stage of history is most likely to have the "appointed candidate" to assume the position of the Anointed one of Israel as you look back on history? Honestly Yeshua is the most likely candidate. Certainty in this area of identification of Israel's Messiah escapes us except for those who lean more upon emotion than intellect and knowledge of the Jewish Palestinian text.

Of course I agree with the Jewish people that the Messianic prophecies as shown above remain unfulfilled and that no one as of yet has fulfilled them. In understanding this, then one is warranted in not calling anyone "the Messiah" since the works of the Messiah remain unfulfilled. One can rightly call Yeshua "anointed" but to say that he definitely is "The Messiah" must remain for now a product of emotion rather than fact. That means it is not proper to call anyone "the Messiah" for he has not yet appeared and taken David's throne and surely has not yet fulfilled these necessary Messianic prophecies. Too many times good people let their "emotion" dictate their reason and cloud their intellect. Too often good people lack the necessary knowledge to make an intelligent decision on the matter. The prophecies remain unfulfilled. This is undebatable. But that does not mean that potentially "the Messiah" has not appeared or will not yet appear to fulfill them. These prophecies must be fulfilled eventually. I admire David Flusser who is a well-know Hebrew scholar who when asked if he believed if Yeshua was the Messiah responded: "When the Messiah appears I will walk up to him and ask him…'Been here before'"? I think this says it best. Faith is a great gift but it must remain in the realm of things "hoped for."

MEN OF INTEGRITY WILL NOT MISREPRESENT THE JEWISH SCRIPTURES

Now pay close attention to what I say next. On our ministry's web page I take strong, I said very strong offense with anyone who misquotes, mistranslates, and lifts the Jewish Scriptures from the Masoretic Palestinian Hebrew text out of context in order to "create alternate theology" in hopes of passing off someone as "the Messiah" to unsuspecting and uninformed Gentiles in the first centuries of the Church (http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com). This has been inherited in Christianity today and few know it. Few Christians know their Bibles are falsifications of the true Jewish Scriptures. Such forgery in Christianity goes undetected by millions. Such forgery in our Christian Bibles is masterminded by Gentile anti-Semites of the early centuries of the Church in their hopes of "selling" Yeshua as "the Messiah" to the Gentiles. He most likely was, but to call him "the" Messiah is not accurate; at least not yet! As "a Christ" and an anointed Rabbi he was, but the only designation defining the identity of "the Messiah" is if the Old Testament prophecies were fulfilled by him. This was to be his calling card. Sadly dear ones, due to the lack of spiritual maturity in the nation of Israel, the nation did not merit the Kingdom nor her King, and Yeshua perished at the hands of the Romans without ever becoming King of a Kingdom that never appeared. If Israel had be spiritually worthy in the first century then Yeshua would never had needed to die. Even more, if the nation had heeded Yeshua's warning that only 40 years remained for the prophecies to be fulfilled and had make the necessary spiritual correction within the timetable of Daniel 9, the Yeshua most likely would have returned to rule and reign over the nation and the prophecies would have been fulfilled at that time. I guess you noticed it did not happen, in fact, the judgment on Israel for failing so greatly it's calling was the destruction of the Temple and its scattering among the nations for two thousand years.

BUT WHAT OF ALL THOSE NEW TESTAMENT "FULFILLED" SCRIPTURES? CAN THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE BE TRUSTED?

It is not my intention to be cruel or harsh but I must say something. To quote the rubbish passed off as "scripture" in the New Testament as fulfillments of Old Testament prophecies only betrays one's lack of true Biblical knowledge of the true Jewish Masoretic text that Yeshua knew and used. Too often as Christians we read "error" over and over and only reinforce untruths. The tragedy is that we never know it. It is a slow and tedious process but one must honestly compare line upon line and precept with precept when comparing the "fulfilled" passages in the New Testament against the Hebrew Scriptures from the Palestinian Masoretic Text. Then and only then will one see the difference for himself. Without such knowledge a Christian is literally helpless when it comes to ascertaining if what is described as "fulfilled" Messianic Scriptures in the New Testament are truthful.

Study was understood to be the highest form of worship in Yeshua's day. This is a lesson we have failed to hear or to learn. Thus we accept anything without critical assessment. The result is that we literally "canonize" lies and hold them dear to our hearts never knowing that much of what we hold sacred is to God sacrilegious. But I did not always know this. These ideas were slowly growing on me while I was in Seminary as I was being jolted even then by what I was learning which conflicted with what I had been told to accept by faith by my religious spiritual leaders in the various churches I had attended.

I did not always know about the problems that existed with the Christian Bible. Only by in-depth study over the years was I awakened to this nightmare. As I believe I am a man of integrity before God, I found myself continually being brought to a crossroads in my studies. Often I was challenged by those who wrote things that disagreed with what I "believed." In defense of my faith I would literally take "them on" and try to prove my position was correct and theirs wrong. For after all I was a Spirit-filled Christian; the Holy Spirit leads into all truth…right? Wrong! I wish it were so, but I and about 2 billion Catholics on this planet prove this idealistic passage in John wrong.

Taking the challenge given to me years ago by those whom I read which challenged my beliefs, I would later come to realize that knew God better me. When I could not prove them wrong which giving the evidence a more than fair hearing and literally reproducing their studies to verify what they had said was correct, than I had only one recourse to follow; I had to repent after not being able to prove my detractors wrong. What I came to see later is that these writers presented facts and information which could be verified by study and such valuable factual information proved what I accepted by "faith" to be wrong. Faith should be necessary only in the absence of facts and the absence of evidence. I could not prove those who exposed my faith as fantasy. After a laborious six months of manuscript study alone I was literally beaten into submission by the Jewish Tanakh which read differently in hundreds of places from my Christian Bible. We must remember we are expecting to have an English translation and not a fictional creationism. I realized I had the latter but yet it had a black binding which said "Holy Bible" on it. Little could be said to be "Holy" about such a travesty passed off upon the Jewish Scriptures. I had never took the time to look to see if my Christian Bible was a faithful translation of the Jewish Scriptures; I never known I needed to look. It never dawned on me that "my" Christian Bible was a horrible translation of the Jewish Scriptures. Understand such adulterated Old Testament passages in my Christian Bible was only "quoted" again wrongly in the New Testament! Now I had the duplication of error! My Christian Bible was wrong both in the Old Testament as well as the New Testament and I had a Master's Degree in Divinity and never knew it because my Seminary never taught us about such things. We took for granted we had the truth. Boy was I wrong! If you want the facts they can be seen at our four websites:

http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua

http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com

http://web2.airmail.net/bennoah1

The same can be said for trying to prove Yeshua as "the Messiah" from the New Testament. The New Testament if full of "false prophecies" which when studied in-depth and compared with the Jewish Palestinian Masoretic text only discloses to the serious student a compilation of orchestrated and purposeful misquoted and mistranslated Jewish texts which have been cleverly taken out of context which are then twisted to make "false-fulfillments" that none of the original Jewish writers ever intended!!!! The hundreds of falsified non-prophecies when examined individually and compared with the true Jewish Bible and the Palestinian Masoretic Text (which reads completely different from your "fixed" Christian Old Testaments") reveals to the serious student the foolishness of such an attempt to present Yeshua as "the Messiah" in the New Testament. He more than likely was "the Messiah" in waiting, but owing to Israel's moral and spiritual failure in the first century, the prophecies could not be fulfilled and thus the Kingdom postponed and it yet awaits Israel's merit today. Misquoting and misrepresenting the Jewish texts only discredits those who do so and blasphemes God. Those who read such falsehoods and forgeries only join the line of prior blasphemers of God and His Word and never know it. We have stern warnings given through Moses not the alter or change the Word or God and such was done in the "selling of Yeshua" as Messiah to the non-Jews by Gentile theologians and monks who both controlled and altered the written documents which later would become the New Testament. Such is a discredit to Yeshua who said:

Matt 5:18

18 For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

But to tamper with the Jewish Scriptures in order to pass off Yeshua as "the Messiah" by the Gentile Church through altering and changing the Jewish Scriptures is a crime of immeasurable proportions! Understand that the vast majority of Christians have never read the true Jewish Scriptures for if they had and if they had taken the time to compare the Jewish Messianic Scriptures in the Jewish Tanakh against the Christian Old Testaments (line upon line, precept upon precept), then they would see of what I speak and my alerting the Christian community of such a damnable deed would not be necessary. In reality Christians have never read the Word of God before but only it's substitute handed down by anti-Semitic non-Jews. We can thank Constantine and Rome for such a gift of ignorance and deception.

Now, let us continue looking at "how" the Kingdom was to come and what the role of the Messiah was in bringing about the Kingdom in the next article in this series. More to follow. Shalom.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #4

THE NECESSITY OF A RIGHTEOUS ISRAEL & THE DISCREDITING OF ISRAEL TO RECEIVE HER KING …OR…WHY THE PROPHECIES WERE NOT FULFILLED

Answer for yourself: How much do you know of the conditions that existed in Israel in the first century? How well are you acquainted with the spiritual condition of the Priests of Israel in the first century? How well are you acquainted with the cultural influences made by Hellenism upon Israel in the first century? Lastly, how would you characterize the moral and ethical conditions that existed among the Jews of Israel in the first century?

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that if you do not command a workable knowledge of the above questions then it is impossible to understand the dynamics involved in the events recorded in the New Testament surrounding the Messianic push of the first century?

As demonstrated earlier Israel was to be "the" Priest of the nations. A "Priest" is to be holy and the literal Sadducean Priesthood of the first century was no longer of the lineage of Zadok and were in Rome's "pocket" as many times the Priesthood was sold to the highest bidder. I guess the best way to characterize the whole of the problem is with the well familiar adage: "When in Rome do as the Romans". This is exactly what was happening. Modernism and liberalism was in vogue. Notice what was said of the messenger of the covenant renewal which was to come:

Mal 4:6

6 And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

Luke 1:17

17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

Preparation was necessary for the Lord to come. Preparation was necessary for the Kingdom to come. Preparation was necessary for the Messiah to appear. There was work to be done spiritually if the Kingdom of God was to appear. For without such repentance among people and leaders it would not appear; neither would Israel's King. The people were called to "repent" and turn their hearts to the "fathers": Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and not to Rome or Athens. Repentance was the order of the day.

The nation did not repent and was unworthy of their calling; thus unworthy of the Kingdom. The corporate nation had failed to be a "holy nation and a royal priesthood." They had abdicated their calling. Now you can understand the continual call of the Prophets for the people to repent.

3 REMNANT THEOLOGIES EMERGE…THE MESSIANIC HOPE STAYS ALIVE IN SPITE OF THE LACK OF ISRAEL'S RIGHTEOUSNESS

Now this is very important. Eventually, it began to be despaired by the Pious of Israel that the whole people could be brought to the necessary state of perfection. Hopes were pinned on an elect remnant of faithful souls, by whose obedience the redemption would be hastened. They would be the elite of the final World Order, entitled to its highest honors by their loyalty and by their sufferings in this present world. The Messianic Hope, in light of the failure of corporate Israel spiritually, became concentrated upon the determined efforts of the pious, the Saints, to observe the Law, thus justifying God in acting speedily. If the time was greatly prolonged even the Elect might prove unequal to the strain. It was imperative for the pious themselves to search out what Divine guidance had been given to set a term to their endurance, what signs were to be expected to intimate that the End of the Days had arrived. The last stage of the evolution of the Messianic Hope envisaged the intervention of God by means of the Anointed Ones, ideal figures, a Prophet like Moses, a perfect Priest, a righteous King of the line of David. These would come in the End of the Days as God's highest appointed representatives to transform the whole world scene and usher in the Kingdom of God.

Coinciding with Israel's Messianic hope was he worst calamity which had befallen the Jews since the destruction of the Kingdom of Judah and the loss of the Temple at the beginning of the sixth century B.C. The new calamity was seen by pious Jews to be impending as a consequence of the attractions of Hellenism, which since the time of Alexander the Great had made increasing inroads into Jewish life and thought, fostering moral laxity and apostasy. The judgement of God must surely fall upon the nation as it had done in the past. It fully confirmed this opinion when the Seleucid king Antiochus Epiphanes (175-62 B.C.) decreed the abolition of the Jewish religion and converted the Temple at Jerusalem into a shrine of Zeus Olympius. Throughout the country there was great persecution, until resistance was organized by the sons of the aged priest Mattathias of Modim. One son, Judas Maccabaeus, led the revolt in the name of God, and after a series of remarkable successes cleansed and rededicated the defiled Temple One of the products of this testing time was the book of Daniel. Its apocalyptic dreams and visions were to exercise a major influence on messianic thinking and prediction.

The leaven of Hellenism had to be dealt with if Israel was to ever realize her potential and calling as the Priest to the Nations. Israel had to remain separated from the nations and the influences exerted upon her by her captives was pulling her from her religious roots. No one person or section of society had the answer to the infection of Hellenism. The answer came in the form of Jewish sectarianism. The experiences of the nation in the time of Antiochus and his immediate successors had administered a severe shock. The people became much more devout. There was revived in them a sense of destiny, of belonging to God in a special way, which demanded faithfulness to the Law revealed to them through Moses. They saw in the victories of the Maccabees the hand of God, outstretched for their deliverance when they were obedient to his commandments. The Messianic Hope comes out strongly in Daniel, where the people of the Saints of the Most High (likened to a Son of Man compared with the Beast figures representing the predatory heathen Empires) are entrusted with God's everlasting kingdom, when all rulers will serve and obey him (Dan. 7:26-27). It began to matter very much to the more spiritually sensitive that the Divine laws should be observed meticulously, and this inevitably gave rise to sectarianism, to competition in holiness.

From this period three ways of life in particular are made known to us, those of the Sadducees, Pharisees and Essenes. They were minority movements, numbering only a few thousands in each case, but they were nevertheless extremely influential and gave impetus to the exposition of the Messianic Hope. Unfortunately, as regards the first two, they were also involved in a power-struggle for control of the political affairs of the nation.

MESSIANIC FERVOR….& THE CREATION OF RELIGIOUS SCIENCE FICTION

From 160 B.C. we are in a new age, an age of extraordinary fervor and religiosity in which almost every event, political, social and economic, was seized upon, scrutinized and analyzed, to discover how and in what way it represented a Sign of the Times and threw light on the approach of the End of the Days. The whole condition of the Jewish people was psychologically abnormal. The strangest tales and imaginings could find ready credence. A new pseudonymous literature came into being, part moral exhortation and part apocalyptic prophecy, a kind of messianic science fiction. People were on edge, neurotic. There were hot disputes, rivalries arid recriminations. Such "messianic science fiction," also know as apocalyptic eschatology, is called by a noted Dead Sea Scholar, Lawrence Schiffman, as being "totally discredited today." To this I concur. This "star wars theology" as found in the pseudoephigraphical literature and other such books like the book of Revelation in the New Testament is hardly to be entertained as reality or true for that matter. The first to be obliterated in the Roman war were those who wrote such texts. It never ceases to amaze me when reading their materials that they all have one thing in common: "read the last page in the book...we win." Well they didn't win; in fact they were the first to be destroyed and unfortunately their writings outlived them and today people read this stuff as if "God-breathed." Hardly! The Jews never canonized "apocalyptic" writings as "prophecy" and we find the book of Daniel listed in the "writings" and not the "prophets." That should tell you something!

THE SPIRITUAL PREPARATION OF ISRAEL NECESSARY TO LEAD THE NATIONS IN THE MILLENNIUM & THE HOPE OF JEREMIAH'S PROPHECY

The essence of the Messianic Hope, as we have seen, was the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth, The Last Times for which the prerequisite was a righteous Israel or at least a righteous remnant of Israel. There must be a return to the relationship with God initiated at the Covenant of Sinai. Of this the prophecies of Jeremiah spoke, when he had said:

'Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a New Covenant [understood as "renewed" and "not new"] with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah ... After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more" (Jer. 31:31-4).

Israel had to return to God and allow His Commandments to be written on their hearts and minds. Israel needed a Covenant Renewal of their Sinai Covenant. They needed to repent and return to God through obedience to His Laws thus being a witness and an example to the nations. Only be being such a righteous Priest and example could they hope to be the catalyze that merits the arrival of the Kingdom of Heaven and its King. Here it was promised that the spiritual infirmity of Israel would be helped by the intervention of God.

Answer for yourself: And how was this new (renewed) Covenant to take place?

This would occur when the people had the Laws of God written in their inward parts; their hearts and heads. No longer was it to be expected that the Levities were the only ones to be holy; now everyone was called to such a task. Such hopes sadly had been pinned upon the remnants of Israel…the Essenes, the Pharisees, and the Sadducees. They each saw in themselves that they were the last hopes for Israel and the world.

Now listen very closely. Two of the above three "Messianic hopes" were wrong and only one was right. Following the war of 66 C.E. with Rome only the Pharisees emerged along with their writings. The Essenes were the first to be obliterated and only their writings survived and were only located in this century. We can find nothing remaining of the Sadducees or any of their writings. It seems rather clear that Divine providence ensured the survival of the Pharisees as the hope of Israel. Let us not forget that just days and hours before Yeshua's death he is recorded saying:

Matt 23:2

2 Saying, The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:

After saying to the Sadducees in the same discourse in John that the "kingdom is taken from you" he quickly points to the Pharisees and says that they now set in the seat of Moses. Understand this is said in the same discourse. The Greek word for seat is rather illuminating as we see the Strong's number is #2515 kathedra-meaning:

- a chair, a seat
- used of the exalted seat occupied by men of eminent rank or influence, as teachers and judges

How strange just prior to his death he makes such an announcement that the authority in Israel is removed from the Sadduceean Priest (who no longer were of the lineage of Zadok anyway) and given to the Pharisees as the teachers and judges of Israel. Coupled with this announcement is the historical fact that the Pharisees were the only one of the "Messianic hopes" that survived the war with Rome. It sure is something to think about especially in light of Christianity's replacement theology which listens to little if anything the Rabbis have to say. For Yeshua they were in charge and still are the authorities that the non-Jews are to look to today in spite of what you might think otherwise.

To become worthy of this interposition was imperative. The three movements to which we have referred, and there were others, were fundamentally responses to this conviction. The Sadducees emphasized a strict and literal adherence to the Laws of Moses and the cultivation of ethics. The Pharisees aimed at the sanctification of the whole of daily life, and formulated new rules which extended the application of the Law to cover all contingencies. The Essenes, determined to be even more faultless, formed close communities from which contamination and impurity could be excluded, and where the utmost simplicity of living and rigid discipline could overcome material and fleshly temptations. These three "movements" were understood to be the last hope for Israel as the "remnant" was hoped by many to be the last chance Israel had to merit the Kingdom. Strict adherence to the Laws of God was understood as imperative for it was the laxity of keeping the Commandments of God that had resulted in the prior captivity of both Houses of Israel. These three movements in their own ways believed themselves to be the last hope for Israel and the Kingdom to appear.

Answer for yourself: Can you not find it strange, especially in light of Yeshua's pronouncement, the theology of Christianity today which prides itself of "not being under the Law" when the very hope of Yeshua and these three movements was just the opposite; returning scrupulously to obedience to the Laws of God in hopes of meriting Divine intervention and the manifestation of the Kingdom of Heaven let alone the King of Israel?

Well the year 2000 just passed and I hear little about the failure of Yeshua to come again. Hal Lindsey is quite and as far as I know plans no new book to explain whey his other books on Christian prophecy failed. It should make you seriously wonder and consider if the Kingdom will ever come let alone the Messiah of Israel if Pauline Christian theology which prides itself not being under the "Law" remains in vogue for 2.5 billion people in the world. Surely they are the not the light for their darkness is far greater. More to follow. Shalom.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #5

THE INTERVENTION OF GOD EXPECTED IN THE MANIFESTATION OF THE KINGDOM AND ITS KING THROUGH "ANOINTED ONES"

The three movements and Messianic hopes just discussed (Essenes, Pharisees, and Sadducees) reveal in themselves how deadly serious had become the desire to merit God's intervention. We should be out of tune with the temper of the time if we did not realize this. It was the study of the manner of the redemptive intervention which now accented the advent of messianic figures.

The Sadducees looked for only one "Messiah" or "anointed one". The Sadducees, proving everything from express statements in the Law, looked for the coming of the Prophet like Moses (Deut. 18:15).

The Pharisees and Essenes looked for two Messiahs. The Pharisees and Essenes ranged more widely and brought into prominence the perpetual covenants with Levi and David. The prophecies of Jeremiah had further contained this promise:

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgement and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely….For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel [King Messiah]; neither shall the priests the Levities want a man to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually" [Priestly Messiah] (Jer. 33:15-26).

Therefore, it was held, God would intervene by means of Anointed Ones (Messiahs) of the tribes of Levi and Judah. One writer declares: 'And now, my children, obey Levi and Judah, and be not lifted up against these two tribes, for from them shall arise unto you the salvation of God. For the Lord shall raise up from Levi as it were a High Priest, and from Judah as it were a King: he shall save all the race of Israel" (Test. Simeon, vii. 1-2 [Testaments of the XII Patriarchs, edition Charles]. Cp. Test. Naphtali, viii. 2-3; Test. Joseph, xix. 11)..

For the Essenes the Priestly Messiah would be the superior of the Royal....Kingly Messiah, while for the Pharisees, who became disillusioned with hierarchical government, it was just the opposite. For the Pharisees it was the Kingly Messiah par excellence who would be the ideal king of the line of David (Isa. 11). But they admitted the priority of a Levitical messianic personality to the extent that the Davidic Messiah would be preceded by a priestly forerunner in the form of the returned Prophet Elijah, whom they held to have been a priest. A late commentary on the Psalms illustrates the positron taken by the Pharisees. 'To that generation (in Egypt) thou didst send redemption through two redeemers, as it is said (Ps. cv. 26), "He sent Moses his servant and Aaron whom he had chosen." So also to this generation (of the Last Times) he sendeth two, corresponding to those other-two.

"Send out thy light and thy truth" (Ps xliii 3). "Thy light", that is the Prophet Elijah of the house of Aaron ... and "Thy truth", that is Messiah ben David, as it is said (Ps. cxxxii. 11), "The Lord bath sworn unto David (in) truth, he will not turn from it." And likewise it is said (Isa. xlii. 1), "Behold my servant whom I uphold"' (Midrash Tefillin, xliii. 1.) The return of Elijah is predicted in Malachi iv. 5-6.

For a brief period in the latter part of the second century B.C. the greatest hopes were entertained as a result of the victories of the Hasmonean ruler John Hyrcanus I, under whom the Jews not only regained complete independence, but also a territory larger than any under Jewish rule since the reign of Solomon son of David. Not a few were ready to see in John one who combined all the messianic offices, being Prophet, Priest and King. "John Hyrcanus was esteemed by God worthy of the three privileges, the government of his nation, the dignity of the high priesthood, and prophecy; for God was with him, and enabled him to know futurities" (Josephus, Antiq. XIII. x. 7.).

But John Hyrcanus was no paragon, and his successors proved to be thoroughly unsatisfactory rulers, despotic, ambitious and unjust. Instead of the Kingdom of God there was war in Israel, and the Essenes had justification for their view that Satan had been let loose on the country.

From this time national affairs played an increasing part in the exposition of the Messianic Hope. It acquired a more personal and political coloring. The cry was raised, 'Behold, O Lord, and raise up unto them their king, the Son of David, in the time which thou, O God, knowest, that he may reign over Israel thy servant; and gird him with strength that he may break in pieces them that rule unjustly (Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 23-4).

SIGNS THAT THE LAST TIMES HAD BEGUN…THUS THE MESSIAH WAS IMMINENT

The change of emphasis in messianic expectations caused much thought to be given to the conditions which the Scriptures indicated would prevail when the Messiah would be revealed. There would be wars and tumults, public strife and divided families, pestilence and famine, persecution of the saints, a host of tribulations. These would be the Woes of the Last Times; imminent just prior to the coming of the Messiah. As Jewish affairs went from bad to worse by so much more were messianic convictions intensified. Those who looked for signs could find them in abundance. In 63 B.C. the Romans were called upon to aid John Hyrcanus II against his ambitious brother Aristobulus. There was internal conflict, the siege and capture of Jerusalem, with the Roman general Pompey committing the enormity of entering the Holy of Holies in the Temple. The Jews lost their brief independence, and their land became a vassal state of Rome. Once more Israel was subject to the heathen, and finally forced to accept at Roman hands a king, who, though he was a professing Jew, was of alien Idumean origin.

The reign of Herod the Great (37-4, B.C.) was from the beginning attended by disorders. Not only had he to preserve his throne by skillful manoeuvre and political intrigue in relation to the struggle then going on in the Roman world, he had to govern a people intensely hostile to his regime, only too willing manifestation of diabolical sovereignty.

Herod was an ambitious man and a clever one, brave, with regal bearing and qualities of leadership, but he was impulsive and had neurotic tendencies which the circumstances of his reign so aggravated as to convert him into something like the raging ruthless monster his apocalyptic-minded subjects believed him to be. With real and imagined plots against him he could not feel secure until he had destroyed the Hasmoneans around whom popular support could still gather. First to be got rid of was Antigonus, then the boy Aristobulus whom he had made high priest at the age of sixteen, and then the aged former high priest and king, the inoffensive Hyrcanus

II. Later the Hasmonean princess Mariamne, whom he had married and genuinely loved, was executed, followed by her mother Alexandra; and to the end of his days the king's fears of conspiracy by family and friends led him on to the destruction even of his own children.

Successfully switching his allegiance from the vanquished Marc Antony to the victorious Octavian, afterwards the Emperor Augustus, Herod reached a height of political power and prestige.

But as the friend of Caesar, devoted to the Romans and to the Hellenic way of life, he made himself ever more noxious to his people, who would not be placated even by his grandiose rebuilding of the Temple. They hated and feared him, and were kept from revolt only by the strongly manned fortresses which Herod constructed at strategic points and by his conversion of the country into what we would now call a police state. "'At this time Herod released to his subjects the third part of their taxes, under presence indeed of relieving them after the dearth they had had; but the main reason was, to recover their goodwill, which he now wanted; for they were uneasy at him, because of the innovations he had introduced in their practices to the dissolution of their religion, and the disuse of their own customs, and the people everywhere talked against him, like those that were still more provoked and disturbed at his procedure. Against which discontents he greatly guarded himself, and took away the opportunities they might have to disturb him, and enjoining them to be always at work; nor did he permit the citizens either to meet together, or to walk, or eat together, but watched everything they did, and when they were caught they were severely punished; and many there were who were brought to the citadel Hyrcania, both openly and secretly, and were there put to death. And there were spies set everywhere, both in the city and on the roads, who watched those that met together ... and those that could be in no way reduced to acquiesce under his scheme of government, he persecuted them in all manner of ways" (Josephus, Antiq. XV. x. 4).

The pious attributed to the wrath of God the great earthquake in Judea in the seventh year of his reign and the persistent droughts followed by pestilence in the thirteenth year of his reign. Such calamities seemed like the plagues of Egypt, and Herod appeared as another Pharaoh of the Oppression. "An insolent king [Herod] will succeed them [the Hasmoneans], who will not be of the race of the priests, a man bold and shameless, and he will judge them as they deserve. And he will cut off their chief men with the sword, and will destroy them in secret places, so that no one may know where their bodies are. He will slay the old and the young, and he will not spare. Then the fear of him will be bitter unto them in their land. And he will execute judgements on them as the Egyptians executed upon them, during thirty and four years, and he will punish them" (Assumption of Moses, vi. 2-6, edition Charles).

The signs seemed certainly to confirm the current interpretation of the prophecies that the Last Times had begun.

WHAT WAS THE RESPONSE TO THESE IMMINENT SIGNS?

For the extreme pietists these days were 'the Period of the Wrath'. Many abandoned the cities and took to the wilderness. Sectarian communities, like that at Qumran by the Dead Sea, flourished as fresh recruits joined them. Such communities had long existed on the eastern fringe of the country; but now they were multiplied and increased in variety, holding themselves to be the faithful Elect of the Last Times (again they considered themselves the remnant; the Messianic hope of Israel). The Manual of Discipline from Qumran declares: 'And when these things shall come to pass to the Community of Israel, in these determined moments they shall separate themselves from the midst of the habitation of perverse men to take to the wilderness to prepare there the Way of Him as was written: "Prepare ye in the wilderness the Way of the Lord: make straight to the desert a highway for our God" (Isa. xl. 3). This Way is the study of the Law... so as to act according to all that was revealed time after time, and according to what the Prophets revealed by His Holy Spirit.'

Answer for yourself: Did you notice how they believed they were to "prepare" the way for the coming of the LORD? It was through the study of the Law! Coupled with this would be the result of such study of the Law...the repentance of Israel which was to be the fruit of such study where the Laws of God were renewed and written on their hearts (Jer. 31).

Answer for yourself: Did you happen to notice that we just ties together everything we have said so far in these articles? Did you notice that these saw that the only hope for Divine intervention whereby the Kingdom of God was to be manifested along with Israel's King was a return to the Laws of God and obedience to His Commandments?

This is terribly important to understand as again Israel's failure in this regard is the reason why the Kingdom did not appear nor Israel's Messiah revealed along with the prophecies remaining unfulfilled.

Let me now quote the famed author Hugh Schonfield: "Through the sources of information at our command we obtain a picture of the situation in Palestine towards the close of the first century B.C. which, if it could be put on canvas, would seem to be the work of a madman, or of a drug addict. A whole nation was in the grip of delirium. The king on this throne was a sick and gloomy tyrant. His embittered subjects feared and detested him to an extent that was almost maniacal. Religious fanatics fasted and prayed, and preached wrath and judgement. Obsessed with conviction that the Last Times had come terror and superstition overcame all reason among the people. Self-recrimination accompanied messianic fervor. No wonder that when Herod died all hell was let loose" (Schonfield, The Passover Plot, pp. 35-36).

At first a cry of relief went up throughout the land, and then in a moment all was tumult and disorder. Soldiers went on the rampage. Bands of brigands plundered. In the name of liberty from Rome and the Herodians various leaders set themselves up as king and readily got together a multitude of armed followers. 'And thus', writes Josephus, 'did a great and wild fury spread itself over the nation, because they had no king to keep the masses in good order; and because those foreigners, who came to reduce the seditious to sobriety, did, on the contrary, set them more in a flame, because of the injuries they offered them, and the avaricious management of their affairs" (Josephus, Antiq. XVII. x. 5). In punitive actions by the Romans thousands were killed in different parts of the country, and at Jerusalem two thousand were crucified.

The circumstances I have outlined, which used, perhaps, to be more familiar to previous generations of Christians than they are today, have an obvious bearing on the understanding of the life of Jesus, and must be allowed their full weight in any attempt to comprehend him. We have seen what strange imaginings had gripped the Jewish people at this time, the time Jesus came into the world, fed by those who interpreted the Scriptures to them. According to many preachers, the eleventh hour had come, the Last Times had begun, the Kingdom of God was at hand. The world was on the eve of Wrath and Judgement. The Messiah would appear. Times could not get any worse. The setting was ripe for the appearance of Israel's Messiah. All that was needed was a righteous Israel. All that was needed was for Israel to merit the Kingdom and her King. All that was needed was for a righteous Israel to assume her Divine mandate as a Royal Priesthood. All that was needed was for Israel to be a Holy Nation.

More to follow.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #6

WAS ISRAEL EXPECTING A WARRIOR MESSIAH OR A RIGHTEOUS MESSIAH?

Christianity affirms that Jesus was "the Messiah", whose advent fulfilled the prophecies. The Messiahship of Jesus is asserted, and then side-stepped in order to disclose him in a light more congenial to Hellenic rather than Jewish concepts. Most Christians never realize this but the concept of "the Jewish Messiah" become mutated in the New Testament and one reads of a "Hellenized Messiah" which is a closer in parallel to the non-Jew's crucified pagan god-men since the beginning of time as seen originating from nature and sun worship.

Along similar line, quite commonly, for instance, quite apart from the claim that Jesus was God, the view is expressed that the Jews of the time of Jesus were expecting a Warrior Messiah, one who would win military victories over the enemies of Israel, and in this way accomplish the deliverance. Christians are taught that the Jews rejected Jesus because he was a man of peace, who represented the love of God and not the "military Messiah motif". Growing up in the Church since I was a child I continually heard this being taught by Christian preachers.

Answer for yourself: But what authority is there for such a view?

Had this been the contemporary opinion of those who studied the Scriptures, certainly Jesus could never have thought of himself as the Messiah. The Christian needs to listen to what is said next. But in fact in references to the Messiah up to the time of Jesus the conception of a Warrior Messiah does not appear. Among the peasantry of Palestine many did entertain such a notion, because conditions were so bad that violence seemed to offer the natural remedy. Living under alien domination, oppressed and ill-used, who is to blame them if they did? To the desperate the comforts of prophecy mattered little. Anyone would serve as Messiah, whether descended from David or not, if he was bold, courageous, a leader of men. There were plenty of people with little to lose, who were ready for any adventure which promised food and drink, and the destruction of the enemies, and who often quite sincerely would believe themselves to be fighting the battles of God. Such people over a thousand years later joined the Crusades.

But we must not judge the Messianic Hope by such as they. Those who took things into their own hands, the violent ones, who resorted to militancy, were strongly criticized and denounced by the Pharisees, who were the chief spiritual instructors of the masses.

IN TRUTH…WHAT KIND OF MESSIAH DID THE SCRIPTURES TEACH ISRAEL TO EXPECT?

Of the Branch of David for whom pious Jews waited it was written: "With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked" (Isa. 11:4).

Answer for yourself: In the above passage what are to be the "tool" of the Messiah to effect change?

- Judge (implied vocal)
- Reprove (implies vocal)
- Rod of his mouth
- Breath of his lips

Answer for yourself: What is the common denominator in the above 4 actions from Israel's expected Messiah? That was easy, or was it? The Messiah will "speak" and in his speech will be "judging, reproving, smiting, and slaying". Without a doubt we find that the actions of the Messiah will effect change through the vessel of teaching and preaching. Such will be the hallmarks of the ministry of the Messiah. Through the Messiah's ministry of teaching and preaching mankind will be moved to repent.

As hard as I try I cannot find in the above passage any implications that Israel should be looking for a military Messiah.

The sharp two-edged sword of the Messiah would be no physical weapon, but justice and righteousness. This is critically important to understand if we are ever to come to terms with why the Kingdom did not appear during the days of Yeshua or following his ministry.

Dating from the first century B.C. we have an exposition of the kind of Messiah who was expected, based on the passage from Isaiah just quoted.

"And a righteous king and taught of God is he that reigneth over them: and there shall be no iniquity in his days in their midst (in the nation of Israel….remember Israel needed to merit the Kingdom through righteousness), for all shall be holy and their king is the Lord Messiah. For he shall not put his trust in horse and rider and bow (not in a military Messiah), nor shall he multiply unto himself gold and silver for war, nor by ships shall he gather confidence for the day of battle ... For he shall smite the earth with the word of his mouth even for evermore ... He himself also is pure from sin, so that he may rule a mighty people, and rebuke princes and overthrow sinners by the might of his word. And he shall not faint all his days, because he leaneth upon his God: for God shall cause him to be mighty through the spirit of holiness, and wise through the counsel of understanding, with might and righteousness' (Psalms of Solomon, 17: 35-42).

Answer for yourself: Did you notice any similarities with the Isaiah's picture of the Messiah which Israel was told to expect in Isaiah chapter 11?

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the similarities with "word of his mouth" and "might of his word" when comparing with Isaiah's picture of the Messiah?

Answer for yourself: As what was to be the result of such "words of Messiah" and "might of his words"? We are told in the verse 35 of the Psalms of Solomon that "there would be no iniquity in his midst"? And where was Messiah to come? To Israel of course. There were to be no iniquity in his midst!

That means the Messiah's ministry would succeed and that the people of Israel would respond by tearing their hearts and not their garments when hearing his words. This was the only way to prepare the fallow ground of the hearts of Israel to merit the Kingdom and her King. This was the only way for Israel to be heirs to "fulfilled Messianic promises".

The Son of David who was to come would be holy and just, 'the Messiah of righteousness', as he is called in the Dead Sea Scrolls, living in close communion with God and obedient to his will. It is by the word of truth that he will convict and defeat his adversaries and not through military might!

That the Messiah should have such a character fully accords with what I have brought out about the nature of the Messianic Hope. The goal was the universal rule of God acknowledged by all men, when war, strife and wickedness should cease. To reach that goal it was required that Israel should be 'a kingdom of priests and a holy nation'. I have said nothing new since the beginning of these articles but only reinforced concepts which lay silent in the Christian Church.

Answer for yourself: How much more must the Messiah, who would come in God's name, be the perfect Israelite?

To him would apply the words of the Psalmist: 'Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, even thy God, bath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows ... Then said I, Lo I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea thy law is within my heart' (Ps. xlv. 7, xl. 7-8). This was the likeness to which the Messiah was expected to conform, and this is what Christians should have been taught.

It was said of him: "And he shall gather together a holy people, whom he shall lead in righteousness: and shall judge the tribes of the people that bath been sanctified by the Lord his God. And he shall not suffer iniquity to lodge in their midst; and none that knoweth wickedness shall dwell with him. For he shall take knowledge of them that they be all sons of their God, and shall divide them upon the earth according to their tribes ... He shall judge the nations and the peoples with the wisdom of his righteousness. Selah" (Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 28-31).

Answer for yourself: What kind of people was the Messiah coming for? A holy people whom he will lead in righteousness. The Messiah was to gather about himself a holy people. Of course not all is expected to be holy, but definitely a remnant is expected.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice the Messiah was to judge the people who "had been sanctified" by the Lord their God? This means a people who had been called out from the midst of the masses; the faithful and holy remnant of Israel.

Answer for yourself: Did you take notice that the Messiah would not permit iniquity to lodge in their midst; and none that knoweth wickedness shall dwell with him?

This is a beautiful picture of a repentant people who have renewed Covenant with their God and quality as the holy remnant, the Royal Priesthood, and the Holy Nation of which we have so often spoken.

This might be news to you but I guarantee you it was news to Israel. These things were expounded to the people in the synagogues by preachers who mainly belonged to the fraternity of the Pharisees. The Essenes taught an "Angel-Messiah" patterned after sun-god redeemer men, but it was the Pharisees who not only taught the same message as Yeshua but like Yeshua understood the Messiah to be a human-Davidic Messiah that fulfills the prophecies of the Tanakh. What you need to know is that in the New Testament we have both "pictures" of each's Messiahs blended into one. Such a "Messiah" never existed; only the Davidic Messiah.

Answer for yourself: Which of the three "Messianic hopes" of Israel were told they set in Moses' seat and were the only ones of the three to survive the Roman war of 66-70 A.D.? The Pharisees of course and little wonder since it was their theology which was correct when that of the Sadducees and Essenes was wrong!

Israel had been told repeatedly the necessity of being "spiritually ready" to accept her Messiah. Israel's failure in this regard would mean that the Messiah would not be revealed and that the Kingdom would be postponed!

But not all the messianic mysteries were public property. The extreme pietists who delved into such matters largely kept their knowledge to themselves, setting down some of their ideas in books only disclosed to the initiated. To supplement our knowledge we have to ferret out information to the extent that we have access to the internal literature of these groups, some of it, like the Dead Sea Scrolls, only recently available. Much material that would assist us has long been lost or destroyed, and we still know all too little about the tenets and distinguishing features of the groups in question.

The discovery of the Scrolls has turned scholarly attention again to the ancient references to the various Jewish and related sects and to those relics of them which have survived. Research in this field has now become of the most promising developments for the illumination of Christian origins. Here we can only touch on some aspects which have a bearing on the Messianic Hope and its interpretation by Jesus, and relate to the region in which he lived.

NOW HAS PAUL FAITHFULLY REPRESENTED THE MESSIAH AND HIS MISSION TO YOU IN THE NEW TESTAMENT?

Simply said: "No," and I can prove it.

As I have tried to teach our readership repeatedly that there are major problems when contrasting the Palestinian Masoretic Text with the Christian translations of the Old Testament, possibly no greater error exists than the one which I will allude to at present. Most Christians are familiar with the Apostle Paul and his statement in the Book of Romans, chapter 11:26 where it says: "And so all Israel shall be saved: even as it is written: 'There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer; He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob".

Answer for yourself: Paul states in Romans 11:26 "even as it is written." Do you know where Paul is referring to as it being written?

He is referring to Isa. 59:20. If you look up this passage in the Septuagint you will find the same as quoted above. Normally you might think the Rabbis translated this Greek passage from their Hebrew manuscripts for this is the party line held by most. However, serious study if done in this area will disclose to you that the Rabbis only translated the first five books of the Torah and did not translate from Hebrew into Greek the Prophets or the Writings. That means other than Jewish Rabbis translated these passages. You will find if you look deeply that the Greek Jews of Alexandria, Egypt, who were Phythagorean-Buddhists would be the ones to do this and that they changed much of the Jewish Scriptures to conform to their prior religious beliefs. We have their example as given above. If you consult the Jewish Scriptures in the Palestinian Masoretic text as contained today in the Stone Edition Tanakh for example, Isa. 59:20 reads entirely different. Let me quote it for you as taken from the Stone Edition Tanakh on page 1057: "A redeemer will come to Zion, and to those of Jacob who repent from willful sin---the word of Hashem."

Answer for yourself: Did you notice a big difference? They differ considerable in doctrine and content! One has Messiah coming and "cleansing" the sinner and one has Messiah coming to those who have "repented and cleansed themselves!"

Answer for yourself: What have I been showing you all along in these articles?

Namely, that Israel would have to attain a spiritual position expected of a holy Priest in order for the Kingdom to come and the Messiah to be revealed.

Answer for yourself: In comparing the above two quotes of Isa. 59:20, one as quoted by Paul and the other as taken directed from the Jewish Masoretic text, which passage best exemplifies such what the other scriptures have been saying?

I hope you readily see that the Jewish Tanakh expresses the same idea and not that of Paul. In the New Testament you have Paul's misquotation of the Jewish Bible. If you remember I have shared with you on many occasions that there are hundreds of examples where the Jewish text has been altered in the Greek Septuagint. These"misquotations" and "mistranslations" have been carried over into our English Old Testaments. Worse yet we have the New Testament quoting the errors in translation rather than the passages as contained in the Jewish Old Testament Scriptures. Let us not forget we are supposed to have a "translation" and not a "scriptural creationism" which serves some theological purpose or agenda. But unfortunately that is what we have in place of the "truth." Paul's writings in numerous places in the New Testament are less than trustworthy. The problem is that you most likely don't know where these "hot spots" are located. Some things he says are true; at other times they are not. In Isaiah 59:20, the prophet brings into view an inspiring and uplifting picture of the messianic age. In a repeating literary pattern unique to the Book of Isaiah, the prophet begins the chapter with harsh criticism of the obstinate sinner and dramatically ends with words of forgiveness to the penitent faithful and the reassuring promise of the messianic age. In 59:20, Isaiah describes this final redemption when the Messiah will come to his people who have turned away from transgression. These passionate words of encouragement set the stage for the extraordinary prophecies in the next chapter where Isaiah paints the eschatalogical picture of Israel, a righteous people, whose light will serve as a guide for all the surrounding Gentile nations (Isa. 60:1-2). For Christians, however, Isa. 59:20 presents a serious theological problem because in the third chapter of the Book of Romans, Paul insists that no one can merit his own salvation. One of the most fundamental underpinnings of Christian theology is the Pauline teaching that only the cross, not our own good deeds and heart-felt repentance, can save.

WHERE DID PAUL GET SUCH AN IDEA IN THE FIRST PLACE?

Paul bases this assertion primarily on the verse from Genesis 15:6, "And he (Abram) believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness." In both Romans 4:3 and Galatians 3:6, Paul sets out to prove from this verse that faith alone is what saves man-not his observance of the Law. Paul insists that this verse clearly demonstrates that Abraham was considered righteous through faith alone and not by his deeds. This quote, however, is taken completely out of context. But for Paul that is not new. A little further on in the Book of Genesis, the Torah describes the very fabric of Abraham's "faith." In Genesis 26:5, the Bible declares that "Because Abraham obeyed Me and kept My charge, My Commandments, My statutes and My laws." Listen dear ones, it was Abraham's unwavering obedience to the commandments of the Almighty in spite of the challenging tests placed before him that revealed his unyielding faith in God. Paul got it wrong. But again, that is nothing new for Paul.

Answer for yourself: Who then is the Redeemer coming to in Jacob if no one can turn from transgression?

Paul therefore rearranges the words of Isa. 59:20 so that Romans 11:26 appears to quote Isaiah to read that it will be the Redeemer (Jesus) who will turn away sin from Jacob. This, however, is not what Isaiah 59:20 says in the Palestinian Masoretic Text (the Bible Yeshua used). As mentioned above, the original verse proclaims that the Messiah will come only to those who have repented of transgression. It is not difficult, however, to understand why Paul found this revision of the prophets words necessary. In the next verse Paul continues to tamper and misquote the Jewish text to make it congruous with the alterations of the previous verse. Romans 11:27 was designed to appear as a continuation of Isaiah's words when he writes, "And this is my covenant unto them, When I shall take away their sins." Although the first half of this verse, "And this is my Covenant unto them," is correctly quoted from the first part of Isaiah 59:21 as seen in the Palestinian Masoretic Text, the second half has totally disappeared! Replacing this latter half of the verse which Paul expunged, is the interpolated text of Paul's inventive mind, " When I shall take away their sins." This segment was invented by Paul in order to support his modifications of the previous verse (11:26). Now before I share with you what the real Isaiah 59:21 says in the Palestinian Masoretic Text (the Bible Yeshua used) you ought by now be expecting it to say something about God Commandments and the necessity of obedience to them in order to attain righteousness. Let us now examine it so see if is says such things.

Isa. 59:21 as taken from the Stone Edition Tanakh on page 1057: "And as for Me, this is My covenant with them said HaShem, My spirit which is upon you and My words that I have placed in your mouth will not be withdrawn from your mouth nor from the mouth of your offspring nor from the mouth of your offspring's offspring, said HaShem, from this moment and forever."

Wow!

Notice how the two verses in the Stone Edition tie together. The Messiah will come only to those in Jacob who turn from sin. Such turning from sin will be accomplished in these last days (Daniel 9 timetable) through Messiah's words as we have seen before (preaching "repentance"....the message of Jesus by the way). Such words, if kept in the mouth of God people and not withdraw from their hearts and minds, will cause them to walk in the Commandments of God. Such will produce a righteous remnant in Israel which would qualify as the necessary remnant thus representing the Holy Nation and the Royal Priesthood to whom the Messiah would come. Such spiritual condition by the people of Jacob would be necessary to fulfill their calling as a light to the nations. This concept is totally foreign to the ideas of Paul who prided himself that he was no longer under such "Law" but under grace.

Somebody got it wrong....was it Isaiah or Paul?

Somebody did just what the Tanakh warned not to do when it said: "My words that I have placed in your mouth will not be withdrawn from your mouth nor from the mouth of your offspring….from this moment and forever."

Answer for yourself: Do you believe Isaiah was a prophet of God anointed with a message "forever?" How long is "forever?"

Answer for yourself: Is Paul, a Pharisee of Pharisees, considered somebody's "offspring?" Of course. Then it is very evident that Paul allowed to happen in his life what he was warned by Isaiah not to do…he let the Words of HaShem vanish from his mouth. The testimony of such a sacrilege can be found all through his writings in the New Testament. Paul apostasized from the faith of Yeshua and set the direction for the apostasy of the Gentile followers of Yeshua for the millennia to come. More to follow. Shalom.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #7

It used to be customary to think of Jesus as brought up in a Judaism which answered roughly to that of the second century A.D. and derived from that of the Pharisees, and which was much the same all over Palestine. This view is no longer tenable. Certain scholars long ago apprehended from the rabbinical literature that the people of the north and south did not see eye to eye on many things. It was possible even to detect in Primitive Christianity the clash of Galilean and Jerusalem traditions. But only lately has it become appreciated that northern Palestine down to the time of Jesus had retained many features of the old religion of Israel, when it was separate from Judah, and this not only among the Samaritans.

In Galilee those who were of Hebrew stock could be called Jews in that they served the God of Israel, but they differed in many ways from the Judeans. Their Aramean speech was hard to follow because they slurred the gutturals, and in their customs and religious observances they were distinguished in a number of respects from the southerners. The Galileans were proud, independent and somewhat puritanical, more resentful of alien domination and infringements of their liberty. They were to be found in the forefront of the resistance movement to the Romans and to the Jewish authorities subservient to them. When the imperial capitation tax was levied on the Jews in A.D. 6-7, it was the rebel Judas of Galilee who raised again the battle-cry "No Ruler but God". It was with these stubborn, hardy, and intensely patriotic folk that Jesus, himself a Galilean, had to deal.

In the spiritual sphere the Pharisees were not nearly so well entrenched in Galilee as they were in Judea. They had a following in the north because of their piety and because they represented themselves as the People's Party, but they had an uphill struggle to contend with the Galilean way of life. The Gospels indicate that to meet the challenge of the teaching of Jesus the local Pharisees found themselves in need of the help of experts from Jerusalem. That the Galileans and Judeans were still affected by age-old antagonistic feelings is brought out by the Gospel of John. Because of these North vs. South antagonisms we find as expected that at Jerusalem (Judea) there was opposition to the idea that the Prophet or the Messiah could possibly come from Galilee, and Jesus was taunted with being a demon-possessed Samaritan. On the other hand his Galilean followers remonstrated with him for wanting to return to Judea where 'the Jews of late sought to stone thee'. We are so familiar with the application of the term Jew to all persons of Jewish faith that we may not realize that in the New Testament the name is sometimes used in the narrower sense to mean Judeans, the inhabitants of Judea, compared with Galileans or Samaritans.

We have also to think of Galilee as part of a region in which sectarian communities flourished. Some of these, like the Rechabites and Kenites, had an ancient tribal history. The area in which they functioned was in the proximity of the Sea of Galilee, in the Decapolis, Gilead and Bashan, the Gaulan and Hauran, and towards Lebanon and Damascus.

The Damascus Document among the Dead Sea Scrolls tells how in the early history of the Community "the Penitents of Israel (understood as the Essenes or the super-ultra religious...more so than regular Pharisees) went forth out of the land of Judea and sojourned in the land of Damascus". There they entered into the New Covenant spoken of by Jeremiah the prophet, undertaking to separate themselves from all unrighteousness, not to rob the poor, the widow and the orphan, to distinguish between clean and unclean, sacred and profane, to keep the Sabbath strictly, also the festivals and the Day of Atonement, to love each one his brother as himself, and to care for the poor, the needy and the stranger. This was just one manifestation of the remnant hope of Israel. You need to understand that this "fraction" saw themselves as the "only" hope for Israel...the remnant hope for all of Israel and the world!

This indication of locality should be taken much more seriously and literally. Those who followed the restored Mosaism did not all gravitate towards Qumran. We have every reason to believe that many remained in the northern districts we have mentioned and founded settlements there. These 'Elect of Israel' of the Latter Days would encounter many kindred spirits in northern Palestine among groups carrying on the old ascetic Nazirite way of life abstaining from animal food and intoxicants. The term Essean-Essene appears to have come from the northern Aramaic word Chasya (Greek Hosios) meaning Saint. It would seem that we have to treat the term as generic, covering a variety of loosely related groups. For the people 'the Saints' were the Jewish eclectic bodies, who also bore or were given descriptive names according to their affiliations or characteristics.

There has been emerging ever clearer evidence that in the Galilean region an ancient Israelitish type of religion persisted in the time of Jesus, defying Judean efforts to obliterate it. To an extent we have to think of Jesus in the context of that northern faith which so strongly colored and influenced those communities of 'the Saints' which were spread across this area, and which gave rise to some expressions of Messianism with which he was acquainted. The Gospels identify him with the small Galilean town of Nazareth; but the name he bears, Jesus the Nazorean, has northern sectarian implications. United with the fact that he was of Davidic descent, the prophetic intimations could be seen to be fulfilled in him which spoke of the Messiah as the sprout (nezer) from the root of Jesse (Isa. xi. 1).

1 And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: (KJV)

NOW DON'T MISS THIS:

In the north [where Jesus grew up and ministered]:

- 1. The messianic doctrine of the Righteous King would join hands with the idea of a Suffering Just One and...
- 2. The conception of the plurality of the "Son of Man" would be personified as one individual....the Messiah would be seen as the ideal Israelite, the Son of Man [individual].

In the book of Daniel, if you read it real closely, you will see that....

the Saints [PLURAL] are to possess the kingdom and are likened to a Son of Man (please notice the plurality of the "Son of Man")! These Elect of the Last Times, amidst great persecutions first from Antiochus Epiphanies during the Maccabean era, then the Hasmoneans who took control of the Zaddok priesthood themselves, then the Romans with their enforced idolatry, regarded themselves as performing an atoning work by their sufferings.

In the Community Rule from Qumran [again the Essenes...super strict] it is said of the leaders of the Council: 'They shall preserve the Faith in the land with steadfastness and meekness, and shall atone for sin by the practice of justice and by suffering the sorrows of affliction ... And they shall be an agreeable offering, atoning for the land and determining the judgement of wickedness, and there shall be no more iniquity" (The Community Rule, viii. The Dead Sea Scrolls in English, Tr. Vermes).

SON OF MAN...COLLECTIVE...BECOME "SON OF MAN"

SINGULAR...PERSONIFIED IN JESUS...THE INDIVIDUAL

Since the Messiah was to be the Branch of Righteousness, the holy one who would bring iniquity to an end [by his preaching a message of repentance accompanied with Israel's repentance and good fruit] and reign over a redeemed people, it was not difficult to move from the Son of Man (collective as the nation as taught in Isaiah) to the Messiah as the Son of Man (singular), from the Elect Ones [plural] of Israel to the Elect One. If the Saints could achieve an atoning work by their sufferings, how much more the Messiah himself.

YOU NEED to understand the attachments of "suffering as an atonement" was primarily an Essenic belief fostered by the difficult times since the times of the Maccabees. The Tanakh teaches atonement quite differently from the way the Essenes envisioned it. What is of monumental importance for the Christian to know is that the Tankah, when translated by Greek Jews in Alexandria, these were Essenes who combined their "current theologies" among the text. We then get mixed into the Greek Translation of the Jewish Scriptures their concepts of crucifies sun-godmen who suffered as well. These concepts carry over of course in their "religious beliefs" to the times of Jesus. Simply said we end up with two different Messiahs; one of the Pharisees and one of the Essenes! Oral tradition, and its weakness, is that both concepts later became fused together. In the recording of such oral traditions we have the blending the Messiah of the Tanakh [the Messiah expected by the Pharisees] which was a human Davidic King which came preaching repentance in the preparation of Israel to be a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood along with the Essenic "Angel- Messiah" of the Cosmos crucified in the Sun. I will later deal with this topic in detail, but I thought you needed to know why in reading the New Testament we are confused without knowing as within it are Two Different Messiah...one real and one fake. It takes years of study and investigation for me to find this out. Now back to the article at hand.

For the historical Jesus especially with his northern associations, these blending of the above 2 concepts emerged clearly, and governed the character of his messianic mission. To those of these desperate times the blood of Israelites, especially the quintessential Israelite (the Messiah) and his blood would seal the New Covenant spoken of by Jeremiah for these Northern Essenes, and must be shed for many for the remission of sins." In other words attributed to him, "Ought not the Messiah to have suffered these things, and then enter into his glory (as king)?"

We can say, therefore, that at the time when Jesus lived not only was there a widespread expectation that the Messiah would shortly reveal himself, but also that in some of the current thinking about "he that should come" there was nothing inconsistent with the way in we Jesus understood the functions of the Messiah.

LETS DEAL WITH THE MESSIAH AND GOD ISSUE

In approaching the historical Jesus no question of his deity arises, since before the paganizing of Jewish belief in the development of Gentile Christianity no authority identified the Messiah with the Logos, the eternal Word of God, or conceived the Messiah to be an incarnation of God.

If you are a Christian you need to read the above sentence again. The very term, the Anointed One (messiah..small letters), indicates a call to office. It was not the title of an aspect of the Godhead. We do not have to entertain at all the notion that Jesus or any other claimant to be the Messiah in Palestine at this period could suppose himself for one moment to be divine. In the early history of Christianity it can be sufficiently seen how the doctrine arose out of the impact of the Gospel on the Gentile world, and in the circumstances was almost inevitable. There are plenty of instances still today of Christianity in many lands being colored by the polytheistic faiths the Church has conquered and absorbed. Our concern must be to overcome this barrier to our comprehension of Jesus, and reaching back to the core of Christianity to deal only with the requirements of the messiahship as he would have known them.

SON OF GOD.....LEARNING THE TRUTH FINALLY

Answer for yourself: What, then, of the term Son of God?

The Messiah was not directly so-called; yet he could be thought of as having a filial relationship to God without any idea among Jews that such a description implied deity, and this could happen in so far as the Messiah appeared as the representative Israelite and as the preordained King of Israel. Israel is called the Son of God, the First-born the Only-begotten and Dearly Beloved One, and Solomon son of David and by interpretation the Messiah is brought into a filial relationship with God. But this Sonship only meant close association in representing God and carrying out His will; it never meant that the "son" was himself a God as Gentile Christianity would later change the concept to pattern their false gods.

Sonship of God meant something quite different to the Jewish mind than to the Gentile mind. It does so even today!

The right understanding of Jesus commences with the realization that he identified himself with the fulfillment of the Messianic Hope. Only on this basis do the traditions about him become wholly intelligible. He was no charlatan, willfully and deliberately misleading his people, well knowing that his posing as the Messiah was fraudulent. There is not the slightest suspicion of presence on his part. On the contrary, no one could be more sure of his vocation than was Jesus, and not even the threat of imminent death by the horrible torture of crucifixion could make him deny his messiahship.

We have to accept the absolute sincerity of Jesus. But this does not require us to think of him as omniscient and infallible. The Old Testament's depiction of Messiah was fully human and not Deity. It is possible to hold that the Messianic Hope was not only a justifiable but indeed an inspired conception, and yet in many respects the predictions and expectations of the interpreters of the Scriptures could be quite wrong. It is one thing to see visions and dream dreams, and quite another when it is demanded that such visions and dreams be acted out on the plane of history in all their apocalyptic grandeur. How could Jesus soberly imagine that this could and would be accomplished? He could do so because he was a Jew, belonging to a people whose history, as they read it, was a record of miracles wrought on their behalf by God and who believed in greater miracles to come. But what Jesus anticipated would happen was no more likely to be correct than that of any other interpreter of the prophetic legends. During his lifetime he could to an astonishing extent because of his personal qualities enact and obtain compliance with the messianic scheme as he apprehended it. But he had no control over what lay beyond, and in much that he anticipated, the imminent appearance of the Kingdom of God, he was sadly mistaken. His only mistake was that he believed Israel, beginning in Galilee, would respond to his message of repentance and return to the Commandments of God. When the seventy returned he knew quite well at that moment that all his preaching had not produced the fruit he intended. He also knew one more thing; namely, that if where he had ministered for so long had failed to produce works in response to the message of repentance, then there would be little change of it as well when he would later go to Jerusalem. He knew at that time that the same fate awaited him as did ever previous failed "messianic hope".....he would die. It was at this time that he began to teach his followers that it was appointed of him to die! The Kingdom, in the absence of repentance by Israel, would not appear. His ministry to prepare Israel for the priesthood for all nations had failed.

FAILURE OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD TO APPEAR

The Church had to face before very long the acute problem of the postponement of his expectations, and dealt with it rather lamely and unconvincingly by largely spiritualizing them. The dogma of his deity did not allow it to be admitted that he had been in error.

The convictions Jesus had, as we must appreciate, rested on the oracular treatment of the Old Testament. The Jewish circles in which he moved were accustomed to applying the text of the sacred books not only to the messianic figures, but to other individuals concerned in the Cosmic Drama, and in general to the circumstances of what they believed to be the Last Times. Abundant illustrations of this kind of prophetic exegesis are furnished by the Dead Sea Scrolls and the apocalyptic literature. The Bible had secrets to yield which could be extracted by the right methods for the guidance and instruction of the Elect of the End of the Days.

Christianity got going when the followers of Jesus started to proclaim that in him the Messiah had come, and sought to prove this in the only way which would carry conviction, by demonstrating from that all that had befallen him had been foretold. Thus the need for the creation of documents stating such thoughts. There is now every reason to believe that the first written presentation of the gospel took the form of a compendium of such Biblical Testimonies, a work which in its various recensions underlies the canonical Gospels, and whose influence can be discerned on other parts of the New Testament and on much of the patristic literature. What the traditional Christian fails to understand is that such "documents" were created out of the need for religious propaganda more than the expression of historical truth. To do so much of the Old Testament had to be "reworked" to make it look as if the prophets had been speaking about Jesus when in reality their message was not of him or about his ministry in such cases used by the New Testament writer in their attempts to line Jesus to the Old Testament.

Thus the New Testament becomes a mixture of traditions of the Davidic Messiah along with the Essenic "cosmic redeemer as modeled by the "Angel-Messiah" of the Essenic Buddhists.

We have evidence that some accounts of the activities of Jesus became colored and elaborated by prophecies which it was deemed appropriate to identify with them regardless if the original intent of the author was to point to Jesus or not. Prophetic authority was needed to give weight to the message being taught by some of the current followers of Jesus. So in doing such the Old Testament passages from the Tanakh were purposefully misquoted, mistranslated, and taken out of context in order to "Jesusize" them. One's lack of understanding and familiarity of the Jewish Tanakh is the reason one can read the Old Testament from the KJV, for example, and not notice that what is being said, let alone quoted in the New Testament as "thus being fulfilled" in anything but that!

The Gospels insist that Jesus had some foreknowledge of his fate [death] which he had derived from the Scriptures ... both canonical as well as uncanonical. Significantly, he began to communicate this information only after he had seen the response from sending out the seventy and the lack of "repentance" in the testimonies of his disciples.

From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day." He declared this on the ground that these things were written concerning the Messiah, as he as you remember, was the "Jew of all Jews...the quintessential Jew...the anointed Jew of all Israelites...the Messiah. Isaiah 53, understood corporately as the nation who suffered for the whole world, was not pictured in Yeshua as the epitome of all Jews. Jesus understood and saw this as his role after the failure of the mission of the seventy.

Jesus exhibited such foreknowledge and this would be nothing extraordinary since it would be expected that he had access to such information as seems to be indicated by his familiarity with the idea of a Suffering Just One and with a Son of Man Christology. Josephus tells us of the Essenes: "There are some among them who profess to foretell the future, being versed from their early years in holy books and oracular utterances of prophets." In his writings he gives instances of their powers, and no doubt many in such circles did acquire remarkable insight and capacity for seership as a result of their training.

Believing himself to be the Messiah, it would not be surprising if Jesus should have sought to learn from "the saints" as much as he could of what was required of him and what would befall him. The early Christians delighted to pursue the quest for such fulfillments in his life to the extent that, with the help of the Greek Bible which had already been purposefully mistranslated by the Greek Jews and Essenes in Alexandria, Egypt. It was this Bible you remember which only the first 5 books were translated by the Rabbis and the rest by the Greek Jews of Alexandria. It is said of these Greek Jews of Alexandria, by Christian D. Ginsburg, in The Essenes-Their History and Doctrines, 1863, on page 32: "[speaking of the Greek Jew of Alexandria, Egypt] employed them to translate the Prophets and the Psalms into Greek, and that they availed themselves of the opportunity to introduce their tenets and rites into this version, now called the Septuagint." Thus the concept of the Buddhist Angel-Messiah, which finds its origin in sun-worship of the ancients, is written within the pages containing the Prophets and the Writings of the Bible which would serve as the foundation for all later Latin and English translations. Even worse the New Testament would quote from these Old Testament Prophets and Psalms and apply this to Jesus. The problem is that the Jewish Prophets and Writings in many cases never said such things let alone intended they be referenced to one named Jesus who would live 3 centuries later! These Greek Jews of Alexandria would produce the foundation which the followers of Jesus would later use to uncover allusions to Jesus in the most unlikely texts, and even create incidents in the life of Jesus to conform with supposed prophetic necessities.

Now...let us proceed.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #8

We are now standing with Jesus on the threshold of his ministry, as he began to follow that course of action which should accomplish what the will of God, as revealed to him from the Scriptures, demanded as the first phase of the work of the Messiah. In this phase he was called to function as the Teacher of Righteousness of the Last Days, as the Prophet like Moses, to preach repentance to Israel and reveal the character of the Kingdom of God in which the redeemed would participate. Elijah had come in John the Baptist to present him with the very words to signal the opening of his campaign, "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."

The Gospels look back on the activities of Jesus with the help afforded by the prophetic testimonies which the Nazoreans had zealously assembled as well as "created" as proof that he was the Messiah.

As an indication of his immediate function Jesus could use the words of Isaiah, 'The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord bath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord...' (Isa. 58:5). The region in which Jesus began to proclaim his message was in his native Galilee, among people of strongly independent spirit, whose faith and love of liberty made it hard for them to stomach the heathen domination of Rome and the immediate government of Antipas, son of their old enemy King Herod. Galileans were in the forefront of rebellious movements, and though at this time the zealots among them were relatively quiescent, they were ever ready to demonstrate passionately whenever a situation outraged their sentiments, and to resort to armed violence. If at this stage of his mission Jesus let it be known in Galilee that he was the Messiah the consequences could well be disastrous. To be the Messiah the Son of David, we must remember, meant that he was the legitimate king of Israel, to whom the militant elements would readily have rallied. He would openly be committing an act of treasonable sedition and treason which would not be tolerated by Rome and its representatives. However peaceful were his intentions, there would be outbreaks of violence. He would be hunted down by the Government forces, and either killed or seized and crucified. Even if by luck he managed to make his escape abroad the result would still have been complete failure. He would have been Messiah for a day, and patently a false Messiah into the bargain.

All this had long been known to Jesus, though most Christians even today have never given serious thought to the situation he faced. They simply have not realized the political implications, and how explosive the conditions were. But Jesus was well aware of them and proceeded circumspectly. He chose as his headquarters a small town on the shores of the Sea of Galilee which was essentially a commercial center with a fairly mixed population, including Roman and Jewish government officials. Capernaum was not the sort of place where the disaffected and those zealous for the Law of Moses congregated, which a conspirator would be likely to use as his base. When Jesus traveled round the country preaching the highly political as well as spiritual theme of the Kingdom of God along with "repentance and preparation for the imminent appearing Kingdom of God" he was forced to preach in parables, so that the spies and informers who made it their business to be present wherever crowds gathered round a public speaker would be unable to detect anything subversive or inflammatory in what he said. He conveyed that he was speaking cryptically in his parables by adding, "He who bath an ear to hear, let him hear," in other words, "He who can catch my meaning, let him do so."

Jesus was not interfered with at this time because so far as the State was concerned he gave the impression of being a harmless religious enthusiast. Some of his sayings, indeed, would meet with the full approval of the authorities. His instructions were excellent for these stubborn rebellious Galileans, and might help to keep them in order. "Resist not evil," the preacher declared, "and whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." And "whosoever shall force thee to go a mile, go with him two." This was with reference to the angaria, military requisitioning of labor and transport. "'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Such was types of repentance preached to those in captivity by the Romans.

But Jesus was not acting as an unpaid Government agent, though he was intentionally warning the people against taking the law into their own hands and retaliating. If they resorted to violence, if they even nourished hatred in their hearts, not only would they be playing into the hands of their enemies to their own undoing, they would be abandoning the path God had marked out for them as a 'kingdom of priests and a holy nation' to win the heathen to God. They would be behaving like the rest of the nations, and would be unworthy to share in the Kingdom of God. Many of the Pharisees taught in the same vein.

While his call to repentance was going out to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, Jesus had to take double precautions. He had to prevent the abrupt interruption of his activities, as those of John the Baptist had been cut short, by getting himself arrested and imprisoned as a menace to public security. He had also to guard against some ill-advised contrivance by his followers, or spontaneous outburst by the people, to acclaim him as king. He was to meet with narrow escapes in this connection. In the early part of his ministry, when anyone most unwisely hailed him as Son of David he silenced him immediately. He was in any case walking on a knife-edge by creating faith in his powers of healing. What he was doing could not fail to cause excited speculation about who he was. The people were expecting a deliverer, and flocked to anyone who might be the medium of the fulfillment of their hopes. Jesus denounced the hypocrites and false prophets, and the false Messiahs as well, as much as he did the men of violence. All were misleading the nation and diverting it from carrying out the will of God, trading on the people's emotions and longings. "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. But narrow is the gate and constricted the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Another step Jesus took was to enlist a small band of close disciples. The first group were fishermen from the lakeside township of Bethsaida. We do not know for certain whether Jesus was previously acquainted with some of them, though this is stated in the Fourth Gospel. Men like the brothers Simon and Andrew, James and John, were valuable recruits. They were patriotic and had a simple direct faith: they were physically strong and their personal loyalty could be counted on. Jesus nicknamed Simon 'the Rock' (Kepha, Peter), and James and John 'the Stormy Ones' (Boanerges). They would make a useful bodyguard. They also had boats; so that if danger threatened, or the attentions of the crowds became too overwhelming, a line of escape or retreat was open across the lake to the independent territory of the Decapolis, a league of ten self-governing mainly Greek cities.

By these various devices and tactics Jesus assured for himself, so far as he could, safety and freedom of movement, and opportunity to deliver his message without hindrance. Already he was proving, and we should remark this, a skillful strategist and planner, alert and resourceful. He could be very gentle, but there was nothing meek about him. He is revealed as a man of inflexible determination and keen perception with all the qualities of the born leader.

There was one thing, however, which Jesus may not sufficiently have taken into account, the extent of his fame as a wonder worker. As the days passed into weeks it speedily became evident that his mission was being gravely hampered by the multitudes who thronged to him, not primarily to listen to his teaching, but to be cured of their complaints or bring their relations for healing. Sometimes he had the utmost difficulty in getting about because of the press of people. He was aware that the time available to him was short, and at his present rate of progress the ground he would be able to cover would be very limited.

Some of the things Jesus had to say in defense of his conduct were beginning to antagonize a small but influential section of his audience, the local Pharisees. At great pains this fraternity of devout Jews had labored for upwards of a century to promote a stricter obedience to the Law (the Torah) among the people, so that they might merit God's favor and salvation. This needs to be appreciated by Christians for this was the same work as taught and labored at by Jesus! It was uphill work because there was an ingrained resistance, especially in Galilee, to being told what to do and what not to do. Like the Essenes, the Pharisees among other things regarded the rigid keeping of the Sabbath as imperative, for it was a divine institution marking the difference between the holy and the profane, between Israel and the nations. It was written: "If thou call the Sabbath a delight, the holy day of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing shine own ways, nor finding shine own pleasure, nor speaking shine own words; then ... I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord bath spoken it" (Isa. 58:13-14).

Now what I say next needs to be fully understood and contrasted with the work of the Pharisees and Jesus. The Essenes had abandoned all present hope of converting the people to the exact performance of the requirements of the Torah, and had withdrawn into their own disciplined camps and communities. But the Pharisees struggled gamely on with their missionary and educational work. Sometimes in their zeal, as is often the way, they lost sight of the spirit of an institution in stressing its strict observance; but their intentions were good. The anti-Semitic writers of the New Testament have purposely severely miscast the Pharisees in the worst possible light. Nothing could be further from the truth as discernible from historical records.

THE CALLING OF THE TWELVE

The people listened gladly, but only a meagre handful responded But Jesus understood the whole nation was called to be a Priest of YHVH to the seventy nations and not only a few. Jesus knew time was short and that he needed to reach more than just a few with his message. The decision Jesus took was to appoint twelve of his more intimate followers as envoys (apostles). Their number was symbolic of the twelve tribes of Israel. They were to travel through the country on his behalf. He gave them precise instructions. They were to confine their mission to Israelites, and not visit Gentile territory or enter any city of the Samaritans. They were to travel light and in poverty, as the Essenes did. They were to stay where they were welcomed, but only long enough to deliver their message of repentance and preparation for the imminent appearance of the Kingdom of God. Let us not forget that Israel was to merit based upon their righteousness the fulfillment of prophecies regarding the Kingdom of God. Where they were not received they were not to delay, but shake the dust of that house or city from their feet. "I tell you positively," he said, "it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the Day of Judgment than for that city." They must exercise the utmost care in their speech and conduct. "Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."

THE SENDING OUT OF THE TWELVE/SEVENTY...THE FIRST FRUITS OF ISRAEL....BAD FRUIT

Many scholars believe that the sending out of the "seventy" is a later adaptation of the sending out of the twelve. After Jesus' Great Commission the story was later changed and applied to what was then understood to be the seventy nations of the world at that time. So it is quite possible that the story of the "seventy" is in reality nothing but the story of the "twelve."

This action on the part of Jesus reveals his recognition of the urgency of his task and that the time available to him was short. Despite these endeavors to make every minute work, however, he had soon to admit to himself that his message had largely fallen on deaf ears. The result of the sending out of the seventy sealed it! The apostles when they reported back told of demons (understood as sicknesses being healed in the first century) being subject to them, but not of any other success. Strangely lacking was any word of "repentance" or the "testimonies of repentance" from those which were sent out to preach "repentance for the Kingdom of God was nigh." It was evident that the call to repentance had largely gone unheeded. By failing in Galilee, his own land, Jesus had lost the whole country. Notice that mankind today is no different. Men flock to hear prosperity messages and to get their healings, but few respond when the message is to tear their hearts and not their garments. Repentance and the return to holiness and living the Commandments of God today is not popular; not was it then when Israel just wanted a quick fix against their Roman persecutors. Jesus saw that Israel needed a spiritual healing more than a physical one. The people were blind to such needs. Modernism, the sin of today, captivated them as it does us today. Repentance is something for other people and "not me." The message of the seventy, lacking testimonies of tears of sorrow over sin, and the breaking of men's hearts before God due to their sinful natures, the lacking of testimonies of the seventy indicating there was a spiritual turn around in the lives of the people, made Jesus face the harsh reality that stared him right in the face....Israel was not fit for the Kingdom of God:

Luke 9:62

62 And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God. (KJV)

Through his study of the Scriptures Jesus must have believed that his message would probably be rejected. But he was in duty bound to proclaim it. There was always the hope of a miracle. He spoke more than once of the Prophet Jonah, born at Gath-Hepher in Galilee not very far from Nazareth, whose tomb was a place of pilgrimage. Though God had declared by Jonah that in forty days Nineveh would be overthrown, yet the people (Gentiles no less) repented and turned from their evil way; and God had spared Nineveh and the prophecy did not come to pass. The same thing could happen again. Jesus had at one time had hope and faith that Israel would finally become worthy of her high calling as a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood for the world.

But it was not to be. Strangely absent from the culmination of the ministry of Jesus in Galilee, as seen in the analysis of the report of the seventy, was the total absence of any word of repentance. Nevertheless Jesus was deeply moved and hurt at his failure, even though it had not really looked as if he would succeed. And being human he was angry too, angry at the stupidity, the senseless waste, the awful suffering that was bound to come upon his nation. Contemplating this fearful prospect the certainty now of his own fate paled into insignificance.

Jesus found vent for his feelings in bitter and scathing words. "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonah. For as Jonah was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of Man be to this generation. The queen of the south shall rise up in the Judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, what is greater than Solomon is here. The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the Judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonah; and, behold, what is greater than Jonah is here. Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon in the Day of Judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the Day of Judgment than for thee. Whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He bath a devil. The Son of Man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of tax collectors and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children" (Matt 11:16-19, 21-23; Matt.12: 39-42; Luke 10:13-15, Luke 11: 29-32).

Yet it was of no avail for Jesus to be searingly reproachful, and useless to grieve. Luke alone reports a final effort in sending out seventy disciples to preach as previously he had sent out the twelve. The fact had to be faced that the ministry of Jesus had failed in accomplishing its goal. The Teacher of Righteousness, along with his message of repentance and preparation for leading the world to the Kingdom of God, had been rejected by Israel. The Christian need to understand this; Jesus as their Messiah deliverer was "not rejected" by the people for all wanted to be delivered from the Roman yoke, but Jesus the Prophet from God which brought them a message from God to "repent before the Kingdom of God could come" was rejected. Unhappily it had come to pass as foretold, "By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: for this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should turn again, and I should heal them" (Isa. 7:9-10; Matt. 13:13-15).

Now, as the prophecies had indicated to Jesus, the second phase of the work of the Messiah would come into operation. There was no time to be wasted in vain regrets. Sadly but resolutely he braced himself to face the future, and carry out God's will to the end. Jesus understood that as every prior failed Messianic Movement had ended in the death of its "leader" so likewise was his fate. It was unavoidable. Jesus knew he would die not. It could NOT be prevented! The Kingdom would not come.

He would not be King. Israel would not repent and be worthy of the Priesthood to all nations. God would not intervene from Heaven and change the laws of nature. The Gentiles would not be at that time coming up to Zion to hear the words of the Torah. The dead will not be raised. The lamb would not be laying down with the lamb; there would not be world peace. And if that was not enough, the Messiah would be killed in a failed Messianic attempt. Israel would fail her day of visitation.

Did people think he was harsh when he refused one would-be follower's request to be permitted first to bury his father, and another's to take leave of his family? The words were drawn from an aching heart when he said, "Leave the dead to bury their dead" and, "No man, having put his hand to the plough and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God."

In the next and final articles in this series I wish to trace in the New Testament what you just read. Upon planting , watering, and tilling the soil in which the Olive Tree of Israel has been planted, and seeing that there was not fruit in due season, Jesus would recognize that Israel had literally cursed itself.

The prophecy of John the Immerse was coming true:

Matt 3:10

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree [Israel being symbolically represented as an Olive Tree in Scripture] which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Luke 3:8-9

8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

9 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Luke 3:9

In the absence of the fruit of repentance, Jesus had no recourse but to say when finally entering Jerusalem:

Luke 19:41-44

41 And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it,

42 Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, 44 And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

He knew he was to die in light of the failure of the seventy to bring a good testimony...that Israel had brought forth fruits worthy of repentance. The prophecies would not be fulfilled. The Kingdom would not come. The Messiah, Jesus, would not fulfill them. YHVH would not allow His will to fulfill them. His agent, Jesus, as the anointed of Israel, would not be recognized as King by all mankind. The failure of the prophecies to be fulfilled in no way takes away for the man Jesus of the Bible.

In an attempt to explain away the failure of the Jewish Scriptures to be fulfilled by those believing Jesus to be the Messiah, the Gentile Church chose to use the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures which already been altered by the Greek Jews of Alexandria, Egypt, and began to attribute to Jesus events which were recorded by these Greek Essenic Jews which took such beliefs from their prior Pythagorean and Buddhist heritages. In this way parallels to his live could be read back into these texts and called "fulfillments" because there was no way one could look at the live of Jesus and the Jewish Scriptures as written by the Prophets along with the Writings and say they were fulfilled, let alone by Jesus.

Oral traditions were created about Jesus following his death by these Essenic Greek Jews and later Gentiles as well which found their origin in the mistranslations of the Jewish Bible by the Greek Jews of Alexandria which wrote into these volumes many of their myths of their sun-godmen who were crucified in the cosmos. Only in developing "fulfillments" that coincided with the sun-godmen of the Essene Phythagorean-Buddhists could Jesus be made to look as it he was fulfilling anything. Israel prevent the real fulfillments and the ball is in their court as well today.

The Jewish Old Testament Prophecies laid unfulfilled after his death and remain so today! The Jews familiar with the Tanakh knew it then and know it today. It is the Christians who have the grossly mistranslated Old Testaments in their Christian Bibles who are unaware!

One must understand that the Essenes which retired to the desert in 170 B.C.E. as a righteous Zaddok movement in defiance of the corrupt Temple practices were a far cry from existed as "Essenic beliefs" in the days of Jesus. The best account of this "spiritual de-evolution" that I have ever read or found in Martin Larson who documents the evolution of these Essenes. Let me recommend many of his books which will lay this out for you:

The Essene Christian Faith

The Story of Christian Origins

The Essene Heritage

The Religion Of The Occident

After getting one or all of the above works and reading them, along with books by Hugh Schonfield, a Jewish scholar who believes Jesus to be Messiah, these aspects of which I wrote become crystal clear.

Now in the next article...we will trace Jesus recognition that he was to die following the return of the seventy and the failure of them to recount the repentance of Israel in preparation of the Kingdom of God which was imminently to occur according to Daniel chapter 9.

Shalom.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #9

Of the Branch of David for whom pious Jews waited it was written: 'With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked" (Isa. 11:4).

Answer for yourself: In the above passage what are to be the "tool" of the Messiah to effect change?

- Judge (implied vocal)
- Reprove (implies vocal)
- Rod of his mouth
- Breath of his lips

Answer for yourself: What is the common denominator in the above 4 actions from Israel's expected Messiah? That was easy, or was it? The Messiah will "speak" and in his speech will be "judging, reproving, smiting, and slaying". Without a doubt we find that the actions of the Messiah will effect change through the vessel of teaching and preaching. Such will be the hallmarks of the ministry of the Messiah. Through the Messiah's ministry of teaching and preaching mankind will be moved to repent.

The sharp two-edged sword of the Messiah would be no physical weapon, but justice and righteousness. This is critically important to understand if we are ever to come to terms with why the Kingdom did not appear during the days of Yeshua or following his ministry.

Dating from the first century B.C. we have an exposition of the kind of Messiah who was expected, based on the passage from Isaiah just quoted.

"And a righteous king and taught of God is he that reigneth over them: and there shall be no iniquity in his days in their midst (in the nation of Israel….remember Israel needed to merit the Kingdom through righteousness), for all shall be holy and their king is the Lord Messiah. For he shall not put his trust in horse and rider and bow (not in a military Messiah), nor shall he multiply unto himself gold and silver for war, nor by ships shall he gather confidence for the day of battle ... For he shall smite the earth with the word of his mouth even for evermore ... He himself also is pure from sin, so that he may rule a mighty people, and rebuke princes and overthrow sinners by the might of his word. And he shall not faint all his days, because he leaneth upon his God: for God shall cause him to be mighty through the spirit of holiness, and wise through the counsel of understanding, with might and righteousness' (Psalms of Solomon, 17: 35-42).

Answer for yourself: As what was to be the result of such "words of Messiah" and "might of his words"? We are told in the verse 35 of the Psalms of Solomon that "there would be no iniquity in his midst"? And where was Messiah to come? To Israel of course. There were to be no iniquity in his midst!

That means the Messiah's ministry would succeed and that the people of Israel would respond by tearing their hearts and not their garments when hearing his words. This was the only way to prepare the fallow ground of the hearts of Israel to merit the Kingdom and her King. This was the only way for Israel to be heirs to "fulfilled Messianic promises". Israel had to merit her calling; she had to be worthy of such a high calling as of God's Holy Nation and God's Royal Priesthood for the nations. It all depended upon God's servant being worthy of her calling. Now you understand the steady stream of prophets with the same message: repentance manifested in true love through the obedience of the Commandments of God!

Isa 5:7

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry. (KJV)

God had tried to prepare His vineyard for the sake of the world. The hope of the world and the coming of His Messiah was determined upon His nation rising to the great call God had given them.

Isa 5:1-9

- 1 Now will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill:
- 2 And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a winepress therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.
- 3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.
- 4 What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?
- 5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:
- 6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.
- 7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.
- 8 Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!
- 9 In mine ears said the LORD of hosts, Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

Jesus would say of this nation:

Matt 23:31

31 Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. (KJV)

The last chance for Israel was at hand. The last chance for the world as well. The Messiah was among them finally. His job was to evaluate the fruits of repentance of God's people. He looked for a holy people.

Matt 21:19

19 And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away.

And....

Matt 21:33-41

- 33 Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country:
- 34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.
- 35 And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.
- 36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first: and they did unto them likewise.
- 37 But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son.
- 38 But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.
- 39 And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.
- 40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?
- 41 They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

THE TIME WAS ALMOST UP FOR THE REVELATION OF THE MESSIAH ACCORDING TO DANIEL CHAPTER 9

The Son of David who was to come would be holy and just, 'the Messiah of righteousness', as he is called in the Dead Sea Scrolls, living in close communion with God and obedient to his will. It is by the word of truth that he will convict and defeat his adversaries and not through military might!

That the Messiah should have such a character fully accords with what I have brought out about the nature of the Messianic Hope. The goal was the universal rule of God acknowledged by all men, when war, strife and wickedness should cease. To reach that goal it was required that Israel should be 'a kingdom of priests and a holy nation'. I have said nothing new since the beginning of these articles but only reinforced concepts which lay silent in the Christian Church.

Answer for yourself: How much more must the Messiah, who would come in God's name, be the perfect Israelite?

To him would apply the words of the Psalmist: 'Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, even thy God, bath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows ... Then said I, Lo I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea thy law is within my heart' (Ps. xlv. 7, xl. 7-8). This was the likeness to which the Messiah was expected to conform, and this is what Christians should have been taught.

It was said of him: 'And he shall gather together a holy people, whom he shall lead in righteousness: and shall judge the tribes of the people that bath been sanctified by the Lord his God. And he shall not suffer iniquity to lodge in their midst; and none that knoweth wickedness shall dwell with him. For he shall take knowledge of them that they be all sons of their God, and shall divide them upon the earth according to their tribes ... He shall judge the nations and the peoples with the wisdom of his righteousness. Selah' (Psalms of Solomon, xvii. 28-31).

Answer for yourself: What kind of people was the Messiah coming for? A holy people whom he will lead in righteousness. The Messiah was to gather about himself a holy people. Of course not all is expected to be holy, but definitely a remnant is expected.

Israel had been told repeatedly the necessity of being "spiritually ready" to accept her Messiah. Israel's failure in this regard would mean that the Messiah would not be revealed and that the Kingdom would be postponed!

Let me reiterate one more time as a refresher as noted on a previous article. Most Christians are familiar with the Apostle Paul and his statement in the Book of Romans, chapter 11:26 where it says: "And so all Israel shall be saved: even as it is written: 'There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer; He shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob'".

Answer for yourself: Paul states in Romans 11:26 "even as it is written." Do you know where Paul is referring to as it being written? He is referring to Isa. 59:20.

If you look up this passage in the Septuagint you will find the same as quoted above. Normally you might think the Rabbis translated this Greek passage from their Hebrew manuscripts for this is the party line held by most. However, serious study if done in this area will disclose to you that the Rabbis only translated the first five books of the Torah and did not translate from Hebrew into Greek the Prophets or the Writings. That means other then Jewish Rabbis translated these passages. We have their example as given above.

If you consult the Jewish Scriptures in the Palestinian Masoretic text as contained today in the Stone Edition Tanakh for example, Isa. 59:20 reads entirely different. Let me quote it for you as taken from the Stone Edition Tanakh on page 1057: "A redeemer will come to Zion, and to those of Jacob who repent from willful sin---the word of Hashem."

The Messiah will come only to those in Jacob who turn from sin. Such turning from sin will be accomplished in these last days (Daniel 9 timetable) through Messiah's words as we have seen before (preaching "repentance"....the message of Jesus by the way). Such words, if kept in the mouth of God people and not withdraw from their hearts and minds, will cause them to walk in the Commandments of God. Such will produce a righteous remnant in Israel which would qualify as the necessary remnant thus representing the Holy Nation and the Royal Priesthood to whom the Messiah would come. Such spiritual condition by the people of Jacob would be necessary to fulfill their calling as a light to the nations. This concept is totally foreign to the ideas of Paul who prided himself that he was no longer under such "Law" but under grace. Somebody got it wrong?

Somebody did just what the Tanakh warned not to do when it said: "My words that I have placed in your mouth will not be withdrawn from your mouth nor from the mouth of your offspring….from this moment and forever."

IN THE ABSENCE OF FRUITS OF REPENTANCE.....JESUS KNEW ISRAEL MISSED HER VISITATION...AND THAT HE WOULD DIE....AND THE PROPHECIES WOULD NOT BE FULFILLED...AT LEAST NOT THEN

We now close this series as we look at the sending out of the seventy as depicted in the Gospel of Luke chapter 10 and the final realization of Jesus that the prophecies will not be fulfilled. Again, this does not make him any less the Messiah, but explains why the Gentile Church would alter the Scriptures to "protect the image" of Jesus....a failed Messiah. Again, it was not his fault! And again you should want to know the truth about Jesus and not accept an altered revelation because of the ignorance and anti-Semitism of the early Gentile Church.

Now, let us finish.

LOOKING AT JESUS AND THE FAILURE OF THE MESSIANIC PROPHECIES TO BE FULFILLED #10

We have spent considerable time looking at the expected Messianic revelation as seen through the eyes of the Scriptures as well as the religious leaders of Jesus' day. We saw that the three major movements of the Essenes, the Sadducees, and the Pharisees attempted in their own ways to promote strict adherence to the Commandments of God as the sole way of adverting a further judgment by God let alone merit the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven and the revelation of Messiah King. In this way all three of these religious movements without First Century Judaism agreed that the only way to merit and be worthy of the prophecies being fulfilled was for the nation of Israel to rise up spiritually and be worthy of her calling as a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood. Remember this, that before the Priest could bring sacrifices in behalf of the people, he had to deal with his own sin first! The only hope for the peoples of the world was for Israel to be worthy of the Priesthood to which see was called.

Isa 2:3

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

Zech 8:23

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you.

Understand that the above scenarios would never happen unless Israel merited her calling as the Priest of YHVH and function like said Priest by being a bridge between the people and God!

We have seen when reading the Bible how God continually sent His ambassadors with the message of repentance to Israel. We also saw that such a lineage of "holy ones" with such messages of "repentance and renewed obedience to the Commandments of God" included not only Moses, the Judges, and the Prophets, but that it culminated with Jesus of Nazareth. We saw how not only Jesus, but John the Immerser as well as Peter began their ministries with the same first word: "Repent...for the Kingdom of God is nigh." Again this was the first step in the arrival of the Kingdom of God for the world.

We saw how Jesus continually taught repentance in hopes of elevating Israel in that most auspicious time to merit and be worthy of her calling to be a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood. We saw as well that in judging the fruit Jesus ultimately saw that the fruits unto repentance was missing. We then saw the inevitable as understood by Jesus that he was to die. Now let us examine this in detail as we close.

THE MESSAGE INTENDED TO PREPARE ISRAEL FOR HER

CALLING

Matt 3:2

2 And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Matt 4:17

17 From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

Mark 1:15

15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that in every scripture above that "repentance" is irreversibly connected with the coming and manifestation of the Kingdom of God and her King?

Answer for yourself: Did you also notice that the admonition of "believe the Gospel" referred to repentance and not Paul's version of his own gospel which was to believe in his understanding of Jesus? The "good news" for Jesus was not for one to believe that he was God or that he was to die for their sins; rather, it was that God forgives the sins of the repentant for such actions by Israel will bring her Messiah.

Mark 6:12

12 And they went out, and preached that men should repent.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice in the above passages that "repentance" was preached as the prerequisite to the manifestation of the Kingdom of God and not Paul's Christology or the deity of Jesus. Nothing could be further from their minds.

Luke 13:3

3 I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

Matt 3:8

8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:

Mark 2:17

17 When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

Luke 3:8

8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

Acts 5:31

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

Answer for yourself: How could just one man like Jesus accomplish such a great task as reaching and preparing a whole nation for his Priestly calling? To accomplish this Jesus first called and sent twelve disciples to Israel with this message.

Matt 10:1

1 And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.

Matt 10:7

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. As you have previously seen such preaching of the Kingdom of God's nearness included the admonition "to repent."

Luke 9:1-2

1 Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

Notice that Jesus and his disciples and apostles were seeking a Israel worthy of their Messiah and worthy of leading the world as God's Holy Nation and Royal Priesthood. It was through the preaching of the "word" of Yeshua that Israel, or those who had ears to hear, would repent and turn their hearts back to the fathers of the faith.

Mal 4:5-6

- 5 Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the LORD:
- 6 And he shall turn the heart if the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. John the Baptist had begun the final hour push to repent for the time was short and Jesus only picked the ball up so to speak when John was killed.

WITH THE MESSAGE TO REPENT….WAS GOD'S MERCY AS SEEN IN PHYSICAL HEALINGS

Matt 10:8

8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

What is important to notice is that healings of physical sicknesses went with the preaching of repentance. God's love heals us often when we are not worthy. This will be very important when we later come to the report of the "seventy" when they returned from the mission on which they were sent by Jesus.

WAS ISRAEL WORTHY….TO BE YHVH'S PRIEST TO THE NATIONS?

Matt 10:11

11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence.

Matt 10:13

13 And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

Matt 10:38

38 And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

Matt 22:8

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy.

Luke 3:8

8 Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

Luke 15:19

19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

Sadly, Luke 15:19 would certainly be fulfilled in Israel in 70 C.E.!

IF ISRAEL WAS NOT FOUND WORTHY…WHAT DID JESUS SAY WOULD HAPPEN?

Matt 10:15

15 Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

God's Divine judgment would be forthcoming. Understand this, in the failure of Israel to repent, to return to God with all their heart, to cleave to the commandments of God, and make themselves fit for their calling as YHVH'S Priest to the Gentile Nations, then punishments and the death of the nation would be inevitable. One only needs to read Matt. 10: 16-22 to see that persecutions and possible death was in store for those who preached repentance and preparation for the Kingdom of God from those who rejected the message.

Matt 11:20-24

- 20 Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not:
- 21 Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.
- 22 But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.
- 23 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.
- 24 But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

This was literally a prophecy of the impending doom for Israel in 70 C.E. if she failed to head her last warning to repent.

JESUS GIVES THEM THE SIGN OF JONAH…WHAT WAS IT?

Jesus continues his teachings and warnings by promising that the only sign Israel would get would be the sign of the prophet Jonah.

Matt 12:38-45

- 38 Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee.
- 39 But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas:
- 40 For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Now I am going to ask you to think deeply. Since childhood we have been told that the sign of Jonah was that he was swallowed by a great fish for three days and then spit out and lived. Let me ask you, who saw him in the belly of the great fish? Would not someone need to "see" that for it to be recognized as a "sign?" Jesus said that the current generation would see Jonah's sign and was Jesus to be swallowed by a great fish and be seen by all of that generation? It seems to me that if Jonah's sign was being swallowed by a great fish then Jesus would need to be swallowed by a great fish as well. But what if Jonah's sign was something else and we have not learned it properly? Could that be possible? Yes. How could the people of Jesus' day see him in the belly of a fish? Was this not something that "all" could see in that generation?

Answer for yourself: Ask yourself what was Jonah called to do? He was to preach "repentance" to the generation of Nineveh. Does this sound familiar to what you have been hearing Jesus both say and preach?

The sign of Jonah to which Israel was to witness was nothing more than another Prophet of God (Jesus) sent to them to preach repentance to that generation for the time was short and judgment was at their door if they failed to respond just the way it was for Nineveh. Nineveh repented but Israel did not and would be judged severely by God in 70 C.E.

41 The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here. [NOTICE the lack of repentance in Jesus' mind concerning Israel's present generation].

Answer for yourself: Why would the generation of Nineveh rise up and judge Israel? Because they repented and Israel was not to.

Now Jesus says something of an allegorical nature by referring to the Nation of Israel through the picture of a man.

- 43 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none.
- 44 Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.
- 45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation. [NOTICE the lack of repentance in Jesus' mind concerning Israel's present generation].

So, being given the opportunity to repent to the next generation which is roughly 40 years, in the failure of such repentance the end result would and judgment upon them would be so much worse had they done so. Also notice Jesus calls this present generation a "wicked generation" because there were not repenting and not rising to their calling of their Priesthood.

NOT EVEN JESUS' FAMILY WOULD HEAR HIS MESSAGE

Matt 12:46-50

- 46 While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him.
- 47 Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee.
- 48 But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?
- 49 And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!
- 50 For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

NOTICE WHERE JESUS GREW UP AND WHERE HE MINISTERED MOST HIS MESSAGE WAS NOT HEEDED

Understand it is to these same people that he would later send the "seventy" with the messages of repentance.

Matt 13:53-58

- 53 And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, he departed thence.
- 54 And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works?
- 55 Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?
- 56 And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things?
- 57 And they were offended in him. But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and in his own house.
- 58 And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

JUST A QUICK SUMMARY

If you have not noticed I basically have taken the text of the Gospel of Matthew in order and demonstrated to you the story hidden within it. Since the calling of the twelve and equipping them with the message of the Kingdom of God, this message has been rejected repeatedly; and not by strangers, but by those who knew Jesus best and whom watched him grow up amidst them. In the wake of such rejections Jesus promised God response of judgment and destruction. The whole of the mission and message of Jesus was one of repentance and return to the obedience of the Commandments of God which, if heeded, would assure Israel not miss her calling nor her King nor the Kingdom of God which was, according to Daniel 9, imminent.

YET JESUS HAD HOPE HIS MESSAGE WOULD SUCCEED...AND THE KINGDOM WOULD COME

Matt 10:23

23 But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come. One can see from this the imminent expectation of Jesus that Israel would yet respond and be worthy of her calling.

FINALLY…JESUS IS RESOLVED TO THE FAILURE OF ISRAEL TO REPENT…WATCH WHAT HE SAYS

Matt 16:21

21 From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.

I would have you notice one more important thing. I have, in order, read and cut from the texts of the New Testament the same theme as taught by Jesus; from the calling of the twelve and their commissioning to the self-realization of Jesus that his mission has failed. We say in the mind and life of Jesus that he came to realize that Israel will not repent, that he will not be ushered in as Israel's Messiah, that the Kingdom of God will not materialize, and that the prophecies of the Old Testament will not be fulfilled at this time. Also, he knew that as a failed Messiah he would go the way of all failed "anointed leaders;" he would be killed.

LETS LOOK AT THE SEVENTY

1 After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

Scholars maintain that this account in Luke is nothing more than a "doublet;" a retelling of the same previous account of the sending of the twelve with a few additions. It was customary to believe that there were seventy nations in the world at that time, and it would customary to adapt the "sending of the twelve" to the "sending of the seventy" in order to imply the message was intended to be taken to the whole known world. We must remember that oral traditions from various places, which often differed, were collected and finally put into written forms much later. This made it quite easy for twelve to become seventy.

Luke 10:9

9 And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you (implies repentance).

Luke 10:10-18

- 10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not (reject the message of repentance), go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,
- 11 Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.
- 12 But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.
- 13 Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.
- 14 But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.
- 15 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.
- 16 He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.

Again, we have the admonitions as we did with the twelve along with the same instructions.

ANALYSIS OF THE SENDING OUT OF JESUS' DISCIPLES AND THEIR REPORT BACK TO JESUS

Now the New Testament does not record the reporting back of the twelve to Jesus following their missionary journey. But it does contain the report of the seventy.

Now notice something rather puzzling in this report:

17 And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils ("devils" and "demons" was understood in the first century as the expression for the healings of diseases) are subject unto us through thy name.

Now again notice something rather puzzling:

18 And he said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

Answer for yourself: What is wrong with this picture? Do you see it?

Answer for yourself: Don't you find it rather puzzling that as I have shown you that Jesus continually and continually preached "repentance" as a necessity for the "emergence of the Kingdom of God" but yet the "praise reports" from the seventy, whom he sent out to preach the Kingdom and repentance, upon their return their comments and testimonies are completely devoid of any mention of any repentance from their ministry efforts? Not one mention of a contrite heart or tears. Not one mention of brokenness and crying over sin. Not one mention of sin at all. Not one report of turning back to Moses and the Commandments of God. Not one report of heightened obedience to the Commandments of God. Finally, not one report of anyone in Israel rising to their high calling to be a Holy Nation or a Royal Priesthood to the Gentile Nations of the world.

In fact these "missionaries" sound so familiar to what we hear today on our radios and televisions. It is never difficult to gather a crowd when one preaches "how to get rich," or "God's prosperity," or "God wants you healed" messages. People will flock to such gatherings. Everything is a success; or at least it seems that way. But when was the last time you went to hear a preacher preach on "sin" and "repentance?" When was the last time you turned out to hear how we have broken God's Commandments? Do you care to know how you do everyday because of the wrong gospel that has been preached to you in Jesus' name no less? Probably few of our readers can relate to this in this Christian climate of "we are OK, you are OK" messages. I can just hear Benny Hinn, Paul Crouch, or Rod Parsley say, if they had been there to hear the reports of the seventy: "Praise God, we need more satellites, more antennas, we need a bigger auditorium next time, we need to rent Madison Square Garden, we need prime time, we need to sell handkerchiefs, we need more cassettes to see, more books, we need to send out 700 next time."

Something was missing from their report and Jesus knew it! They did not. Do you?

As long as the gospel we preach today is not the one Jesus believed and preached then we only postpone the coming of the Kingdom of God and her King. then and as long as we preach As long as our churches fail to hear the words of Jesus and prefer the words of Paul then the coming of the Messiah is pushed further off into the distance. Conspicuously absent in the Gospel preached by Jesus is any mention that belief in his Messiahship is necessary for one's salvation. Conspicuously absent in the Gospel preached by Jesus is any mention that belief in his blood and death is required by God as an atonement for one's sin. Conspicuously absent in the Gospel preached by Jesus is any mention that the Law and the Commandments of God have passed away or will be modified by his soon coming death.

Repentance seems to always be for someone else; not for those who go to churches and hear perversions of the gospel that Jesus taught. The gospel writers had to cover up the fact that Jesus' response to this tragic report from the seventy was that he was to die! God forbid that you read the New Testament and understand the Gospel Jesus taught; you are supposed to hear and believe in the Gospel of Paul instead. God forbid you get the idea in your head that the Law has not passed away and that you begin to examine Biblical Atonement for yourself. If that were to happen you might see Biblical Judaism as the religion of Jesus and as a non-Jew find your place within it as a Godfearer. Rome could not have that.

So the account is passed off as a joyous expression of healings. Now don't get me wrong, there is nothing wrong in being healed. Such is God love. But what of our love for God as demonstrated in repentance and a return to living according to His Commandments?

DID JESUS CONSIDER THE MISSION OF THE SEVENTY A SUCCESS?

If you just casually read the New Testament you might be led to think that Jesus had considered it a success as well. But you would not what comes next which I will show you.

One has to wonder if Jesus saw it that way; especially in light of what he teaches next. Let us put on the shelf for now Jesus' response that he "beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven" which was inserted into the traditions about Jesus in order to protect him again from being the leader of a failed Messianic Movement. But again I stress the problem was not him; but the lack of righteousness and the failure of Israel to repent and return to God with all their heart and soul; for such was demanded of God's Royal Priests.

LET US CONTINUE TO READ MATTHEW AND SEE WHAT JESUS SAYS NEXT

Jesus continues to teach following his declaration that he was going to die because Israel will not measure up and merit the Kingdom of God in that generation. In chapter 19, Jesus continues to teach about the Kingdom of God and its benefits.

Matt 19:16-17

16 And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

Matt 19:17

One thing is certain. When the eschatalogical Kingdom of God appears death will cease. Eternal Life will be a realization. So, in veiled words, the man above asked Jesus a very deep question that has many different levels. He was asking first of all about what he must DO and NOT BELIEVE to have Eternal Life. Notice that Eternal Life is something that comes in response to our actions and not to just mental ascent to a fact or tradition.

Interestingly Jesus directs him to the Commandments of God as the answer to how to obtain Eternal Life. This is completely opposite to the Gentile Christian message today which teaches obtaining Eternal Life by ascribing to Paul's vision of Jesus. Repentance and obedience to the Commandments of God is how the Kingdom of God was to be brought, is to be brought, and will always be brought.

THE PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD COMES NEXT

Matt 20:1

1 For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his

Again we read the teachings of Jesus in succession. I will not quote the whole of the parable as it is too long for this article, but understand Jesus mentions that in the vineyard of God those given oversight to bring forth fruit stand idle. He says it three times. Little was being done to bring forth the harvest and the Kingdom of God by Israel.

Now Jesus says something startling!

Matt 20:17-19

- 17 And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,
- 18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,
- 19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

Now please listen to this.

Matt 20:16

16 So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen.

In the vineyard of God all of Israel was called to repent and prepare to be a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood. After all the preaching by Moses, the Judges, Samuel, the Prophets, and finally Jesus, the fruit of such preaching was not to be found in the vineyard of God nor on the Olive Tree of Israel. All of Israel was called to be a Holy Nation; too few responded. This is verified in the response of the seventy which failed to utter one word about repentance and a return to God and His Commandments by the people of Galilee where Jesus had ministered for almost 3 years. Israel had failed its calling and its purpose being sanctified out by God at Sinai.

NOW …HERE IT COMES…DON'T MISS IT

Jesus realized that he had not see the fruit of repentance he had hoped to see and which was so desperately needed if his ministry and message was to succeed. In the failure to see such works of repentance he acknowledged: "many were called to be a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood….too few responded."

Right after the above realization and acknowledgment on the part of Jesus…..he immediately says:

Matt 20:17-19

- 17 And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,
- 18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,
- 19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him...

Jesus was resided to the fact that he had lost Israel, or should I say Israel had lost herself and her calling. She had missed the days of her visitation.

THE CURSING OF THE FIG TREE

If we keep reading in succession on the way to Jerusalem Jesus sees a fig tree (again a symbol for Israel). One needs to know that a fig tree bears its fruit before its leaves which is somewhat unusual. This means that if the tree had leaves one would expect normally to find fruit as well. Jesus saw leaves but no fruit. Again this was not the normal course of affairs expected. The analogy is that with all the preparation given to God's vineyard to prepare it for its calling as a Priest to the Nations from Moses on down through Jesus one would expect Israel to be ready to bring the Kingdom and her King and be heir of the fulfilled prophecies of the Old Testament.

Matt 21:17-19

- 17 And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.
- 18 Now in the morning as he returned into the city, he hungered.
- 19 And when he saw a fig tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig tree withered away. The reader needs to understand that a fig tree bears its fruit before its leaves, and finding leaves only and no fruit it was to him a picture of Israel. The pronounced only pictorially what he knew God was to do in the event of the continued failure of Israel to be worthy of and merit the calling...he cursed it.

NEXT THE WICKED HUSBANDMAN

Again I would direct your attention to this very long parable which is taken in succession again. We find that the vineyard of God was handed over to the "tenant farmers" called "husbandmen." These "custodians" of the vineyard of God were sent God servants to increase the fruit (repentance and obedience unto God) of the vineyard. These messengers from God were stones, beaten, and killed (just read the Old Testament) [Matt. 21:35-36]. Next was sent the vineyard owner's son and he was killed (Matt. 21:37-39).

Jesus knew this was what he was facing.

The final result of such a gross failure of a Nation to rise to its holy calling was obliteration:

Matt 21:40-41

- 40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?
- 41 They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

The inevitable was fast approaching and Jesus unfortunately knew it because he was right in the middle of it.

Matt 21:43

43 Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

The Kingdom of God would not come. The King Messiah would not be enthroned and corronated. The prophecies would not be fulfilled. The Messiah would be killed. Israel would miss the day of her visitation. The dead will not be raised. World peace will not occur and no one will beat their swords into plowshares. Disease will not vanish. The Torah will not be taught to all nations as they come up to Zion. The blind will not see, the deaf not hear, the lame will not walk. Death will continue along with man's hatred for his brothers. Racial bigotry will continue along with violation of the Commandments of God.

Religions would increase. We will end up with over 2000 different denominations of Christianity all of which professes it is the "way." Gentile perversions of Judaism will be born and call itself Christianity. Millions will be put to death by the Church-State in the name of Jesus no less. The Sabbath will be changed to sun-worship day. The Biblical Festivals will be changed and cease for the followers of Jesus and be replaced with pagan religious worship to which Jesus' name would be attached. Biblical atonement as given by God will be replaced with a paganized atonement drawn from sun-worship and the mystery religions and taught as it was truth that Jesus and his followers believed. And I could go on!

THE PROPHECIES WERE NOT FULFILLED

But you probably don't know that because the New Testament you carry if filled with "might be fulfilled " or "scriptures be fulfilled," or "then was fulfilled what was spoken." At one time in my life I accepted these as it there were inerrant and inspired and infallible. Over the years serious and mature Bible study indicated to me that very few of them were valid fulfillments. One would never know this without many years of intense study that escapes the normal individual. First of all you don't know that the Jewish Scriptures have been horrible translated into the Greek. You don' know, because you never looked nor read the sources that indicate so, that when the Jewish Scriptures were translated by Greek Jews at Alexandria, Egypt (all but the first 5 books which were done by the Rabbis from Jerusalem), many of their Pythagorean and Buddhist religious beliefs were put into this Greek translation at the expense of what the "holy men of old" actually wrote. Concepts such as the Angel-Messiah were infused in the texts that originally taught only the Davidic Messiah. False atonements were written into Isaiah which the original Prophet never wrote. Zechariah was altered to make it look as if God was crucified in the form of another which was at that time a pattern for their crucified sun-gods. Later because Jesus would also die such a death, it would be said of him Zechariah was writing of Jesus when nothing could be further from the truth if one would only read the Hebrew translation instead of the corrupted Zechariah in the Christian Bible. Remember a translation is first taking the Hebrew and relating the very same idea to the Greek and later into the English. Simply said: "A=B=C." They should all read the same. The Hebrew should be conveyed in the Greek the same and the English from the Greek the same. Well…THEY DON'T! And let me say up front this is not just "minor" alterations, but MAJOR THINGS WERE CHANGED INVOLVING DOCTRINES AND DOGMAS.

Please listen up. That means so very often when you read in the New Testament something quoted about Jesus as "fulfilled prophecy" more than likely if you were to investigate the original Hebrew translations then the Old Testament that is quoted from the Hebrew texts does not read anything like the English rendition of it you have in your New Testament. That simply means these Pythagorean and Buddhist ideas concerning the Angel-Messiah have taken the place of what God gave His messengers and you don't know it.

This also means that what you think are fulfilled prophecies in the New Testament are in reality aberrations of the Jewish Prophecies from the Jewish Scriptures which were purposefully taken and misquoted, mistranslated, and taken out of context. All of this again was on purpose to create religious concepts that mirrored those of those doing the translation of the Hebrew Scriptures by these Pythagorean and Buddhist Greek Jews. These Greek Jews and Pythagorean-Buddhists literally added to and took away from the Holy Word of YHVH. If you get a Tanakh and compare with the LXX and compare again with the Old Testaments in your Christian Bibles you can find line upon line and precept upon precept altered. So many of these are easily see that you will be hard pressed to attribute them to human error alone. Literally this was done on purpose and many scholars document this for your inspection. I found out about this and so can you.

So the quotes in the New Testament are anything but true fulfillments of the Jewish Scriptures in so many places; rather they are fictional creationisms having nothing to do with Jesus at all or never were intended to be applied in that manner to the Messiah. The bottom line is that the Jewish Scriptures and the prophecies expected to be fulfilled at the advent of the Messiah remain unfulfilled. The New Testament have false-fulfillments passed off as "true" fulfillments to the unsuspecting and there are far too many of these types in the world. Having never the Messianic prophecies in the Jewish Tanakh nor the original Hebrew the typical Christian has to fall back upon all that he has any familiarity to; namely, those passages "touted" in the New Testament as Messianic. Again I have found through my research that the Jewish Messianic prophecies remain today unfulfilled and those purported to be so in the New Testament to be anything but Messianic as they never existed in the first place in the Jewish Tanakh or the Jewish Masoretic Text.

Here for you in a nutshell is what was to occur at the coming of Messiah. The Jews who know the uncorrupted Old Testament knew and waited for these things to happen. Only when they began to be fulfilled would they know the Messiah was among them:

The Messiah's arrival will be accompanied by the following...

- 1. Universal peace and freedom.
- 2. Resurrection of the of God's people.
- 3. Regathering of the clans of Israel.
- 4. The Torah will go forth from Jerusalem.
- 5. Rebuilding of the Temple
- 6. Resumption of animal sacrifices in the Temple and no longer corrupt scarifies to Ceasar would be mandatory
- 7. All nations will come to the land of Israel to observe Succoth.

After Jesus' death and with the failure of Israel to merit him and the Kingdom of God came...

- 1. Instead of universal peace came the wars...of 66 c.e. and 135 c.e.
- 2. Instead of a resurrection, over a million Jews were killed and thousands sold in to slavery.
- 3. Instead of a regathering, there was diaspora.
- 4. Instead of the Torah going forth from Jerusalem, the Torah was declared dead and Jerusalem became a pagan city.
- 5. Instead of a Temple being rebuild, one was destroyed.
- 6. Instead of the continuation of animal sacrifices, they ceased.
- 7. Instead of all nations observing Succoth in Jerusalem, the Holy day was prevented from being observed in Jerusalem and the Gentile Church replaced all the Biblical Festivals with pagan religious days to which they attached the name of Jesus.

Now….realistically…..can we blame the Jews for not believing in this Christian Jesus? A Jewish Jesus is a totally different matter, but understand, Christianity does not teach a Jewish Jesus. They do not teach the true Jesus!

What the world needs today is not more Jews for Jesus, but more Christians for Moses!

The Jewish prophecies remain unfulfilled and if you read this series of articles with understanding then you know why. It was not the fault of Jesus that they remained unfulfilled in his day nor in our day as well. This whole series of articles had been intended to show you the reader that the prophecies were not fulfilled by no fault of Jesus, but the blame of the whole fiasco could be laid at the feet of those in Israel who failed to repent and turn to God in the highest manner possible thereby manifesting holiness and a humble contrite heart as prerequisites for not only being a Priest before God but the Royal Priesthood. The Kingdom of God did not come then, nor will it now unless we put away the leaven from our lives and turn in repentance to God accepting His Commandments as a guide and corrector for our lives.

The failure of the prophecies to be fulfilled was not the fault of Jesus as Messiah. In the selling of Jesus to the Gentiles by the early apocalyptic believers who were heavily influenced by the Essenes and their Greek translation of the Hebrew Scriptures called the Septuagint had been so corrupted by these Greek Jews of Alexandria that many read such accounts of the Buddhist Angel-Messiah and attributed them to Jesus after his death. Those who gave us many of the oral traditions of Jesus and molded them in the context of "one greater than Moses is here" were the ones responsible for contributing to this myth. The Jews of Palestine did not accept nor use the Greek Septuagint or the Greek Old Testament because of such errors. Later when such things were taught to the non-Jews as well as the diaspora Jews about this man from Galilee as "fulfillments" of a corrupted Bible the Jews and Rabbis of Palestine were infuriated. Sadly such legends stuck and were eventually blended into the overall picture of Jesus and we have today the written accounts of those influenced by such mixtures in Jewish and Pythagorean-Buddhist beliefs…is is called the New Testament. Within the New Testament is both fact and fable; truths from the Jews concerning one from David to be an anointed leader and much from the pagan's sun-myths with their crucified sun-godmen. You just have not studied it out for yourself yet. Many have. If you do, then you will see that what I say is true. But to discount Jesus as the Messiah of Israel because the prophecies were not fulfilled does him and his memory great harm. This is a message the Jewish people need to hear as well as my Christian brethren. But lastly I must say that I take great offense to the adding to and the taking away of the Jewish Scriptures given by the God who changes not. Such adulteration of the Holy Jewish Scriptures as has been done in the Greek translation and later carried over into the Latin Vulgate and all the following English Bibles, as well as the quotations found in the New Testament, should make you both hurt and angry at what has been done. If you truly love God and His Word then you cannot learn this and be passive. May we love God enough to find the truth before we die and defend His true word against falsity and reclaim Jesus as His Messiah in spite of the prophecies not be fulfilled. But to make up false ones and teach them to multitudes to reinforce false beliefs about Jesus only makes one an idolater. May God for them and us for believing such when some serious study would have delivered us from such sin and ignorance. Shalom.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #1

As a Christian you hear others often speak about Isaiah 53 and make connection with Yeshua as if this passage was prophetic for Yeshua. In fact, often you may encounter questions from Jews who are involved in or considering Christianity. Among the questions, one chapter of our Jewish Scriptures keeps coming up: Isaiah 53.

Answer for yourself: Wasn't the Prophet, in fact, referring to Yeshua in this chapter?

Answer for yourself: And didn't all Jews before the Middle Ages recognize this chapter as "messianic"?

We at Bet Emet Ministries hope to assist you in interpreting a chapter which has become a cornerstone of Christian theology and the impetus for evangelism to Jews.

Answer for yourself: After reading these articles please answer for yourself: should Isaiah 53 be used in such a manner any longer by Christians? On with the study.

Jewish sages teach that "whoever saves a single Jewish soul is considered as if he had saved an entire world." How precious is the human soul! We hope that you too will value your soul highly enough to prayerfully ponder that which follows. God's truth is not always easy to discern, but we are possessors of a Divine promise; "you will find Him if you search after Him with all your heart and all your soul" (Deut. 4:29). As faithful child of God you know that it's worth the effort. And now - on with the search!

Before engaging in an examination of Isaiah 53 itself, some preliminary issues must be considered.

First is the issue of circular reasoning. Even if we interpret the chapter as most Christians do (forgetting for a minute the mistranslations and distortions of context which will be noted below in the following articles), the most that could be said is this: Isaiah 53 is about someone who dies for the sins of others.

Answer for yourself: People may have seen Yeshua die, but did anyone see him die as an atonement for the sins of others?

Of course not; this is simply the meaning which the New Testament gives to his death, and that only many years later as his followers try to explain his death in light of the failure of his return as prophesied by him and others earlier. Only if you already accept the New Testament teaching that his death had a non-visible, spiritual significance can you than go back to Isaiah and say, "see - the Prophet predicted what I already believe." Isaiah 53, then, is in reality no "proof" at all, but rather a contrived confirmation for someone who has already chosen Christianity and chooses to read into the text what they wish regardless of what the Prophet intended to confer in his original message.

DID THE FOLLOWERS OF YESHUA AND OTHER JEWS OF THE TIME VIEW ISAIAH 53 AS A MESSIANIC PROPHECY?

Second (and consistent with all Jewish teaching at the time), Yeshua's' own disciples didn't view Isaiah 53 as a messianic prophecy. For example, after Peter identifies Yeshua as the Messiah (Matt. 16:16), he is informed that Yeshua will be killed (Matt. 16:21). His response: "God forbid it, lord! This shall never happen to you" (Matt. 16:22). See, also, Mk. 9:31-32; Mk. 16:10-11; Jn. 20:9. Evidently this was "news" to him and something that he was not aware of as an adult Jew which was most assuredly familiar with his own religion.

DID YESHUA VIEW ISAIAH 53 AS A MESSIANIC PROPHECY?

Even Yeshua didn't see Isaiah 53 as crucial to his messianic claims - why else did he call the Jews children of the devil for not believing in him before the alleged resurrection (Jn. 8:39-47)?

Answer for yourself: And why did he later request that God "remove this cup from me" (Mk. 14:36) - didn't he know that a "removal of the cup" would violate the Gentile understanding of Isaiah 53 which his church would come to realize later after his death?

Answer for yourself: And third, even if we accept the Gentile Christian interpretation of Isaiah 53, where is it indicated (either in Isaiah 53 or anywhere else in the Jewish Scriptures) that you must believe in this "Messiah" to get the benefits?

THE CONTEXT OF ISAIAH 53 IS COMPLETELY OVERLOOKED BY CHRISTIANS TODAY

Since any portion of Scripture is only understood properly when viewed in the context of God's revelation as a whole, some additional study will be helpful before you "tackle" Isaiah 53.

Look at the setting in which Isaiah 53 occurs. Earlier on in Isaiah, God had predicted exile and calamity for the Jewish people. Chapter 53, however, occurs in the midst of Isaiah's "Messages of Consolation", which tell of the restoration of Israel to a position of prominence and a vindication of their status as God's chosen people. In chapter 52, for example, Israel is described as "oppressed without cause" (v.4) and "taken away" (v.5), yet God promises a brighter future ahead, one in which Israel will again prosper and be redeemed in the sight of all the nations (v.1-3, 8-12).

Chapter 54 further elaborates upon the redemption which awaits the nation of Israel. Following immediately after chapter 53's promise of a reward for God's servant in return for all of its suffering (53:10-12), chapter 54 describes an unequivocally joyous fate for the Jewish people. Speaking clearly of the Jewish people and their exalted status (even according to all Christian commentaries), chapter 54 ends as follows: "`This is the heritage of the servants of the L-rd and their vindication is from Me,' declares the L-rd."

ISAIAH 53…A QUICK OVERVIEW BEFORE WE BEGIN

In the original Hebrew texts, there are no chapter divisions, and Jew and Christian alike agree that chapter 53 is actually a continuation of the prophecy which begins at 52:13. Accordingly, our analysis must begin at that verse.

52:13 "Behold, My servant will prosper." Israel in the singular is called God's servant throughout Isaiah, both explicitly (Isa. 41:8-9; 44:1-2; 45:4; 48:20; 49:3) and implicitly (Isa. 42:19-20; 43:10) - the Messiah is not.

This is of major importance for our study.

Other references to "Israel as God's servant" include Jer. 30:10 (note that in Jer. 30:17, the servant Israel is regarded by the nations as an outcast, forsaken by God, as in Isa. 53:4); Jer. 46:27-28; Ps. 136:22; Lk. 1:54. The "servant" is the nation of Israel and not one individual!

Answer for yourself: Given the Christian view that Yeshua is God, is God His own servant?

52:15 - 53:1 "So shall he (the servant) startle many nations, the kings will stand speechless; For that which had not been told them they shall see and that which they had not heard shall they ponder. Who would believe what we have heard?" Quite clearly, the nations and their kings will be amazed at what happens to the "servant of the L-rd," and they will say "who would believe what we have heard?". 52:15 tells us explicitly that it is the nations of the world, the gentiles, who are doing the talking in Isaiah 53. See, also, Micah 7:12-17, which speaks of the nations' astonishment when the Jewish people again blossom in the Messianic age.

53:1 "And to whom has the arm of the L-rd been revealed?" In Isaiah, and throughout our Scriptures, God's "arm" refers to the physical redemption of the Jewish people from the oppression of other nations (see, e.g., Isa. 52:8-12; Isa. 63:12; Deut. 4:34; Deut. 7:19; Ps. 44:3).

53:3 "Despised and rejected of men." While this is clearly applicable to Israel (see Isa. 60:15; Ps. 44:13-14), it cannot be reconciled with the New Testament account of Yeshua, a man who was supposedly "praised by all" (Lk. 4:14-15) and followed by multitudes (Matt. 4:25), who would later acclaim him as a prophet upon his triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:9-11). Even as he was taken to be crucified, a multitude bemoaned his fate (Lk. 23:27). Yeshua had to be taken by stealth, as the rulers feared "a riot of the people" (Mk. 14:1-2).

53:3 "A man of pains and acquainted with disease." Israel's adversities are frequently likened to sickness - see, e.g., Isa. 1:5-6; Jer. 10:19; Jer 30:12.

53:4 "Surely our diseases he carried and our pains he bore." In Matt. 8:17, this is correctly translated, and said to be literally (not spiritually) fulfilled in Yeshua's healing of the sick, a reading inconsistent with the Christian mistranslation of 53:4 itself.

53:4 "Yet we ourselves esteemed him stricken, smitten of G- D and afflicted." See Jer. 30:17 - of God's servant Israel (30:10), it is said by the nations, "It is Zion; no one cares for her."

53:5 "But he was wounded from (NOTE: not "for") our transgressions, he was crushed from (AGAIN: not "for") our iniquities." Whereas the Gentile nations had thought the Servant (Israel) was undergoing Divine retribution for its sins (53:4), they now realize that the Servant's sufferings stemmed from their OWN actions and sinfulness against the nation. This theme is further developed throughout our Jewish Scriptures - see, e.g., Jer. 50:7; Jer. 10:25. ALSO: Note that the Messiah "shall not fail nor be crushed till he has set the right in the earth" (Isa. 42:4). This is serious business, as you can see; when Messiah comes he will a major bone to pick with the Roman Church which spawned both anti-Semitic Catholicism and his child Protestantism.

53:7 "He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he did not open his mouth. Like a lamb that is led to slaughter, and like a sheep that is silent before its shearers, so he did not open his mouth." Note that in the prior chapter (Isa. 52), Israel is said to have been oppressed and taken away without cause (52:4-5). A similar theme is developed in Psalm 44, wherein King David speaks of the corporate nation of Israel and her faithfulness even in the face of gentile oppression (44:17- 18) and describes Israel as "sheep to be slaughtered" in the midst of the unfaithful gentile nations (44:22,11).

Regarding the claim that Yeshua "did not open his mouth" when faced with oppression and affliction, see Matt. 27:46, Jn. 18:23, 36-37.

53:8 "From dominion and judgment he was taken away." Note the correct translation of the Hebrew. The Christians are forced to mistranslate, since - by Yeshua's own testimony - he never had any rights to rulership or judgment, at least not on the "first coming." See, e.g., Jn. 3:17; Jn. 8:15; Jn. 12:47; Jn. 18:36.

53:8 "He was cut off out of the land of the living."

53:9 "His grave was assigned with wicked men." See Ez. 37:11-14, wherein Israelis described as "cut off" and God promises to open its "graves" and bring Israel back into its own land. Other examples of figurative deaths include Ex. 10:17; 2 Sam. 9:8; 2 Sam. 16:9.

53:8 "From my peoples' sins, there was injury to them." Here the Prophet makes absolutely clear, to anyone familiar with Biblical Hebrew, that the oppressed Servant is a collective Servant, not a single individual. The Hebrew word "lamoh", when used in our Scriptures, always means "to them" never "to him" and may be found, for example, in Psalm 99:7 - "They kept his testimonies, and the statute that He gave to them."

53:9 "And with the rich in his deaths." Perhaps King James should have changed the original Hebrew, which again makes clear that we are dealing with a collective Servant, i.e., Israel, which will "come to life" when the exile ends (Ez. 37:14).

53:9 "He had done no violence." See Matt. 21:12; Mk. 11:15-16; Lk. 19:45; Lk. 19:27; Matt. 10:34 and Lk. 12:51; then judge for yourself whether this passage is truly consistent with the New Testament account of Yeshua.

53:10 "He shall see his seed." The Hebrew word for "seed", used in this verse, always refers to physical descendants in our Jewish Scriptures. See, e.g., Gen. 12:7; Gen. 15:13; Gen. 46:6; Ex. 28:43. A different word, generally translated as "sons", is used to refer to spiritual descendants (see Deut. 14:1, e.g.).

53:10 "He will prolong his days."

Answer for yourself: Not only did Yeshua die young, but how could the days be prolonged of someone who is alleged to be God?

53:11 "With his knowledge the righteous one, my Servant, will cause many to be just." Note again the correct translation: the Servant will cause many to be just, he will not "justify the many."

The Jewish mission is to serve as a "light to the nations" which will ultimately lead the world to a knowledge of the one true God, this both by example (Deut. 4:5-8; Zech. 8:23) and by instructing the nations in God's Law (Isa. 2:3-4; Micah 4:2-3). This mission, however, has been tragically circumvented by the Roman Church throughout history by the editing and adulterating the documents we call the New Testament today. What was once a Torah centered faith has become a religion based upon "believing in the identity of a man" instead of "living a life in obedience to the Law/Commandments of God." Today "grace" had completely nullified "personal accountability before God." Needless to say the "light" of Divine Truth as been replaced by Gentile Christianity's Catholic Church Council's decisions upon the "identity" of Yeshua as it evolved over the first 500 years of the church. The identity of the Servant of God, the Jewish People, who paid in their blood the price that I might know God today, has been completely obliterated by Christian theology whereby "one man" has replaced an entire nation.

53:12 "Therefore, I will divide a portion to him with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the mighty."

Answer for yourself: If Yeshua is God, does the idea of reward have any meaning?

Answer for yourself: Is it not rather the Jewish people - who righteously bore the sins of the world and yet remained faithful to God (Ps. 44) - who will be rewarded, and this in the manner described more fully in Isaiah chapters 52 and 54?

In the following articles in this series we will examine in depth many of the above items for your study and evaluation. When we finish you will no longer have any doubt or confusion regarding the correct interpretation of Isaiah 53 and whether it refers to Yeshua or not. Who Is The Servant of God? We address that next.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #2

ISAIAH'S USE OF SERVANT IN REFERENCE TO ISRAEL-THE NATION

In order to begin our study with the proper background it is important that you familiarize yourself with the following Scriptures and the meaning of the prophet Isaiah in writing them. The following are every mention of "servant" from Isaiah. 40-66. Please read and see if Isaiah is consistent throughout the book by describing the nation of Israel as the servant and not a man. This is of utmost important that we understand the context of the prophet Isaiah due to all the improper teaching we have heard during our lives that have preconditioned us to "read into the passage" meanings not ever intended by the Prophet Isaiah.

I ask that you take the time to read each of the chapters listed below in order for you to get the context. Then, and only then, can you be certain that the "servant" in question is not an individual man, but a collective of people: namely; the people of Israel which included Yeshua, but never was intended to reference him to the exclusion of the whole of the Jewish people.

Isa 41:8

8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend. (KJV)

Isa 41:9

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away. (KJV)

Isa 42:1

1 Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. (KJV)

Isa 42:19

19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant? (KJV)

Isa 43:10

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me. (KJV)
[notice the explicit reference to the servant in both the singular and plural in the same verse]

Isa 44:1

1 Yet now hear, O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen: (KJV)

Isa 44:2

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jesurun, whom I have chosen. (KJV)

Isa 44:21

21 Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me. (KJV)

Isa 44:26

26 That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof: (KJV)

Isa 48:20

20 Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, The LORD hath redeemed his servant Jacob. (KJV)

Isa 49:3

3 And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. (KJV)

Isa 49:5

5 And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him, Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my strength. (KJV)

Isa 49:6

6 And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth. (KJV)

Isa 50:10

10 Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God. (KJV)

Isa 52:13

13 Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high. (KJV)

Isa 53:11

11 He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. (KJV)

By now you should be able to see for yourself that the Prophet Isaiah intended the "nation of Israel" be understood as the Servant of YHVH, and it is this who is the "Suffering Servant" of Isaiah 53.

Now we continue.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #3

I suppose Isaiah 53 is possibly the most misunderstood and misused passages in the whole Bible. The reason as you will quickly come to see is partly due to the purposefuly misquoting of the Jewish Masoretic text whereby the verses have been terribly altered. This not only destroys the original meaning intended by Isaiah but substitutes a "foreign" meaning instead.

Ever since I was a child I was told to believe that this passage refereed to Yeshua. Does it? You might be surprised when you study it in detail as I have. If you undertake to read these series of articles the results you will discover will reveal a completely different understanding from what many of you supposed that Isaiah, as recorded in your Christian Bibles, actually means. Besides the reason "highlighted" above, another reason why we did not understand this passage correctly as most of us grew up in the church is that our spiritual authorities chose to "read into the text" ideas that could not be "drawn from the text". Let me explain.

In Seminary I learned that there are laws of interpretation that must be applied to the text of scripture if one wanted to arrive at the truth of what the passage is saying. There is only one problem outside of the Seminary classroom; namely few pastors or church adhere to such rule and laws of interpretation of scripture. I learned that there is a big difference between "exegesis" and "eisegesis." Let me explain by looking at the definitions of these two very important words.

Exegesis, [from exegeomai in the Greek, to explain-ex, and hegeomai, to lead, to guide] The exposition or interpretation of any literary production, but more particularly the exposition or interpretation of Scripture; also the principles of the art of sacred interpretation; exegetics; hermeneutics.

Eisegesis noun : personal interpretation of a text (especially of the Bible) using your own ideas. In other words, reading into the text concepts and ideas totally foreign to the text.

As you can see for yourself if we follow the laws of eisegesis we can be assured of arriving at an erroneous interpretation of the text and lose the truths the prophet or writer intended to convey. Conversely, only by rigid application of the laws of exegesis can we be assured of arriving at the truths God desires we both understand and possess. Let us go on.

Since this article is intended for Christian readers, I will not go into depth regarding the traditional interpretation that the "Suffering Servant" has been taught to be Yeshua in the Isaiah 52 and especially the Isaiah 53 passages by the Christian Church for centuries. I would only ask that you read these series of articles closely and limit your "eisegesis" (reading into the text your personal interpretation received through sermonizing) and let the truths of the passage derived from "exegesis (whereby we explain, interpret, and critically examine the text) speak to you and determine what your religious belief system should be in light of the facts as they are "taken from the passage" and not "read into" the passage. After you have completed these articles the decision will be up to you what you believe Isaiah 53 is teaching. But until you read these articles and see this information for yourself you are limited by the knowledge withheld from you and are sadly unable to make an intelligent decision. With this as my motive let us begin a critical examination of the text.

ISA 52:13---ISA 53:12...(AS TAKEN FROM THE MASORETIC TEXT [THE JEWISH BIBLE] AND NOT THE ALTERED OLD TESTAMENTS FROM MOST CHRISTIAN'S BIBLES (THE KJV FOR EXAMPLE)

13. Behold, My servant shall prosper; he shall be exalted and lifted up, and shall be very high.

14. As many wondered about you, "How marred his appearance is from that of a man, and his features from that of people!"

15. So shall he cast down many nations; kings shall shut their mouths because of him; for what had not been told to them they shall see; and that which they had not heard they shall consider.

Let me interject that the word for "nations" in the Hebrew is as follows:

1471 gowy rarely (shortened) goy- as a noun, masculine: nation, people

- a) nation, people
- 1) usually of non-Hebrew people
- 2) used of descendants of Abraham
- b) used of a swarm of locusts or other animals (figurative) as a proper noun, masculine:
- c) Goyim? = "nations"

Now back to the text....

1. Who bath believed our report? And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?
2. And he came up like a sapling before it, and like a root from dry ground, he had neither form nor comeliness; and we saw him that he had no appearance that we should have desired him.
3. Despised and forsaken by men, a man of pains and accustomed to illness: and as one who hides his face from us; despised, and we esteemed him not.
4. Indeed, he bore our illnesses, and our pains - he carried them, yet we accounted him as plagued, smitten by God and oppressed.
5. But he was pained from our transgressions, crushed from our iniquities; the chastisement of our welfare was upon him, and with his wound we were healed.
6. We all went astray like sheep, we have turned, each one on his own way, and the Lord accepted his prayers for the iniquity of all of us.
7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he would not open his mouth; like a lamb to the slaughter he would be brought, and like a sheep that is mute before her shearers, and he would not open his mouth.
8. From imprisonment and from judgment he is taken, and his generation who shall tell? For he was cut off from the land of the living; because of the transgression of my people, a plague befell them.
9. And he gave his grave to the wicked, and to the wealthy with his kinds of deaths, because he committed no violence, and there was no deceit in his mouth.

10. And the Lord wished to crush him, He made him ill; if his soul makes itself restitution, he shall see seed, he shall prolong his days, and God's purpose shall prosper in his hand.
11. From the toil of his soul he would see, he would be satisfied; with his knowledge My servant would vindicate the just for many, and their iniquities he would bear.
12. Therefore, I will allot him a portion in public, and with the strong he shall share plunder, because he poured out his soul to death, and with transgressors he was counted; and he bore the sin of many, and interceded for the transgressors.

WE MUST DECIDE WHO IS DOING THE "SPEAKING" IN THESE VERSES IN ORDER TO INTERPRET THEM CORRECTLY

Isaiah 52:15-53:

- Isa. 52:15. So shall he cast down many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths because of him; for that which had not been told to them they shall see; and that which they had not heard they shall consider.
- Isa. 53:1. Who hath believed our report? And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

Notice first with me "certain" words. They are in the "plural." Kings of nations (Gentile kings of non-Jewish nations) are speaking here in their numbed astonishment. For what they are finally witnessing is in stark contrast to everything they had ever heard and considered (or even heard preached about the Jews). Understandably, the first question on their lips is, "Who would have ever believed such a thing?" These Gentile leaders and "kings" are utterly astounded that the Jewish people, whom all the non-Jewish nations have together despised and molested, will be vindicated and enjoy the promised salvation of God. This is totally foreign to their theologies and what they were accustomed to hear taught and preached and what they expected to happen to the Jewish people. In other words these thoughts and beliefs about the fate of the Jewish people and their salvation have been totally in error as held by these non-Jewish people. Understand that the vast majority of Christianity today, if asked, will say the Jewish people are damned to hell if they don't believe in the Messiah or the blood of Yeshua. Let us go on.

The palpable shock that the gentile nations will experience and express at the end of days is a common theme throughout the Bible. But this fact can only be know if you spend a lot of time in the Hebrew Scriptures, and lets face the truth, most Christians today spend the vast majority of their time reading only the New Testament and find little use for the Jewish Scriptures.

Bear in mind that nowhere in scripture do the prophets foretell that the Jewish people will ever proclaim shock, or admit any mistake to the gentiles in the messianic age. On the contrary, the Bible clearly testifies that in the messianic age ten gentiles of different languages will grasp the shirt of a Jew and say, "Let us go with ,YOU, for we have heard that God is with ,YOU." (Zechariah 8:23)

Micah 7:15-16

15 According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto them marvelous things. 16 The nations (non-Jewish peoples) shall see and be confounded at all of their might: they shall lay their hands upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

Isaiah 41:11

11 Behold all those who were incensed against you shall be ashamed and confounded; those who quarreled with you shall be as naught and be lost.

Jeremiah 16:19-20

19 O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth and shall say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no benefit. 20 Shall a man make Gods unto himself, and they are no Gods?

Please listen. As a Seminary graduate with a Master's degree no less, the tools I received while at Seminary were put to further use after I graduated as I proceeded to be involved in in-depth study of Biblical language, Biblical history, culture, etc. I must admit that upon 15 years of in-depth research and study, sometimes up to 10 hours a day, I have found that I have fulfilled Jeremiah 16:19-20. I have come to the conclusion that Jeremiah is totally correct: my non-Jewish forefathers, having accepted the legacy of Nicea and Constantine, and others who replaced a Jewish faith with one of Rome, and who altered the manuscripts to make sure that all subsequent non-Jewish followers accept "their" brand of religion, propagated religious lies, vanity, and vain worship. Faced with such knowledge which most have not had the opportunity to be exposed to themselves, I endeavor to reach out to others to inform them of the truths long held from the Christian community in order that their knowledge and faith in both God and Messiah be correct and not after the traditions of men.

REGARDLESS OF WHAT YOU HAVE HEARD PREACHED IN YOUR CHURCH....WHO DOES ISAIAH IDENTIFY AS "THE SERVANT"?

Isaiah 41:8-9

But thou, Israel, art My servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham My friend. 9 Whom I grasped from the ends of the earth, and from it nobles I called you, and I said to you. "You are My servant"; I chose you and I did not despise you.

Isaiah 44:1-2

1 Yet hear now, O Jacob My servant and Israel, whom I have chosen. So said the Lord your Maker, and He who formed you from the womb shall aid you. 2 Fear not, My servant Israel, and Jeshurun whom I have chosen.

Isaiah 44:21

21 Remember these, O Jacob and Israel, for thou art My servant, I have formed thee; thou art My servant, O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of Me.

Isaiah 45:4

4 For the sake of My servant Jacob, and Israel My chosen one, and I called to you by your name...

Isaiah 48:20

20 Leave Babylon, flee from the Chaldeans; with a voice of singing declare, tell this, publicize it to the end of the earth; say, The Lord has redeemed His servant Jacob."

Isaiah 49:3

3 And said to me, thou art My Servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified!

Psalm 136:22

22 Even a heritage unto Israel His servant; for His mercy endures forever

Jeremiah 30:10

10 Therefore fear not, O My Servant Jacob, says the Lord, neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save you from afar....

Answer for yourself: So what do we learn about the identity of the "Servant" of God?

The Suffering Servant of God is the nation of Israel and not an individual; that is, the Suffering Servant of God is a collection of people and not just one person.

Answer for yourself: What are the implications of reading only "one" person into Isaiah 53 then?

Simply, we are guilty of not drawing out of the passage the intended meaning of the prophet (exegesis), but rather, misinterpreting the passage by "reading into" the passage a preconceived belief formed by what others have said (eisegesis) which cannot be supported by critical examination of the text. Our religious belief system is in error, and often this leads us to vain worship.

Answer for yourself: If we read "Yeshua" into Isaiah 53 and not understand that the "suffering servant" is the collective nation of Israel, then are we not guilty of "reading into the text our personal interpretation" irrespective of the intended meaning of the prophet and guilty of "eisegesis"? We sure are.

THE ONLY CONCLUSION WE CAN RIGHTFULLY DRAW FROM TRUTHFUL EXAMINATION OF THE TEXT IS THAT THE IDENTITY OF THE "SERVANT" IN THE PROPHET'S FOURTH SERVANT SONG, ISAIAH 53, MUST BE THE NATION OF ISRAEL AND NOT ONE INDIVIDUAL

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #4

In the previous article I made a strong case for correctly interpreting the "Suffering Servant" of Isaiah 53 in the plural and not the singular [the "servant" is the corporate nation..and not one individual]. That means if we want to correctly interpret the Bible we cannot any longer read "Jesus" into Isa. 53 no matter what our theology is at present. Let us now examine more concrete testimony which validates the interpretation of Isaiah 53 as referring to the nation of Israel and not just one man.

THROUGHOUT THE SERVANT SONGS THE "NATION OF ISRAEL" IS SPOKEN OF IN THE SINGULAR...BUT THE PRONOUN IS UNDERSTOOD AS THE "NATION"

As I grew up in the church I was continually told that since Isaiah 53's references to the Servant is in the singular that this conclusively proves that this chapter is speaking of a single individual rather than the entire nation of Israel.

To say that the "singular" reference, as applied to the Suffering Servant in Isaiah 53, definitely refers to Jesus disregards the entire context and surrounding poetic motif of Isaiah 53.

I cannot ask you to believe this unless I can prove it to you. So let us investigate the matter in detail.

In Isaiah 43:10, the prophet clearly identifies the "servant" (singular) as God's "witnesses" (plural).

Notice that the "servant" is plural thus referring to more than one individual. Also, all Christians agree that the two chapters that sandwich Isaiah 53 (52 and 54) consistently speak of the Jewish people as a single individual. When considering that "Isaiah 53" actually begins in the latter part of the 52nd chapter, Christianity's argument becomes increasingly weak. Furthermore, as I will show you momentarily, the prophet alternately speaks of the servant in Isaiah 53 in both the singular and plural.

As the book of Isaiah progresses into the 54th chapter, it continues to speak of the Jewish people as though they are a single individual. This barren woman, a picture of a tormented Israel, will be saved from her affliction and jubilate wholeheartedly in her final vindication.

Isaiah 43:10

10 Ye are My witnesses saith the Lord, and My servant whom I have chosen: that you may know and believe Me, and understand that I am He: before Me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after Me.

Notice how the plural "witnesses" refers to only "one servant" (singular).

Isaiah 52:1-2

1 Awaken, awaken, put on your strength, O Zion; put on the garments of your beauty, Jerusalem the Holy City, for no longer shall the uncircumcised or the unclean continue to enter you. 2 Shake yourselves from the dust, arise, sit down, O Jerusalem; free yourself of the bands of your neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

Isaiah 54:1

"'Sing you barren woman who has not born, burst out into song and jubilate, you who have not experienced birth pangs, for the children of the desolate one are more than the children of the married woman," says the Lord.

DOES THE WRITER OF THE GOSPEL OF MATTHEW TAKE VERSES OUT OF CONTEXT TO CREATE HIS UNIQUE THEOLOGY? YES...HE DOES!

Matthew does to Hosea precisely what other Christians do to Isaiah. In Hosea 11:1, the prophet is referring to national Israel (plural) in the singular as God's son. The writer of the Gospel of Matthew 2:15 takes half the verse out of context, and quotes this verse as if it is speaking about the messiah (singular).

Similarly, the context of Isaiah 53 reveals that Isaiah is speaking of national Israel (many people) in the singular, yet I was led to believe that this chapter is speaking about Jesus. Such is not the case.

Hosea 11:1-2, 5

1 When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and out of Egypt I called my son (referring to a nation). 2 The more they called them, the more they went from them, they sacrificed unto the Baalim, and offered to graven images

5 He shall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Assyrian shall be his king, because they refused to return.

Again you can see that the prophet is referring to the nation of Israel (numbering in hundreds of thousands" in the singular with the use of "he"along with the plural use of "they."

Exodus 4:22

22...thus saith the Lord, Israel is My son, My first born.

So you can see that the nation, numbering thousands and thousands, is referred to collectively in the singular. Thus the Suffering Servant, as revealed as the nation of Israel continues to be the collective people of Israel in Isaiah 53 and to refer to Jesus alone is a grievous error of interpretation.

LET US NOT FORGET WHO IS SPEAKING IN ISAIAH 53...WHO IS?

As we prepare to delve into the text of Isaiah 53 we must at the beginning come to an accurate understanding of who is speaking. Without such an understanding we can be assured we will interpret the passages of Isaiah 53 incorrectly and thereby attribute meanings to them that the original author never intended.

Let me state right up front that the original manuscripts, even copies of manuscripts we have discovered, never had chapter divisions within them. These were added much later by the Church. So often we find chapter divisions put in the most unlikely of places. Sometimes the chapter division obscures the meaning of the text as well as who is doing the actual speaking as I will show you in Isaiah 53. Failure to notice who is speaking in Isaiah 53 is compounded by the chapter division which was artificially created centuries after the text was originally written. Search as you will, you will not discern the identity of the speaker by reading Isaiah 53 because the identity of the speaker is given in the verses above the chapter division of Isaiah 53. Failure to look to Isaiah 52 to discern the true speaker will cause you to believe that since Isaiah is the writer, he must be speaking himself and we erroneously connect such a concept in our minds to the idea that he is speaking for Israel. Nothing could be further from the truth. To this very important issue we now turn.

The following is taken from the Jewish Scriptures and the Tanakh [and not the corrupted Old Testaments in the Christian Bibles]

Isa 52:13-15

Indeed, My servant shall prosper. Be exalted and raised to great heights. 14 Just as the many were appalled at him So marred was his appearance, unlike of man, His for, beyond human semblance- 15 Just so he shall startle many nations. Kings shall be silenced because of him, For they shall see what has not been told them, Shall behold what they never heard.

Now notice the next verse...called Isaiah 53:1

“Who can believe what we have heard? Upon whom has the arm of the LORD been revealed?...

Answer for yourself: Did you notice anything different between the translation in the Tanakh and the KJV?

Well, the Tanakh makes note that Isaiah 53:1 is a quote from the Gentile kings and nations. What follows in Isa. 53 is the testimony of the Gentile Kings which represent the Gentile Nations. The Christian Bible, the KJV, does not make this as plain and we tend to think that Isaiah is speaking; thereby making the following testimony apply to the Jews when it refers to the non-Jewish world! This is very, very important!

One immediately notices, since put on the alert what to look for it, that the speaker is designated in Isaiah 52 just a few verses before Isaiah 53. The kings/rulers of the nations are engaged in a dialogue concerning the Jewish people. It is the Gentile kings of the nations which are speaking and not the Jewish people. For too long now Christians read Isaiah 53 without noticing in the latter part of Isaiah 52 that the speaker is not Isaiah or the Jewish people, but rather the Gentile nations. Failure to notice this guarantees misinterpretation of Isaiah 53!

Not only should we notice this, but in the Jewish translation given above we should take note of the quotations surrounding the verses which literally the Gentile kings are speaking. This further makes certain we understand that the following dialogue is from a Gentile's perspective and not a Jewish perspective. This again is of paramount importance. The "incrimination" of the testimony that follows in Isaiah 53 is not the testimony of the Jews, but rather the testimony of the Gentiles of the world regarding the nation of Israel. Such quotations are absent in my KJV bible. The failure to note this helps one mistranslate Isaiah 53.

Bearing constantly in mind that the servant of God has, and will be shown to be corporate Israel, let us look at some passages in a KJV Christian Bible.

Isaiah 52:13-15

Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

As many were astonished at thee: his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:

So shall he sprinkle many nations ; the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which they had not been told them shall them see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

We are told that the nations of the world (non-Jewish nations) along with their kings/rulers will consider God's servant. We are told they are in line for revelation concerning God's servant (Israel). Understanding that the servant is again the Jewish people, the non-Jewish people and their authorities will come to an understanding concerning the Jewish people that they did not possess earlier. Their consideration of the Jewish people is enumerated for us beginning at Isaiah 53:1.

Isaiah 53:1

Who hath believed our report? And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

Remembering chapter divisions are artificial creations, if we read Isaiah 52:13-15 consecutively along with Isaiah 53:1 we see the beauty of the continuing story. The kings/rulers and Gentile nations will see what they had not previously seen and will hear what they had not previously heard. Understanding these Gentile kings and nations get revelation concerning the Jewish people we have their response to such new insights beginning in Isaiah 53:1. The KJV does not put this verse in quotes as noted earlier. The Jewish Scriptures does! Isaiah 53 needs to be understood as the Gentile response to new revelation as God lifts their blindness to see and understand the role of God's servant, Israel, through the ages. This new insight goes against what they had previously been told to believe. Such will probably be your response as well.

These Gentile kings are literally saying "who is going to believe this…who is going to believe what we now see in light of what we were taught as well as taught about the Jewish people?" These Gentile rulers and nations are literally saying "who else sees the truth considering the Jewish people to which we were once blinded but not see?" These Gentile kings and nations begin in Isaiah 53:2 to delineate the role of Israel as they now comprehend it in truth. This new enlightenment concerning Israel as the servant of God causes a massive repentance in both their perspective and religious belief system. These Kings of Gentile nations [in Isaiah 53] recount for us the tragic story of Israel and how she has been mistreated, persecuted, and rejected by the Gentile nations throughout history. These Gentiles admit their guilt. Line upon line of Isaiah 53 is the unfolding of the tragic truth concerning the barbarism of the Gentile nations toward their Jewish neighbors. Yet the role God gave Israel never changed. She was faithful to be a light to the non-Jewish nations. With this understanding, all of Isaiah 53 must be re-read, for if we fail to remember who is speaking verse after verse, which is easy to do because of our past erroneous teachings, we will miss entirely what God wished we see through the eyes and pen of the Prophet Isaiah.

CHRISTIANITY WILL HAVE TO FINALLY ADMIT THEY WERE WRONG...ABOUT THE JEWS AND ABOUT THEIR "THEOLOGY"

Notice that the surprised kings of nations will witness the final vindication and salvation of Israel irrespective of what they though or believed about the Jews previously. That means our narrow theology as Christians, and that of our religious leaders regarding the salvation of the Jewish people will one day crumble in the light of God's truth which will finally be forced upon the non-Jewish nations by Divine intervention and the ultimate salvation of Israel. Woe to men like the early anti-Semitic church fathers, and men like Luther and Calvin which helped shape theology today which denies the people of Israel their place in God's plan of salvation of the world.

With that understanding let us continue noticing who is speaking in these verses.

Isaiah 53:1

1. Who hath believed our (non-Jewish nations) report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

The common anthropomorphic reference to the arm of the Lord throughout scripture signifies the spiritual and military salvation of the Jewish people from the gentile nations.

Answer for yourself: Did you hear that? This is salvation from gentile nations and gentile theology!

Israel's final vindication and redemption in the eyes of the world's nations is the central theme of the last 27 chapters of the book of Isaiah (40-66).

Notice in the following verses the theme in Isaiah 52 which "sandwiched" between Isaiah 53 and Isaiah 54.

Isaiah 52:9-12

9 Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord bath comforted His people, He hath redeemed Jerusalem. 10 The Lord hath made bare His Holy Arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God! 11 Turn away, turn away, get out of there, touch no unclean one; get out of its midst, purify yourselves, you who bear the Lord's vessels. 12 For not with haste shall you go forth and not in a flurry of flight shall you go, for the Lord goes before you, and your rear guard is the God of Israel-

Isaiah 54:7-10

7 "For a small moment have I forsaken you, and with great mercy will I gather you. 8 With a little wrath did I hide My countenance for a moment from you, and with everlasting kindness will I have compassion on you," said your redeemer, the Lord. 9 "For this is to Me [as] the waters of Noah, as I swore that the waters of Noah shall never pass over the earth, so have I sworn neither to be wroth with you nor to rebuke you. 10 For the mountains shall depart and the hills totter, but My kindness shall not depart from you, neither shall the covenant of My peace totter," says the Lord, Who has compassion on you.

So you see that throughout the chapters that surround Isaiah 53, the prophet is speaking of the salvation of the afflicted Jewish nation in the presence of their persecutors, the gentile nations with their anti-Semitic hatred for the Jewish people.

Deuteronomy 7:19

19 The great miracles that you saw with your own eyes - the signs, the wonders, the mighty hand and the outstretched arm with which God brought you out of Egypt.

Again, the subject is the nation and not an individual. Thus the astonishment of the Gentile rulers and kings, including the religious rulers among the Gentiles, when God supernaturally intervenes and saves the nation of Israel despite what the Gentiles have taught theologically about the Jewish people.

THROUGHOUT THEIR PERILOUS EXILE, ISRAEL (THE NATION AND NOT JUST ONE PERSON) STRUGGLED AS A YOUNG TREE GROWING ON A PARCHED LAND

Isaiah 53:2

2 And he (the nation and not an individual) came up like a sapling before it, and like a root from dry ground, he had neither form nor comeliness; and we saw him that he had no appearance that we should have desired him.

Now you are beginning to see that this does not refer to Yeshua, but the Jewish people in total. Just be honest with yourself for a moment.

Answer for yourself: Does Christianity today desire to learn from the Jewish people?

Answer for yourself: Does Christianity today desire to keep the Jewish Sabbath which is different from their own which can be shown to be a creation of Rome in reaction to the Jewish Sabbath?

Answer for yourself: Does Christianity today desire to keep the Biblical Festivals or does it have its own Roman calendar filled with pagan holidays to which Yeshua's name has been added?

Let it not be misunderstood that for the most part, non-Jewish Christianity today views the nation of Israel, God's Suffering Servant, and sees little within it that they desire.

Hosea 14:6-8

6 I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his root*s* as Lebanon. 7 His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon. 8 They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.

Again further proof that the nation of Israel [corporate] is described in the singular [see above the "his" and its connection with "Israel"]. But also notice this, those who allow the branches of Israel to spread whereby they dwell under Israel's shadow shall return.

Answer for yourself: Return to what?

The true faith of God where we are truly grafted into Israel and correctly understand the Hebrew Scriptures.

Answer for yourself: Why do we as former Christians need to return to the faith once given to the saints?

Simply...

Jeremiah 16:19-20

19 O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth and shall say, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no benefit. 20 Shall a man make Gods unto himself, and they are no Gods?

One such lie is that Isaiah refers to Yeshua as God's only Suffering Servant in Isaiah 53. Hopefully by now God is opening your eyes to the beauty of the Jewish people and their Torah and the wonderful role they play and always have played at God's true Suffering Servant.

Let us continue.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #5

In our previous articles we have demonstrated that the Suffering Servant in Isaiah is to be understood as the collective peoples of Israel and not just one person. Thus to say that Isaiah 53 refers to Yeshua is to misinterpret the intended meaning of the prophet Isaiah.

As we continue along we noticed that the Gentile rulers, both political and spiritual will be utterly amazed as the events in the future when God intervenes and saves the Jewish people in spite of what Christianity has taught about the Jewish people.

We again showed that pronouns used in Isaiah 52, 53, and 54, normally in the singular, in reality does not refer to Yeshua but again to the collective nation of Israel.

Now in this article we will deal with common misconceptions and misinterpretations of Isaiah 53 which erroneously have been applied to Yeshua, when again if we correctly interpret the passage, refers to the corporate nation once again.

THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD DESPISED, ABANDONED, AND AFFLICTED ISRAEL...NOT ONE PERSON [JESUS]

Isaiah 53:3

3 Despised and forsaken by men, a man of pains and accustomed to illness: and as one who hides his face from us; despised, and we esteemed him not.

Answer for yourself: With the understanding brought by the previous two articles, can you begin to see that the singular "man" and "him" must refer collectively to the nation of Israel as shown in the previous two documents?

Answer for yourself: Can you now better understand why I began the first article with stressing the differences between eisegesis and exegesis (reading into the text something not there or allowing the texts and context surrounding the Biblical text to define its meaning)? I hope so.

ISAIAH 49

The 49th chapter of Isaiah stands out as one of the most stirring sections of the Bible, and continues to set the stage for Isaiah 53. Its verses contain a moving conversation between Israel and God. As in all the Servant Songs, Isaiah repeatedly refers to nation of Israel in the singular.

Throughout this chapter the Jewish remnant cries out to God; the nation feels forsaken, afflicted, and abandoned. These passages do not refer to Yeshua (one person) and his passion but the Jewish peoples of all ages. These are the very same descriptions of torment that the Servant endures in Isaiah 53.

In response to their agony, the Almighty reassures His distressed nation that His love for His people even exceeds the intense affection a new mother feels for her hurting infant. As in Isaiah 53, the final vindication and salvation of the Jewish people is the chapter's central theme.

Isaiah 49:3, 7-8, 13-15

3 And said to me, thou art My servant, O Israel in whom I will be glorified!

7 For so said the Lord, the redeemer of Israel, his Holy One, about him who is despised of men, about him whom the nation abhors, about a slave of rulers, "Kings (understood as nations) shall see and rise, princes, and they shall prostrate themselves, for the sake of the Lord Who is faithful, the Holy One of Israel, and He chose you (understood as the nation and not one person)." 8 So said the Lord, "In a time of favor I answered you, and on a day of salvation I helped you; and I will watch you, and I will make you for a people of a covenant, to establish a land, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages. 13 Sing, O heavens, and rejoice, O earth, and mountains burst out in song, for the Lord has consoled His people, and He shall have mercy on His afflicted. 14 But Zion said, "The Lord has forsaken me, and the Lord has forgotten me." 15 Shall a woman forget her suckling child, from having mercy on the child of her womb? These too shall forget, but I will not forget you (again referring to the nation).

Isaiah 54:4-7, 11, 14, 17

4 Fear not, for you shall not be ashamed, and not embarrassed, for you shall not be put to shame; for the shame of your youth you shall forget, and for the humiliation of your widowhood you shall no longer be remembered. 5 Nor your maker is your husband; the Lord Hosts is His name, and your redeemer the Holy One of Israel shall be called the God of all the earth. 6 For like a wife who is forsaken and afflicted in spirit has the Lord called you, and a wife of one's youth who was rejected, said your God. 7 For a small moment have I forsaken you, and with great mercy will I gather you.

11 O thou afflicted, who was not consoled, behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

14 With righteousness shall you be established, for you will be far from oppression, for you will not fear; and from ruin, for it will not come near you.

17 No weapon that is formed against you will prosper, and any tongue that rises against you in judgement, you shall condemn; this is the heritage of the servants of the Lord and their righteousness is from Me, says the Lord.

Understandably, one's familiarity with the chapters that precede and follow Isaiah 53 will determine the conclusions individuals come to regarding this crucial scriptural text. Those who are only familiar with this chapter (Isa 53) often wonder how anyone can conclude that Isaiah is speaking of anyone else but Yeshua. On the other hand, those who read Isaiah 53 in context, with its surrounding chapters as its backdrop, have difficulty understanding how anyone can honestly conclude that Isaiah 53 is speaking of anything else but the nation of Israel.

Isaiah 60:14-15

14 The sons of them (Gentiles) that afflicted you shall come bending unto you; and all they that despised you shall bow themselves down at the soles of your feet; and they shall call you, the city of the Lord, Zion of the Holy One of Israel. 15 Whereas you have been forsaken and despised, with no passerby, I will make you an everlasting pride, the joy of every generation.

Isaiah 40:2

2 Speak to the heart of Jerusalem and call to her, for she has become full from her host, for her iniquity has been appeased, for she has taken from the hand of the Lord double for all her sins (from the Gentiles).

Zechariah 1:15

15 And I am very angry with the nations that are at ease, for I was wroth a little, and they helped to do harm.

Isaiah 52:4-5

4 For so said the Lord God, "My people first went down to Egypt to sojourn there, but Assyria oppressed him without cause. 5 And now, what have I here," says the Lord, "that My people have been taken for nothing, his rulers boast," says the Lord, "and constantly all day My name is blasphemed."

Isaiah 62:2-4, 12

2 And the Gentiles shall see your righteousness, and all kings your glory, and you shall be called a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall pronounce. 3 And you shall be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord and a Kingly crown on the land of your God. 4 No longer shall "Forsaken" be said of you, and "Desolate" shall no longer be said of your land, for you shall be called "My desire is in her," and your land, "Inhabited," for the Lord desires you, and your land shall be inhabited.

12 And they shall call them the holy people, those redeemed by the Lord, and you shall be called, "Sought, a city not forsaken."

These above passages, some before Isaiah 53, and some afterwards, all show one thing. The Gentile nations of the world despised, abandoned, and afflicted God's Servant. All passages have one thing in common as well....namely; that those who were called "desolate, forsaken, afflicted, humiliated, despised, etc., refer to the collective people of Israel and cannot be applied as if referring to one man...namely Yeshua.

HAS THE TRANSLATION OF ISAIAH 52 IN YOUR CHRISTIAN BIBLE BEEN ALTERED FROM WHAT IT ORIGINALLY READ IN THE HEBREW MANUSCRIPTS FROM WHICH IT WAS TRANSLATED? YEP!

It is sad to say, but attempts of many Gentile Christians over the ages, in order to change the original messages of the Hebrew prophets, have altered the text of your Bible and its translation to create their own theology. This is every evident to the "informed believer." You can investigate this for yourself not only below in this website when we deal with the alteration of the "Messianic prophecies" in the Christian's Bibles, but at our other websites:

Let us investigate on a smaller scale in this article.

It was shocking for me to finally admit that many Christian Bible translators have altered the texts of the Christian's Bible for ulterior motives and goals. It occurs way more often than you could imagine. For example, Isaiah 52 was altered by Christian translators because this chapter is crucial as it serves as an indictment against the Christianization of Isaiah 53. The close relationship between Isaiah 52 and 53 is outstanding because the theme, poetic structure and motif of Isaiah 53 closely mimics the illustrative language of Isaiah 52. In addition, the chapter break between Isaiah 52 and 53 is completely artificial. If Isaiah 52 is translated correctly, it is difficult to ignore the parallelism between these two chapters. Corresponding to Isaiah 53, Isaiah 52 clearly identifies Israel in the singular, suffering innocently as a result of the destructive arrogance and spiritual recklessness of the gentile nations as well as Gentile Christianity.

The (KJV) King James Version of the Bible and the (NIV) New International Version translators were certainly concerned about how Bible readers would accept the notion that Isaiah 53 is referring to Yeshua, when Isaiah 52 so clearly describes the corporate nation of Israel as a single individual, innocently suffering as a result of the iniquity and sinful behavior of the nations of the world.

Answer for yourself: How did Christianity deal with this when printing their own Bibles..the Bibles like you most likely carry?

Get ready! Unscrupulous Christian translators, in effort to preserve their theology over truth, reconstructed crucial parts of the first half of Isaiah 52 so as not to resemble Isaiah 53's theme and poetic language.

For example, in Isaiah 52:4 the prophet recounts that "Assyria oppressed him [Israel the corporate nation as again spoken of in the singular] without a cause" As I have already attested, this concept that the nation of Israel innocently suffering as a single individual in Isaiah 52 is precisely the underlying theme of Isaiah 53.

Again, in Isaiah 52:4 the prophet speaks of the Jewish people in the singular as does Isaiah 53. Thus the NIV altered the text by removing the most offensive words of this verse. The NIV therefore reads: "lately, Assyria has oppressed them." The crucial words "without cause" have been removed.

Again, and even more important, the KJV as well as the NIV change the singular pronoun "him" in this verse to "them."

Answer for yourself: Why would they change the Hebrew "him" into "them" in Isaiah 52:4?

Answer for yourself: Again, can you begin to see that we who owned Christian Bibles were set up in hopes when we read Isaiah we might not make the connection that the singular pronoun "him," as used in such close proximity in Isaiah 52 where it means the corporate nation of Israel, would carry over in our thoughts when we read Isaiah 53?

In Isaiah 52:5 the Hebrew word "moshlov" means "his rulers," referring to the nation of Israel's rulers. The nation of Israel once again is spoken of in the singular. Therefore, the KJV and NIV translators again change the singular pronoun "his" into the plural "them."

Isaiah 52:4 in Hebrew

Assyria oppressed him without cause

Isaiah 52:4 in the KJV

the Assyrian oppressed them without cause

Isaiah 52:4 in the NIV

lately, Assyria has oppressed them

Answer for yourself: Do you see for yourself the efforts expended in changing the Word of God so as to destroy your ability to connect the singular pronouns of Isaiah 53 with corporate Israel?

Isaiah 52:5 in Hebrew

Isaiah 52:5 in the KJV

they that rule over them make them howl

Isaiah 52:5 in the NIV

and those who rule them mock

Answer for yourself: Can you again see such lengths taken (changing "his" [singular] to "them [plural] by Christian Bible translators to change the Holy Word of God in order that you will accept their interpretation (that Isaiah 53 refers to Yeshua instead of Israel) instead of what God originally intended the texts to teach?

Answer for yourself: Can you begin to see how such drastic steps were take as altering, adding, and deleting from the Word of God in order to make sure that when your read Isaiah 52 you don't interpret the Suffering Servant as the nation of Israel?

The KJV therefore reads, "rule over them." The irony of all this Bible-tampering is that these Christian translators changed the singular reference to Israel in Isaiah 52 into the plural and the plural references in Isaiah 53 into the singular. All this was done in the name of religion. Such is the strength of anti-Semitism masquerading in religion.

Answer for yourself: So how come as Christians we don't know this when we read our Christian Bibles?

The answer is quite simple. When we bought a Bible we went to a Christian Book Store and bought what we were told and believed to be the infallible written Word of God. But as I have shown you, unless you compare the Old Testament writing in your Christian Bible with the Jewish Scriptures from the Jewish Publication House and their Hebrew Bible, we cannot know if there are errors or changes in our Christian Bibles that led us astray from the intended meaning of the text when first given by God.

Answer for yourself: How many of you can actually say that when you go to church you compare every passage quoted in the New Testament from the Hebrew Scriptures with the original Jewish Scriptures?

Answer for yourself: Before now, were you aware that such alterations, additions, and deletions occurred in your Christian Bibles?

Answer for yourself: Can we be confident that when reading from a Christian Bible that the passage we are reading in the Old Testament is accurately translated from the Hebraic original? No! The examples given in this article is but the tip of the iceberg!

Let us continue.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #6

- In our previous three articles we have demonstrated that the Suffering Servant in Isaiah is to be understood as the collective peoples of Israel and not just one person. Thus to say that Isaiah 53 refers to Jesus is to misinterpret the intended meaning of the prophet Isaiah.
- As we continue along we noticed that the Gentile rulers and nations of the world despised, abandoned, and afflicted Israel. We noticed that the imagery as well as the pronouns used by the prophet in Isaiah 52 through 54 applied to the nation of Israel and not to only one man. We noticed that although Christianity does not interpret Isaiah 53 correctly today, that both the world political and spiritual leaders will one day be utterly amazed at the events in the future when God intervenes and saves the Jewish people in spite of what Christianity has taught about the Jewish people.
- We showed repeatedly that pronouns used in Isaiah 52, 53, and 54, normally in the singular, in reality does not refer to Jesus but to the collective nation of Israel.

Now in this article we will continue to deal with common misconceptions and misinterpretations of Isaiah 53 which erroneously have been applied to Jesus which rightfully apply to the nation. We will discover that it was not Jesus who suffered as a result of the iniquity of the world, but that the nation of Israel suffered as the result of the sins of the Gentile nations. We will also examine if it was Jesus who interceded for the world or if it was the nation of Israel. Lastly we will examine if Jesus was the sacrifice Isaiah 53 was speaking about, or if the remnant of Israel was the one massacred like sheep for the slaughter.

ONE DAY CHRISTIANITY AND ALL GENTILE WORLD LEADERS WILL REALIZE THAT THE NATION OF ISRAEL AND THE JEWISH PEOPLE SUFFERED AS A RESULT OF THEIR SINS

To make sure we don't lose focus of who is speaking in Isaiah 53 let me ask again this simple question which was already asked.

Answer for yourself: Let us ask once again...who is speaking? The Gentile political and spiritual leaders of the world

Isaiah 53:4-5

4 Indeed, he [corporate nation of Israel] bore our illnesses, and our pains - he [corporate nation of Israel] carried them, yet we accounted him [the corporate nation of Israel] as plagued, smitten by God and oppressed.

5. But he [corporate nation of Israel] was pained because of our transgressions, crushed because of our iniquities; the chastisement of our welfare was upon him [the corporate nation of Israel], and with his [the corporate nation of Israel] wounds we were healed.

Answer for yourself: Most likely your whole life you have been told that Isaiah 53, when it said "he bore our illnesses" and "was smitten by God and oppressed," was referring to Jesus. Now what do you think since reading the past three articles?

Answer for yourself: When Isaiah [as shown repeatedly before in the first three articles when he repeatedly uses singular pronouns to refer to the corporation nation of Israel], refers to God's Suffering Servant as the singular nation of Israel, whose identity are we now to think of [Jesus or Israel] when we see the prophet saying "he was wounded because of our transgressions, crushed because of our iniquities; the chastisement of our welfare was upon him, and with his wounds we were healed"?

"ARE" HEALED OR "WERE" HEALED?

In order to stress the ongoing and ever-current atonement of Jesus, Christian Bibles incorrectly translate "with his wounds we are healed," in the present tense. Actually, the nations are speaking here of Israel's past suffering, therefore the verse correctly reads "we were healed."

Ezekiel 36:6-9, 15

6 Therefore, prophesy about the land of Israel and say to the mountains and to the hills, to the streams and to the valleys: Thus says my Lord, God: Behold! In My jealousy and in My anger I have spoken, because the shame of the nations you have borne. 7 Therefore, thus says my Lord, God: I have lifted My hand in an oath. Surely the nations which surround you - they will bear their shame. 8 But you, O mountains of Israel - you shall shoot forth your branches and bear your fruit for My people Israel, when they are about to come. 9 For behold! I am for you, and I shall turn to you; then you shall be tilled and sown.

15 And I shall no longer cause the ridicule of nations to be heard about you, and the shame of the nations you shall no longer bear, of your nations you shall never again be bereaved - the word of my Lord, God.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that there is a time limit for Israel carrying the iniquity of the nations?

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that there is a time limit where Israel will no longer atone for the sins of the world?

Jeremiah 30:8-13

8 And it shall be on that day, says the Lord of hosts, (that) I will break his yoke off your neck, and I will break your thongs, and strangers shall no longer enslave them [the nation of Israel].9 And they shall serve the Lord their God and David their king, whom I will set up for them. 10 And you [servant nation], fear not, My servant Jacob, says the Lord, and do not be dismayed, O Israel, for behold I save you from afar and your seed from the land of their captivity, and Jacob shall again be silent and at ease, and no one will frighten them. 11 For I am with you, says the Lord, to save you, for I will make an end of all the nations where I dispersed you, but of you I will not make an end, but I will chasten you in measure, and I will not completely destroy you. 12 For so said the Lord: Your bruise [the nation's bruse] is painful, your wound [nations's wound] grievous.

13 No one deems your wound [nation's wound] to be healed, you have no healing medicines.

As you can readily see the evil manner in which the Gentile nations, as well as Christianity over the centuries, have treated the Jewish people have contributed to the sufferings of Israel. Such sufferings at the hands of Gentiles and Gentile nations is described in Isaiah 53:4-5(my paraphrase)..."Israel bore the pains inflicted upon them by the Gentile nations who misunderstood them, and such suffering was incorrectly interpreted by the oppressors as if Israel had been forsaken by God. Because of the Gentiles' sins against Israel the peoples of God were crushed, and the Gentiles thought they were doing God a favor by persecuting and killing the Jewish people."

IN SPITE OF SUCH CRUEL TREATMENT BY THE GENTILE NATIONS OF THE WORLD...ISRAEL PRAYED FOR THEIR OPPRESSORS

Remembering what we have already learned...that singular pronouns in the Servant Songs of Isaiah refer to the nation of Israel and not to only one person like Jesus, we find the following verses even the more astonishing.

Isaiah 53:6

6 We all went astray like sheep, we have turned, each one on his own way, and the Lord accepted his [the corporate nation of Israel] prayers for the iniquity of all of us.

Jeremiah 29:7

7 And seek the peace of the city where I have exiled you [nation of Israel] and pray for it to the Lord, for in its peace you shall have peace.

Now let us never again under estimate the importance of the prayer service in the Jewish synagogues of the world for by it atonement came for Gentile sins.

THE REMNANT OF ISRAEL HAS BEEN MASSACRED LIKE SHEEP FOR THE SLAUGHTER

Answer for yourself: Are we not led to believe, according to Christianity that Jesus as Messiah was rejected by the people of Israel and ultimately killed by them? Sure are.

Although the Bible explicitly and repeatedly describes the Jewish people [Suffering Servant as corporate Israel] as afflicted and despised by the Gentile nations, there is not even one clear reference to the Messiah as afflicted or despised anywhere in all of the Jewish Scriptures.

In light of what we have discovered about singular pronouns referring to corporate Israel, it is easy to see that is was the nation of Israel again which was afflicted. Just a brief overview of anti-Semitism from the annals of Church history is enough to make you sick. Notice the references below which describe the Jewish nation as afflicted by the Gentile nations.

Isaiah 53:7

7 He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he would not open his mouth; like a lamb to the slaughter he would be brought, and like a sheep that is mute before her shearers, and he would not open his mouth.

Psalm 18:28

29 For you will save the afflicted nation; and you will bring down haughty looks.

Psalm 44 describes the plight of the righteous remnant of Israel. Notice how the language used here to describe the condition of the Jewish people parallels that of Isaiah 53.

Psalm 44:12, 14-15, 22

12 You have delivered us like sheep for the slaughter, and among the gentiles you have scattered us.

14 You made us a disgrace to our neighbors, the mockery and scorn of those around us. 15 You made us a byword among the nations [Gentile nations] to shake their heads.

22 Because for Your sake we are killed all day long, we are considered as sheep for the slaughter.

Ezekiel 34:15-15

15 I will tend My sheep, and lay them down-the words of my Lord, God. 16 The lost, I will seek out; and the banished, I will retrieve; the wounded, I will heal, and the frail, I will strengthen. But the fat one and the strong one, I will destroy. I will shepherd them with justice.

Zechariah 11:4-5, 7

4 So Said the Lord, my God: Tend the flock of the slaughter, 5 whose buyers shall lay them and not be guilty; and whose sellers shall say, "Blessed be the Lord, for I have become wealthy"; and whose shepherds shall not have pity on them.

7 And I tended the flock of slaughter, indeed, the poor of the flock.

THE GENTILE NATIONS ACKNOWLEDGE THAT AS A RESULT OF THEIR INIQUITY TOWARD THE JEWS (THEIR BOTHERS) THAT ISRAEL SUFFERED

Isaiah 53:8 [REMEMBER THE GENTILE KINGS REPRESENTING THE GENTILE NATIONS IS DOING THE SPEAKING IN THESE VERSES]

8From imprisonment and from judgment he is taken, and his generation who shall tell? For he was cut off from the land of the living; because of the transgression of my people, a plague befell them.

Answer for yourself: Who is again speaking in Isaiah 53? The rulers and kings of the Gentile nations.

Answer for yourself: Whose trangressions? The Gentile nations toward the Jewish people!

Answer for yourself: Can you see for yourself that one day the Gentiles will face up to what they have done to the Jewish people and how they have sinned against them and altered their Jewish Scriptures?

Answer for yourself: To whom did a plague fall? The Jewish people. The nation of Israel who happens to be the subject of the Servant Songs of Isaiah.

The prophet's use of the word (lamo) "them" as a pronoun for the Suffering Servant presents a monumental problem for Christian Bible translators committed to making Jesus fit the Servant of Isaiah 53. Poetically, the prophets often speak of the Jewish nation in the singular to accentuate the nation's distinctive corporate destiny. The prophets, however, never speak of an individual in the plural. Therefore, the use of the Hebrew word (lamo) "them", for the Servant of Isaiah 53, reveals that the Servant is NOT a single individual.

The KJV, and NIV and other Christian Bibles solve this problem by mistranslating the word "them" as "him" in the singular.

Since discovering that the Hebrew Scriptures correctly render "lamo" as "them," then let us look at how the Christian Bible does great injustice to the text by purposely mistranslating the verse to fit their erroneously theology. They change "them" to "him"!

In each of the examples following the Jewish Scriptures tanslate the word as "them" but our Christian translations have "him instead....why?

Isaiah53:8b KJV

for the transgressions of my people was he stricken

Isaiah 53:8b Modern Readers Bible for the transgression of my people was he stricken

Isaiah 53:8b NIV

for the transgression of my people he was stricken

Isaiah 53:8b Living Bible

it was their sins that he was dying for - that he was suffering their punishment

Nowhere in these above examples was the pronoun intended to be rendered in the singular as "he," rather, the correct interpretation is the plural as "them." Who changed the Jewish Scriptures and why?

If we fail to realize who is speaking in Isaiah 53, then it is easy to see why Christians try to make this death spoken of in Isaiah 53 atone for the sins of the Jewish people, when in reality it is the death of the righteous remnant of Israel [corporate nation] which was due to the result of the sins of the Gentile nations.

But you see, if somehow you make Isaiah 53 to refer to Jesus [by failing to undestand who is doing the speaking in Isaiah 53 and who is making a confession of "guilt" toward the Jewish people as well as changing the pronouns "them" to "him"] which I repeatedly have shown you occured...then and only then can you make a case for Jesus being the "subject" of Isaiah 53.

Dear ones...tampering with the Holy Word of God to make our "theology" fit is a sin and brings God's anger because of us changing His Word [your shall not add or take away...remember?]!

WE SEE THAT CHRISTIAN BIBLE TRANSLATORS CHANGED THE HEBREW WORD "LAMO" WHICH MEANT "THEM" TO THE SINGULAR "HE" IN ISAIAH 53 BECAUSE OF THEIR THEOLOGY...DID THEY DO THE SAME ELSEWHERE?....NO...SO WHY IN ISAIAH 53?

Well the answer is simple....it did not serve their "theological" purpose to not do so!

Deuteronomy 32:35 (King James)

32...for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste.

Deuteronomy 33:2 (King James)

2 ...He shined forth from Mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints: From His right hand went a fiery law for them

Job 6:19 (King James)

19 The troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them

Job 14:21 (King James)

2 His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them

Job 24:17 (King James)

17 For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death: if one know them...

Psalms 2:4 (King James)

4 He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision.

Psalms 44:4 (King James, 44:3)

4 For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them

Psalms 119:165 (King James)

165 Great peace have they which love Thy law: and nothing shall offend them

Isaiah 16:4 (King James)

4 Let Mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab, be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: for the extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the land.

Isaiah 23:1 (King James)

1 The burden of Tyre. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish, for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in: from the land of Chinim it is revealed to them

Isaiah 44:7 (King James)

7 And who, as 1, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for Me, since I appointed the ancient people? And the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them

Isaiah 48:21 (King James)

21 And they thirsted not when he led them through the deserts: He caused waters to flow out of the rock for them*:* He calve the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

Lamentations 1:19 (King James)

19 1 called for my lovers, but they deceived me: my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

Habakkuk 2:7 (King James)

7 Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?

I find it amazing that the same Bible translators who changed the meaning of the Hebrew pronoun for "them" to "he" in Isaiah 53 in order to read into the text the identity of Jesus [individual instead of a corporate nation] instead of the correct meaning of the nation of Israel which the prophet intended, did not follow their own laws of interpretation elsewhere when confronted with the same word. For in the examples given above, they saw no need whatsoever to change the plural "them" to "he" as they did in Isaiah.

Answer for yourself: How reliable are our Christian Bibles when those we trust to accurately translate the Scriptures are changing the very tense of the words to match their pre-formed theologies? Could our beliefs concering Jesus as connected with Isa. 53 be wrong as Christians?

Answer for yourself: If the Christian Gentile Bible translators had not wished to read into Isaiah 53 the identity of Jesus, do you think they would have felt the need to change the tense of the pronoun from "them" to "he" in Isaiah 53?

The bottom line for all Christians to understand is that we have heard way too much preached about Jesus and far too little studied from the texts of the Jewish Bible which tell us exactly and accurately what he believed as well as his original mission. If we had studied the original sources available to us, we would not be so mixed up theologically in Christianity today which boasts over 2000 different denominations all maintaining they have the truth about Jesus while at the same time being the most violent and crime ridden nation in the world. May God forgive our laziness to let others tell us what to believe instead of us studying to show ourselves approved unto God.

We continue.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #7

- In our previous articles we have demonstrated, beyond any doubt, that the "Suffering Servant" in Isaiah is to be understood as the collective peoples of Israel [the nation] and not just one person. Thus to say that Isaiah 53 refers to Jesus is to misinterpret the intended meaning of the prophet Isaiah.
- As we continue along we noticed that the "speaker" in Isaiah 53 is not Isaiah, or the Jewish people, but rather that the speaker was the Gentile Kings and rulers of the world.
- We also saw that Isaiah is a "testimony" or "confession" from these Gentile leaders amounting to the fact that they had totally misunderstood the Jewish people and their "religious ideas" concerning them had been wrong.
- We saw that the Gentile rulers and nations of the world despised, abandoned, and afflicted Israel. History testifies to this.
- We noticed that the imagery as well as the pronouns [the use of "singular" pronouns to represent the "corporate" nation] used by the prophet in Isaiah 52 through 54 applied to the nation of Israel and was not meant to apply to only one man. We showed repeatedly that pronouns used in Isaiah 52, 53, and 54, normally in the singular, in reality does not refer to Jesus but to the collective nation of Israel.
- We noticed that although Christianity does not interpret Isaiah 53 correctly today, that both the world political and spiritual leaders will one day be utterly amazed at the events in the future when God intervenes and saves the Jewish people in spite of what Christianity has taught about the Jewish people.
- We noticed that the "transgressions" of Isaiah 53:8 refer to the Gentiles and not the Jewish people.
- We saw how the Christian Bibles and their translation of Isa. 53 purposefully alter the pronouns by using "him" for "them" in order to make it more difficult for the reader to see that Isaiah was not speaking about one individual, but the whole nation of Israel as the "Suffering Servant." We saw by falsifying and corrupting Isaiah 53 the Christian Bible translators artificially made the text refer to "one" person and of course that person is to be Jesus to the Christian, but that was never the "message" of Isaiah in the first place.

Now in this article we will continue to deal with common misconceptions and misinterpretations of Isaiah 53 which erroneously have been applied to Jesus which rightfully apply to the nation. We will examine if Jesus died once or many times. This may sound preposterous but just wait. Also we will examine if Jesus' blood or the knowledge of God that went to the Gentile world because of his death brought vindication to the world. This is very important information for the Biblical believing Christian. So without further ado...

THROUGHOUT THEIR PERILOUS EXILE THE JEWISH PEOPLE ENDURED MARTYRDOM FOR THEIR FAITH...

As has been done to many verses before as exposed in the previous articles in this series, the plural references to the Servant of Yahweh is once again deliberately altered by Christian translators into the singular. The Hebrew word (b'mosov) is plural and correctly translated means "deaths." The KJV, NIV and other Christian translations of Isaiah again change the tense of the word....in order for it to read "death;" again purposefully altering the text in order to conceal the identity of the Servant as the nation of Israel as a "plurality."

Answer for yourself: Did Jesus die once or twice, or three times or more than that? Did Jesus die a "death" or did he die "deaths"?

Let's investigate the matter in detail.

ISAIAH 53:9 FROM THE HEBREW SCRIPTURES...& NOT FROM THE CHRISTIAN'S CORRUPTED OLD TESTAMENT

Isaiah 53:9

9 And he gave his grace to the wicked and to the wealthy with his kinds of deaths, because he committed no violence, and there was no deceit in his mouth.

Answer for yourself: How many times did Jesus die and other than crucifixion is there recorded for us a different type of death that he endured?

Answer for yourself: Presuming you have read the prior 4 articles in this series, are you better equipped now to properly understand that the "deaths" spoken of in the plural in this verse describes the deaths of the Jewish people at the hands of the Gentile nations who misunderstood them or rejected them and their ways of godliness?

HOW DOES THE KJV IN THE CHRISTIAN BIBLE HANDLE ISAIAH 53:9

Isaiah 53:9

9 And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

Answer for yourself: Did you catch the difference for yourself?

As has been done to many verses before as I have carefully documented for you in the previous articles in this series, the understanding of the plural references to the Servant of Yahweh is once again deliberately altered by Christian translators into the singular. In this instance the plural "deaths" in the original become the singular "death" in the Christian Bible. Let me state again the fact that the Hebrew word (b'mosov) is plural and correctly translated means "deaths." The KJV, NIV and others change it to read "death" in order to conceal the identity of the Servant as the nation of Israel.

IS THERE ANY OTHER REFERENCES TO THE SUFFERING SERVANT OF GOD AS THE NATION OF ISRAEL NOT HAVING DECEITFUL SPEECH?

Zephaniah 3:12-17, 19-20

12 And I will leave over in your midst a humble and poor people, and they shall take shelter in the name of the Lord. 13 The remnant of Israel shall neither commit injustice nor speak lies; neither shall deceitful speech be found in their mouth [notice the plural once more], for they shall gaze and lie down, with no one to cause them to shudder. 14 Sing O daughter of Zion! Shout, O Israel! Rejoice and jubilate wholeheartedly, O daughter of Jerusalem! 15 The Lord has removed your afflictions; He has cast out your enemy. The king of Israel, the LORD, is in your midst - you shall no longer fear evil. 16 On that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, "Have no fear! O Zion, Let your hands not be slack. 17 The LORD thy God is in your midst -a Mighty One Who will save. He will rejoice over thee with joy. He will be silent in His love.

19 He will jubilate over you with song." Behold, I wreak destruction upon all those who have afflicted you at that time. And I will save the one who limps, and I will gather the stray one, and I will make them a praise and a name throughout all the land where they suffered shame. 20 At that time I will bring them, and at (that) time I will gather you, for I will make you a name and a praise among all the peoples of the earth when I restore your daughters before your eyes, said the Lord.

Answer for yourself: Are you beginning to see that what you have been mistakenly taught referred to Jesus in Isaiah 53 really refers to the whole of the nation and not one person?

As you can see for yourself here the prophet Zephaniah describes vividly the righteous remnant of Israel [corporate Israel and not a single person] in precisely the same fashion as the prophet Isaiah did in the 53rd chapter: "The remnant of Israel [afflicted Israel by the Gentile nations] shall neither speak lies; neither shall deceitful speech be found in their mouth."

TO THE REPENTANT GOD PROMISES CHILDREN IN ISAIAH 53, LONG LIFE, AND DIVINE HELP

Isaiah 53:10 in the Jewish Scriptures vs Isaiah 53:10 in the Christian Bibles...what is the truth?

10 And the Lord wished to crush him [corporate Israel..remember?] He made him ill; if his soul makes itself restitution, he shall see seed, he shall prolong his days, and God's purposes shall prosper in his hand.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that the promise of "seed" or children is conditional to restitution and obedience?

Now understand this is the "text" as taken from the Jewish Bible.

Answer for yourself: Do you know that the Christian translations of Isa. 53:10 are completely different? Why is that? Let us examine it from the KJV version of Isaiah 53:10 as taken from my personal Christian Bible.

Isa 53:10-11 10 Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand. 11 He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Where does the idea of "atonement" and "making a soul an offering for sin" come from when it is not in the Jewish Bible and the Jewish Scriptures?

Answer for yourself: Did someone make this up [soul an offering for sin] when they translated the manuscripts from the Hebrew or added it later in the ?

Answer for yourself: Is someone attributing to Isaiah the prophet things he did not say to give Prophetic authority to religious doctrines [like a false atonement connected to Jesus] that were never written by him in the first place? They sure are.

Answer for yourself: Now, has God previously told "corporate Israel" the same thing; namely, that if they were obedient to Him then they would prosper and see their "seed?" He sure has!

Deuteronomy 30:8-10, 19-20

8 You will repent and obey God, keeping all His commandments, as I prescribe them to you today. 9 God will then grant you a good surplus in all the work of your hands, in the fruit of your womb, the fruit of your livestock, and the fruit of your land. God will once again rejoice in you for good, just as He rejoiced in your fathers. 10 All this will happen when you obey [conditional] God your Lord, keeping all His commandments and decrees, as they are written in this book of the Torah, and when you return to God your Lord with all your heart and soul.

19 I call heaven and earth as witnesses! Before you I have placed life and death, the blessing and the curse. You must choose life, so that you and your seed will survive. 20 If you choose to love the Lord your God, to obey Him, and to attach yourself to Him. This is the sole means of survival and long life when you dwell in the land that God swore to you' fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, [promising] that He would give it to them.

So we find nothing new here to force upon the interpretation of Isaiah 53:10 a meaning foreign to the text. The message is simple. If the children of God obey Him and His commandments, they will proper both physically (offspring--see their seed) and spiritually. "If his soul (life) makes restitution (repent) then he shall prolong his days in the land and receive blessing. If not, then further exile. What we must never fail to remember is that God often used Gentile nations to chastise His people and bring them to repentance. Such is the message hidden within Isaiah 53.

WITH HIS KNOWLEDGE THE SERVANT-CORPORATE ISRAEL-BRINGS VINDICATION TO ALL MANKIND...THAT MEANS THE GENTILES OF THE WORLD (ie. Christians)

Isaiah 53:11

11 From the toil of his soul he would see, he would be satisfied; with his knowledge My servant would vindicate the just for many, and their iniquities he would bear.

Maybe you need to read that again....now understanding that the "subject" of Isaiah 53 is the corporate nation of Israel and not just "one person," Isaiah is specifically saying that through the knowledge of the Jewish nation (their Torah and their Bible) that they VINDICATE and BEAR THE INIQUITIES of many. WOW!

Answer for yourself: What does it mean "With his "knowledge"?

In Christian theology it was not Jesus' knowledge that vindicated the world. It was, according to Christian theology it was his blood. Isaiah is not, however, speaking of a crucified messiah in his 53rd chapter. The prophet is referring to the Almighty's Servant Israel and not just one person, who, by their corporate knowledge of God and His precious Torah are witnesses to the world that there are no other gods (Isaiah 43:10-11) and through this Torah (Hebrew for instruction) they, by both witnessing it and sharing it with others (me and you) help redeem the world (conditional that I accept and believe it and live it)!

ISRAEL'S FUNCTIONS AS A PRIEST FOR THE GENTILES...A "ROYAL PRIESTHOOD"...REMEMBER?

Exodus 19:5-6

5 Now if you obey Me and keep My covenant, you shall be My special treasure among all the nations, because all the world is Mine. 6 You will be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation to Me. These are the words that you must relate to the Israelites.

Immediately before the Ten Commandments were given at Sinai, the nation of Israel was told that they are to be a "Kingdom of priests" (Ex. 19:5), as in Isaiah 61:6. Now it was up to them to live up to their "calling."

Isaiah 61:6-9

6. And you shall be called "The Priests of the Lord, Servants of our God": shall be said of you; the possessions of the nations you shall eat, and with their glory you shall succeed (them). 7 Instead of your shame, which was two fold, and your disgrace, which they [the Gentile nations for rejecting them] shall inherit two fold; they shall have everlasting joy. 8 For I am the Lord, Who loves justice, hates robbery in a burnt offering; and I gave their wage in truth, and an everlasting covenant I will make for them. 9 And their seed shall be known among the gentiles, and their offspring among the nations; all who see them shall recognize them that they are seed that the Lord blessed.

Isaiah 42:6

6 I am the Lord; I called you with righteousness and I will strengthen your hand; and I formed you, and I make you for a people's covenant, for a light to the nations.

Isaiah 49:6

6 And He said, "Is it too light a thing for you to be My servant? To establish the tribes of Jacob and to bring back the besieged of Israel, but I will make you a light of nations, so that My salvation shall be until the end of the earth."

Isaiah 60:3

3 And nations shall go by your light and kings by the brilliance of your shine.

Proverbs 6:23

23 For a commandment is a candle, and the Torah is light..

Zechariah 8:13, 23

13 'And it shall come to pass that as you were a curse among the Gentiles, O House of Judah and House of Israel, so will I save you - and you shall be a blessing. Fear not; may your hands be strengthened!

23 So said the Lord of Hosts: In those days, when ten men of all the languages of the gentiles shall take hold of the skirt [prayer shawl] of a Jewish man, saying, "Let us go with you, for we have heard that God is with you."

Answer for yourself: How can we be, as Christians and followers of Jesus, enlightened by Israel's light, their Torah, their Bible, and by Israel as God's Priesthood, when our translations of their writings are not faithful to what the Hebrew originally said?

Answer for yourself: How can we be ministered to by God's "Royal Priesthood" when our translations of their Holy Book are corrupted on purpose in order to infect us with solar and sun-worship dressed up like Judaism and "divine prophecies" by Rome and other?

Answer for yourself: How can we "go by their light" when we don't have it and when we even try to read our Bibles we don't know that were are reading purposefully corrupted passages that leads us far from the truth that Isaiah originally communicated to others that he received by revelation of HaShem?

HOW DOES GOD VIEW US....WHEN WE HAVE ACCEPTED A REPLACEMENT RELIGION AND CORRUPT TEXTS OVER HIS HOLY WORD?

Numbers 18:1

'And God said to Aaron, "You and your sons, and your father's house with you, you must bear the Iniquity against the sanctuary, and you and your sons must bear the iniquity against your priesthood.

Answer for yourself: What is our remedy? Simply; we must repent of our false beliefs when shown we are wrong!

Isaiah 2:2-5

2 And it shall be at the end of days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be firmly established at the top of the mountains, and it shall be raised above the hills, and all the nations shall stream to it. 3 And many nations shall go, and they shall say, "Come, let us go up to the Lord's mount, to the house of the God of Jacob, and let Him teach us of His ways, and we will go in His paths, " for out of Zion shall the Torah come forth, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem..." 50 house of Jacob, come let us go in the light of the Lord."

THE SERVANT IS FINALLY VINDICATED

Isaiah 53:1 2

12. Therefore, I will allot him [the corporate nation of Israel] a portion in public, and with the strong he shall share plunder, because he poured out his soul (life..in bringing knowledge of God to non-Jews) to death, and with transgressors he was counted; and he bore the sin of many (received the sinful treatment of many non-Jews and Christians through the centuries), and interceded for the transgressors (daily prayers-prayer book..Amidah).

Maybe you need to read that again...real slowly!

Ezekiel 34:27, 29-30

"And the tree on the field will yield its fruit, and the earth will yield its produce, and they shall remain securely upon their ground. Then shall they know that I am God, when I break the bars of their yoke and save them from the hands of those who enslave them (from Gentiles)... 29 And I shall establish for them a plantation of renown, and they shall no more be gathered in by famine in the land, and they shall no more bear the shame of the nations. 30 Then they shall know that I, God their Lord, am with them, and they are My people, the family of Israel - the words of my Lord, God.

We continue.

WHAT YOU WERE NEVER TAUGHT BY YOUR CHRISTIAN CHURCH…THE TRUTH ABOUT ABOUT ISAIAH 53 #8

CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF VERSES FROM ISAIAH 53

As I grew up in church as a child, and even as a young adult, I was assured repeatedly by my spiritual leadership in our church that Isaiah chapter 53 referred to Yeshua. It seems that this one chapter from the Jewish Scriptures kept coming up in church regularly for discussion. In sermon after sermon, I heard that the Prophet Isaiah was referring to Yeshua in this chapter and that Yeshua "fulfilled" Isaiah chapter 53. I heard over and over that Yeshua is the "suffering servant" of Isaiah chapter 53. In fact I was told that I was to use this particular chapter in witnessing to unbelievers. I was even told that all Jews before the Middle Ages recognized this chapter as "messianic," but due to the efforts of a Rabbi Rashi that belief changed. In fact that is what Jews for Jesus claim and publish in their literature. There is only one problem with what Jews for Jesus teach regarding this and other thing; it is a lie and it can be proven so by reading the ancients. We will look at that later in a concluding article on this subject on this website. I suppose if you have an "organiziation" you can say what you will and people will believe you. Christendom has done that for centuries.

I can remember also being told when I was young that the moon was made out of cheese. Seriously, I was willing to accept all these above statements as fact without a personal inquiry on my part to see if these things be so. After many years of Bible study and research I realize that such beliefs attached to Isaiah 53 were in error, and most likely, you have made the same mistake. Later in life I did examine Isaiah 53 in detail for myself as well as the whole book of Isaiah [from the Jewish texts and not just from my Christian sources], and the results I found are the subject of this article. We at Bet Emet Ministries would like to share with you our research in hopes of assisting you in coming to the correct interpretation of a chapter which has become the cornerstone of Christianity let alone evangelism to the Jewish people. Please understand that if what we were told about Jesus and Isaiah 53 cannot stand the test of critical inquiry, then the very foundation of Christianity is rocked and maybe, oh maybe, the Jewish people and scholars have been right all along. Well, get ready, for if you will truly will bow your knee to truth then your legs will have bent before this article is over.

LET EVERY MAN BE A LIAR BUT LET GOD'S WORD BE TRUE!

Answer for yourself: Do you ascribe to the above phrase?

The Jewish sages teach that "whoever saves a single soul is considered as if he had saved an entire world." How precious is the soul! Though the Bible study which you have begun and yet follows is a lengthy one, we have prepared it realizing that the subject matter is of a very sensitive nature, and that most will not take kindly to someone tampering with their religious belief system, let along showing them that the very core of it is totally incorrect. We at Bet Emet hope that you too will value your soul highly enough to prayerfully ponder that which follows. God's truth is not always easy to discern, but we are possessors of a Divine promise; "you will find Him if you search after Him with all your heart and all your soul" (Deut. 4:29). As faithful Jews have attested for over 3500 years, it's worth the effort. And now - on with the search!

PRELIMINARY ISSUES INVOLVED IN CORRECTLY INTERPRETING ISAIAH 53

Before continuing our examination of Isaiah 53 itself, some preliminary issues must be considered. First is the issue of circular reasoning. Even if we interpret the chapter as most Christians do (forgetting for a minute the mistranslations and distortions of context which you have already seen and will continue to be noted below), the most that could be said is this: Isaiah 53 is about someone who dies both "because of" and "for" the sins of others. Right in the beginning I have to pose for you a very big question.

Answer for yourself: Understanding that the people were familiar with their own Bibles, then when Jesus died, did the people perceive he was dying for their sins?

Answer for yourself: Did the people who watched Jesus die understand his death as fulfilling Isaiah 53, or was this interpretation of his death conceived later by the Gentile Church, and read backward into the accounts of his death?

Answer for yourself: If Jesus' death was the "final sacrifice" for sins according to the Hebrew writer, then why does James instruct Paul to fulfill a nazarite vow in Acts 21 fully knowing that to do he has to bring blood sacrfices for sin offerings and atonement? Did you know that? Maybe you should put together Numbers chapter 6 and Acts 21 and see what the "picture" tells you. Those who crafted the New Testament and its replacement theology should have done a better job ridding themselves of such incriminating facts. Granted such knowledge is beneath the context of Acts 21 but it is there if study and "think."

Answer for yourself: For a moment do you think James would have instructed Paul to do that if he, the spirit-filled leader of Jesus' church, thought or knew for example that Jesus' death was some form of atonement of that Jesus was the long-awaited fulfillment of Isa. 53?

Answer for yourself: Would you have done the same (bring blood sacrifices for atonement) with such a faith "in Jesus" for your sin? I think not!

Answer for yourself: People may have seen Jesus die, but did anyone see him die as an atonement for the sins of others? James and the first church sure did not because this "vow" was 25 years after Jesus' death.

Answer for yourself: Don't you think that within 25 years or so the Holy Spirit would have told James and the mother church the "facts" about Jesus' death [that he was the fulfillment of Isa. 53] as we have come to be instructed if it were "true?"

These are some of the biggest questions you will ever have to answer for yourself. If we are to believe, as we have been taught in the Christian Church, that Isaiah 53 was speaking of the Messiah who was to die for the sins of others, then Jesus' followers, knowing this passage and longing for its fulfillment one day, should not been shocked at the idea of himself going to his death. But they were!

Answer for yourself: Is it possible that James and the mother church did not believe what we are taught about Jesus and Isa. 53 in our Christian Churches today?

The answer is simply they did not for 2 reasons:

- First...their Jewish Scriptures (in Isaiah 53 and elsewhere) did not read like our corrupted translations today in our Christian Old Testaments so they would not have believed such things about "anyone" let alone Jesus.
- Second...their actions, based upon their beliefs, show they did not believe Isa. 53 referred to Jesus as some form of final atonement.

Acts 21 reveals they did not (when you put that with Numbers 6 where sin offerings and atonements are connected with the nazarite vow that Paul took). The problem is not only the two-faced Paul who performs a "righteous act" that contradicts what he had been teaching but that James, Jesus' hand-picked leader, commands it to be done. Evidnetly James did not believe like Christians today. Who was right? It is pretty simple when you see the corruptions of the Jewish Bible that we have already exposed previousy in these articles on Isa. 53 along with what yet follows.

Answer for yourself: How do we reconcile the supposed Christian's expectation of the Messiah's death for sin against the shock of the followers of Jesus at the announcements of his soon coming death?

Answer for yourself: Would they have not been looking forward for such redemption if that was the promise of the Prophets?

Answer for yourself: Since when is "atonement" connected with the Passover and not with Yom Kippur?

Answer for yourself: Can you find for yourself where atonement for sin is connected to a Passover Lamb" in the Jewish Scriptures? Its not! Many animals were sacrificed as offerings at all times of the year as well as when different situations came up in one's life. But not all of the animals sacrificed carried the idea of "atonement."This may be a shock to you but "atonement" was never, I said never, connected with the death of the lamb at Passover. This should make you wonder about the "types and shadows" we have always connected to the life of Jesus.

Answer for yourself: If Jesus is the Lamb of God, and understanding that the Passover lamb of Israel never atoned for the sins of the people, then how do we make the connection of atonement with the death of Jesus?

We cannot make such a connection between atonement for sin and the Passover regardless that the writers of the New Testament ascribe such a concept to his death as if Isaiah had taught the same thing. Isaiah did not and you are seeing that for yourself! If you have studied with us for a while you have seen for yourself that the original followers and apostles of Jesus had little if anything to do with the writings of the Gospels. Their names were "officially" attached to the anonymous writings by the Church in the fourth century. The first "quote" that names a Gospel by name is found not earlier than 200 A.D.

Answer for yourself: How can that be? Again it is simple. The names of the apostles were later attached to these documents which can easily be shown to have been written by non-Jewish writers much later than supposed by the Church.

Only if you already accept the New Testament teachings, and the corrupted Old Testament passages in your Christian translations, and only if you have been brainwashed since childhood to believe such "things" about Jesus can you accept the current theology of Jesus and his connection to Isa. 53. Any truthful analysis of the Jewish Scriptures and the Jewish Bible (the Old Testament Massoretic text) will reveal that such beliefs about Jesus are misplaced at best. In order to believe that Jesus' death had a non-visible, spiritual significance, you must use your Christian translation and "read into the passage" what you have been conditioned to believe from false preaching since you were a child. Only then can you approach your corrupted Christian Old Testaments and the corruped book of Isaiah within it and say: "see - the Prophet predicted what I already believe." Isaiah 53, in the Christian Bible then, is in reality no "proof" at all, but rather a set-up intended to deceive the reader. It works well because I fell prey to such beliefs unitl I began a serious study of the manuscript evidences that make up our Bibles. I found it by accident. But God's leading is no accident. The real test comes in the courage necessary to teach the truth once you find it. Isaiah 53 in the Christian's Bible is little more (in selected places) than a contrived confirmation for someone who has already chosen Christianity and accepted what they have only heard over and over which they never checked out for themselves to see if "these things be so." I have and they are not what they appear in the Christian's Isaiah in is Bible.

WHY WAS THE MESSIAH'S DEATH - AS ATONEMENT OF SIN - NOT KNOWN BY THE JEWS WHO FOLLOWED JESUS?

Consistent with all Jewish teaching at the time, Yeshua's own Jewish disciples didn't view Isaiah 53 as a messianic prophecy. "Not so" you say. Well, it is quite understandable that the followers of Jesus were well versed with their own Jewish Scriptures. Just a cursory study of the manners and customs of the Jewish people reveal that at 5 year old the Jewish child had his first book of the Bible memorized (Leviticus). I said "memorized." To think that the Jewish people would not be conversant with their own Prophets is absolutely ludicrous. But that is what the New Testament writers would have us believe. What comes next might shock you so you may need to set down.

For example, after Peter identifies Jesus as the Messiah (Matt. 16:16), he is informed that Jesus will be killed (Matt. 16:21). His response is not "thank God…for we are dead in trespasses and sins and without your sacrifice for our sins we are lost." No not at all. He says rather remarkably: "God forbid it, lord! This shall never happen to you" (Matt. 16:22). This passage is very alarming and very telling in its scope.

Answer for yourself: Why was this idea of a dying Messiah of such news to Peter? It sure seems to be!

Answer for yourself: Had he forgotten the message of Isaiah 53 which every child knew, or is our Christian concept of a suffering servant being "Jesus," which we have been fed all our lives, really not contained in Isaiah 53?

Mark 9:31-32

- 31 For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.
- 32 But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you find it rather hard to believe that in the first century, with Messianic fervor raging everywhere, that the followers of a presumed Messiah would not understand their own Scriptures, especially those referring to the Messiah who would be killed and resurrected?

Answer for yourself: How could the followers of a presumed Messiah have overlooked something as important in their Scriptures as the death of the coming Messiah?

Mark 16:10-11

- 10 And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.
- 11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you find it rather hard to believe that in the first century, with Messianic fervor raging everywhere, that the followers of a presumed Messiah (remember they had already called him the "Christ") would have expressed non-belief at the report of Yeshua's resurrection if they had believed, according to their

Scriptures, that the Messiah was to die according to the Prophets and be resurrected in the first place?

John 20:9

9 For as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Do you find it rather hard to believe that in the first century, with Messianic fervor raging everywhere, that the followers of a presumed Messiah would not know their own scriptures? The reason they did not is again simple; such a Scripture in the Jewish Bible does not exist!

Answer for yourself: If it was common knowledge that Isaiah 53 had spoken of a Messiah who was to die for the sins of people as their atonement, then why was this news to Peter and why would he try and prevent such a wonderful thing?

Answer for yourself: Could it be that they did not hold the same beliefs about Isaiah 53 as we have attributed to them as Christians?

Answer for yourself: Do you want to know why they didn't hold the same beliefs about Isaiah 53 as we were taught, and could they have been correct and us wrong [especially in light that I have shown you how our translations of Isa. 53 have been forged on purpose and added to on purpose to create an artificial theology about Jesus]?

EVEN JESUS DIDN'T KNOW OF A DYING MESSIAH EITHER!

Even Jesus didn't see Isaiah 53 as crucial to his messianic claims.

Answer for yourself: Why did Jesus request that God "remove this cup from me" (Mk. 14:36) - didn't he know that a "removal of the cup" [escape an atoning death long awaited for by Israel and the world] would violate the future Christian-Gentile understanding of Isaiah 53?

Answer for yourself: Even if we accept the gentile Christian interpretation of Isaiah 53, where is it indicated (either in Isaiah 53 or anywhere else in our Jewish Scriptures) that you must believe in this "Messiah" to be "saved" or be in right-standing with God His Father? It is nowhere to be found!,

CONTEXT OF ISAIAH 40-66 EXAMINED...BACK TO THE TEXTS

Since any portion of Scripture is only understood properly when viewed in the context of God's revelation as a whole, some additional study will be helpful before you "tackle" Isaiah 53.

Look at the setting in which Isaiah 53 occurs. Earlier on in Isaiah, God had predicted exile and calamity for the nation and the Jewish people. Chapter 53, however, occurs in the midst of Isaiah's "Messages of Consolation", which tell of the restoration of the nation of Israel to a position of prominence and a vindication of their status as God's chosen people. In chapter 52, for example, the nation of Israel is described as "oppressed without cause" (v.4) and "taken away" (v.5), yet God promises a brighter future ahead, one in which the nation of Israel will again prosper and be redeemed in the sight of all the nations (v.1-3, 8-12).

Chapter 54 further elaborates upon the redemption which awaits the nation of Israel. Following immediately after chapter 53's promise of a reward for God's servant in return for all of its suffering (53:10-12), chapter 54 describes an unequivocally joyous fate for the Jewish people. Speaking clearly of the Jewish people and their exalted status (even according to all Christian commentaries), chapter 54 ends as follows: "`This is the heritage of the servants of the L-rd and their vindication is from Me,' declares the L-rd."

What I hope you noticed is that previously to Isaiah 53 [Isaiah 52], and afterward [Isaiah 54], the subject of the discourse is still the "people of Israel;" the "nation of Israel" and not an individual. What I hope you also noticed is that following chapter 53 Isaiah is still speaking of the "people" of Israel and not an individual. The context and subject of Isaiah 53 is the same as it has been since Isaiah 40… namely; the corporate nation and the people of Israel. The subject is "plural" and not singular! What throws a lot of people off is that from chapter 40 onward the writer used both "singular" and "plural" pronouns to refer to the "plural" nation of Israel, and used them interchangeably. If one misses this use of pronouns in relationship to the subject of Isaiah 40-66, then his whole interpretation of Isaiah, let alone Isaiah 53, will be in error! If one is not familiar with the subject and context of Isaiah 40 through 66, it is easy to see a passage where a singular pronoun ("he" for example) is used and mistakenly think that the author is speaking of only one person, when previously he has set a precedent of referring to the nation in the singular by describing them as a "he". This is where most make their mistakes in interpreting Isaiah 53.

ISAIAH'S SERVANT - LOOKING AT THE EVIDENCE THAT IT IS THE NATION AND NOT A PERSON

In the original Hebrew texts, there are no chapter divisions, and Jew and Christian alike agree that chapter 53 is actually a continuation of the prophecy which begins at 52:13. Accordingly, our analysis must begin at that verse.

52:13 "Behold, My servant will prosper." Israel in the singular (notice that the nation is referred to in the "singular") is called God's servant throughout Isaiah (the nation "plural" is called the "singular" servant), both explicitly (Isa. 41:8-9; 44:1-2; 45:4; 48:20; 49:3) and implicitly (Isa. 42:19-20; 43:10) - the Messiah is not.

Isa 41:8-9

- 8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend.
- 9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away. (KJV)

Isa 44:1-2

- 1 Yet now hear, O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:
- 2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, Jesurun, whom I have chosen. (KJV)

Isa 45:4

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me. (KJV)

Isa 48:20

20 Go ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, The LORD hath redeemed his servant Jacob. (KJV)

Isa 49:3

3 And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Can you see for yourself that in every instance the "servant" (used in the singular) refers to the corporate nation of Israel numbering millions and does not pertain to just one person (Jesus)?

Isa 42:19-20

19 Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant?

20 Seeing many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Understanding the traditional teaching of Christianity considering Jesus as the Suffering Servant, are you about to say that the above passage from Isaiah 42:19-20 referring to a non-hearing, non-observing, and non-obedient Servant refers to Jesus?

Isa 43:10

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Can you see for yourself from the Isa. 43:10 passage that the plural "witnesses" (referring to the nation of Israel, in the plural) is referred to in the singular as "my servant" as before?

Without a doubt the "servant" (used in the singular) refers to the corporate nation of Israel numbering millions, and it is this same meaning which should be rendered when reading Isaiah 53!

Other references to Israel as God's servant include Jer. 30:10 (note that in Jer. 30:17, the servant Israel is regarded by the nations as an outcast, forsaken by God, as in Isa. 53:4); Jer. 46:27-28; Ps. 136:22; Lk. 1:54.

Jer 30:10

10 Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. (KJV)

Jer 46:27-28

- 27 But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid.
- 28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the LORD: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee: but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished. (KJV)

Ps 136:22

22 Even an heritage unto Israel his servant: for his mercy endureth for ever. (KJV)

Luke 1:54

54 He hath helped his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy; (KJV)

Answer for yourself: Also, given the Christian view that Jesus is God as well as the Suffering Servant, in Jeremiah 30:10 is God saving Himself?

Answer for yourself: Understanding the traditional Christian teaching that Jesus never sinned, well then if we are to believe that God's Servant is Jesus, then why is Jeremiah 46:27-28 speaking of him being punished?

Answer for yourself: Did you notice that even the New Testament refers to the nation of Israel as the Servant?

READING YOUR THEOLOGY INTO THE VERSES, OR LETTING THE VERSES DETERMINE YOUR THEOLOGY? THE LATTER OR COURSE!

In any conversation there is always at least two parties. One is the speaker and the other the hearer. If we fail to understand who is actually speaking in Isaiah 52 then we will fail to interpret Isaiah 53 correctly. This is where most get it wrong from the get-go! Instead of Israel speaking it is the Gentile kings who are speaking and who are astonished at the errors of their perspective toward the Jewish people when corrected in the Messianic Age…the Gentiles admit their anti-Semitism and theologies have been wrong!

Isaiah 52:15 - 53:1 "So shall he (the servant) startle many nations, the kings will stand speechless; For that which had not been told them they shall see and that which they had not heard shall they ponder. 'Who would believe what we have heard?'" History is full of examples where the Gentile Church thought they were doing God a favor by persecuting the Jewish people. Boy, will they be surprised!

Quite clearly, right here in the beginning of this discourse the speaker is identified. It is none other than the Gentile nations and their rulers and kings which will be amazed at what happens to the "servant of the L-rd" (the Jewish people), and they will say "who would believe what we have heard? " It is right here that most position themselves to incorrectly interpret Isaiah 53 but mis-identifying the speaker in these texts. The future meanings of these verses depend entirely upon who is speaking, and if this is not correctly discerned, then the misinterpretation of the Isaiah 53 passage is ensured. It makes a big difference whether the Gentiles are speaking about the Jewish people or the Jewish people speaking in these texts. But in order to correctly interpret Isaiah 53 we have to go backward into Isaiah 52 to determine who is speaking, for the same speaker will be speaking in Isaiah 53 as well.

Besides Isaiah 52:15 telling us explicitly that it is the nations of the world, the gentiles, who are doing the talking in Isaiah 53, but Micah 7:12-17 is a parallel passage and likewise speaks of the gentile nations' astonishment when the Jewish people again blossom in the Messianic age.

Micah 7:12-17

- 12 In that day also he shall come even to thee from Assyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortress even to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain.
- 13 Notwithstanding the land shall be desolate because of them that dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings.
- 14 Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood, in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old.
- 15 According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I shew unto him marvellous things.
- 16 The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.
- 17 They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the LORD our God, and shall fear because of thee. (KJV)

Now back to Isaiah as we exegete the verses:

53:1 "And to whom has the arm of the L-rd been revealed?"

In Isaiah, and throughout our Scriptures, God's "arm" refers to the physical redemption of the Jewish people from the oppression of other gentile nations (Isa. 52:8-12; Isa. 63:12; Deut. 4:34; Deut. 7:19; Ps. 44:3).

Let us look at examples to see if the arm of the lord refers to salvation from Gentile persecutors:

Isa 52:8-12

- 8 Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the LORD shall bring again Zion.
- 9 Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the LORD hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem.
- 10 The LORD hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.
- 11 Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the LORD.
- 12 For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the LORD will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rereward. (KJV)

Isa 63:12

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name? (KJV)

Deut 4:34

34 Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the LORD your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? (KJV)

Deut 7:19

19 The great temptations which thine eyes saw, and the signs, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the stretched out arm, whereby the LORD thy God brought thee out: so shall the LORD thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid. (KJV)

As you can see for yourself, in each of the above quotes the reference concerns Israel being delivered either from Egypt who persecuted them unto death, or the return from captivity in Gentile lands. Definitely, and without a doubt, the references to the "arm of the Lord" have to do with the nation of Israel being delivered and saved from the grasp of Gentile nations [and not one person].

WAS YESHUA DESPISED AND REJECTED OF MEN?

53:3 "Despised and rejected of men."

While this is clearly applicable to the Jewish people and the nation of Israel (Isa. 60:15; Ps. 44:13-14), it cannot be reconciled with the New Testament account of Jesus, a man who was supposedly

"praised by all" (Lk. 4:14-15)

Isa 60:15

15 Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. (KJV)

Ps 44:13-14

- 13 Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbors, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.
- 14 Thou makest us a byword among the heathen, a shaking of the head among the people. (KJV)

Matt 4:25

25 And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judaea, and from beyond Jordan. (KJV) who would later acclaim him as a prophet upon his triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:9-11).

Matt 21:9-11

- 9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest.
- 10 And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?
- 11 And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. (KJV)
- Even as he was taken to be crucified, a multitude bemoaned his fate (Lk. 23:27).

Luke 23:27

27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him. (KJV)

Jesus had to be taken by stealth, as the rulers feared "a riot of the people" (Mk. 14:1-2).

Mark 14:1-2

- 1 After two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.
- 2 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people. (KJV)

Such was his popularity.

ISRAEL'S ADVERSARIES ARE FREQUENTLY LIKENED TO SICKNESSES

53:3 "A man [speaking in context of the nation of Israel] of pains and acquainted with disease."

Let us examine passages like Isa. 1:5-6; Jer. 10:19; Jer 30:12.

Isa 1:5-6

- 5 Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more: the whole head [nation] is sick, and the whole heart faint.
- 6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment. (KJV)

Jer 10:19

19 Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it. (KJV)

Jer 30:12

12 For thus saith the LORD, Thy [the nation] bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous. (KJV)

ISRAEL AS BEARING THE BRUNT OF THE GENTILE NATION'S HATRED AND MALICE TOWARD THEM

53:4 "Surely our (remember the Gentile rulers of the nations are speaking) diseases he (the nation of Israel was described in the singular remember?) carried and our pains he (the nation of Israel) bore."

In Matt. 8:17, this passage from Isaiah 53:4 is recorded as being ”fulfilled” in Yeshua's healing of the sick, yet this Matthew passage is totally foreign to the original author’s intention.

Answer for yourself: Was it really fulfilled by Jesus?

This is another blatant misquotation of a Jewish Scripture taken out of context and twisted to bring a different meaning in the New Testament which was totally foreign to the original writer. Where as Isaiah was referring to the nation of Israel being the recipient of Gentile anti-Semitism for centuries whereby the nation of Israel carried the insults and physical pain of Gentile persecution (“surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows”- bearing the Gentile diseases, afflictions, suffering), we are led to believe in this supposed “fulfillment” in the New Testament that the meaning of Isaiah was that Jesus was to “carry the diseases of the people who physically healed.” Nothing could be farther from the mind of Isaiah. Instead of Isaiah’s original meaning of Israel being brutalized by the Gentile nations and powers of the world, the quote from Isaiah I stripped from its original context, the meaning twisted, and now in the New Testament it is supposed to mean Israel is blessing others through physical healing. This is absurd. But if you don't look up the quote yourself, read the context from where the quote is taken for yourself, you like I are relegated to reading the New Testament and accepting at face value everything it says without questioning anything. Such is foolish as we are showing you. This is absolutely no “fulfillment” of anything in Matthew 8:17. Saying so does not make it happen. Biblical ignorance is our enemy! You must face the fact that Matthew 8:17 is totally inconsistent with the text from Isaiah.

Not only did the writer take the quote out of context his uses of it in the New Testament, but to apply this verse of Isaiah to Jesus is impossible as we have already shown that the servant is the nation and not an individual!

ISRAEL'S PLIGHT IS MISUNDERSTOOD AND MISJUDGED IN THE EYES OF THE GENTILE NATIONS

- 53:4 "Yet we ourselves (remember the gentile nations are speaking) esteemed him stricken, smitten of G-D and afflicted."

- Jer. 30:17 - of God's servant Israel (30:10), it is said by the nations, "It is Zion; no one cares for her."

ISRAEL WOUNDED BY THE SINS OF THE GENTILE NATIONS...NOT FOR THEM AS SOME TYPE OF GENTILE ATONEMENT

53:5 "But he was wounded from (NOTE: not for) our transgressions, he was crushed from (AGAIN: not for) our iniquities."

Whereas the Gentile nations had thought the Servant (Israel) was undergoing Divine retribution for its sins at their hands (53:4) [they were helping God out by punishing the Jews], the Gentile nations now realize that the Servant's (Israel's) sufferings stemmed from their own (Gentiles) actions and sinfulness. This theme is further developed throughout the Jewish Scriptures such as Jer. 50:7; Jer. 10:25.

Jer 50:7

7 All that found them have devoured them: and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the LORD, the habitation of justice, even the LORD, the hope of their fathers. (KJV)

Jer 10:25

25 Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate. (KJV)

Also we must notice that the Messiah "shall not fail nor be crushed till he has set the right in the earth" (Isa. 42:4).

ISRAEL'S VOICE IS NOT HEARD...NO ONE TO TAKE UP FOR HER

53:7 "He was oppressed and he was afflicted, yet he did not open his mouth. Like a lamb that is led to slaughter, and like a sheep that is silent before its shearers, so he did not open his mouth."

It is important to note that in the prior chapter (Isa. 52), Israel is said to have been oppressed and taken away without cause (52:4-5). A similar theme is developed in Psalm 44, wherein King David speaks of Israel's faithfulness even in the face of gentile oppression (44:17- 18) and describes Israel as "sheep to be slaughtered" in the midst of the unfaithful gentile nations (44:22,11).

Regarding the claim that Jesus "did not open his mouth" when faced with oppression and affliction we have a different testimony from Jn. 18:23, 36-37.

John 18:23

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me? (KJV)

John 18:36-37

- 36 Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.
- 37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. (KJV)

These are not the only references, but this proves the point. I think you will have a hard time proving that Jesus “opened not his mouth” to his accusers and that he was “silent before his shearers.”

Again in the hands of the New Testament writers reference is made to this being fulfilled in the ministry of Jesus, but let me remind you that originally the quote was used in a corporate or national sense and not an individual sense.

WAS YESHUA EVER RECOGNIZED AS A RULER?

53:8 "From dominion and judgement he was taken away."

We must take note of the correct translation of the Hebrew in this passage. Without a doubt Israel is the apple of God’s eye. It is to them God called to be a Kingdom of Priests, a holy nation, to lead all other nations to God. Israel has always had preeminence. From this exalted status and position they were repeated taken into captivity and subjugated to Gentile cruelty and debasement. Instead of being the ruler and example (the scepter shall not depart from Judah), the nation of Israel became ruled and dominated by those to whom they were sent.

Most Christians writers are forced to mistranslate this verse, since - by Yeshua's own testimony - he never had any rights to rulership or judgement, at least not on the "first coming."

John 18:36

36 Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence. (KJV)

The King James version of the Bible states in Isaiah 53:8 that “he was taken from prison.” There is no record of Yeshua ever “doing time” in prison to the best of our knowledge.

"FIGURATIVE" OR A "LITERAL" DEATH?

- 53:8 "He was cut off out of the land of the living."
- 53:9 "His grave was assigned with wicked men."

Ez. 37:11-14 describes Israel being "cut off" and God promises to open its "graves" and bring Israel back into its own land. Other examples of figurative deaths include Ex. 10:17; 2 Sam. 9:8; 2 Sam. 16:9.

CONFIRMATION OF PLURALITY AND NOT SINGULARITY

53:8 "From my peoples' sins (remember the Gentile nations are speaking), there was injury to them (the Jewish people)."

Here the Prophet makes absolutely clear, to anyone familiar with Biblical Hebrew, that the oppressed Servant is a collective Servant, not a single individual. The Hebrew word "lamoh", when used in our Scriptures, always means "to them" never "to him" and may be found, for example, in Psalm 99:7 - "They kept his testimonies, and the statute that He gave to them."

"ONE" DEATH OR "MANY" DEATHS?

53:9 "And with the rich in his deaths."

Perhaps King James should have changed the original Hebrew, which again makes clear that we are dealing with a collective Servant, i.e., Israel, which will "come to life" when the exile ends (Ez. 37:14).

Ezek 37:14

14 And shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the LORD have spoken it, and performed it, saith the LORD. (KJV)

NON-VIOLENCE AT THE HANDS OF THEIR PERSECUTORS?

53:9 "He had done no violence."

One need only look at Matt. 21:12; Mk. 11:15-16; Lk. 19:45; Lk. 19:27; Matt. 10:34 and Lk. 12:51; then judge for themselves whether this passage is truly consistent with the New Testament account of Yeshua.

Matt 21:12

12 And Yeshua went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves, (KJV)

Mark 11:15-16

15 And they come to Jerusalem: and Yeshua went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple. (KJV)

Luke 19:45

45 And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought; (KJV)

Luke 19:27

27 But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me. (KJV)

Matt 10:34

34 Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. (KJV)

Luke 12:51

51 Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division: (KJV)

This certainly does not lend well to pacifism.

WHERE ARE YESHUA'S PHYSICAL CHILDREN?

53:10 "He shall see his seed."

The Hebrew word for "seed", used in this verse, always refers to physical descendants in the Jewish Scriptures. (Gen. 12:7; Gen. 15:13; Gen. 46:6; Ex. 28:43). A different word, generally translated as "sons", is used to refer to spiritual descendants (Deut. 14:1, e.g.). The New Testament paints a picture of Yeshua as unmarried. This is rather surprising since Christianity teaches that Yeshua never sinned, forgetting that the first positive commandment is to procreate. For Yeshua not to be married and have children literally would be a violation of the Law, and I John 3:4 tells us that transgression of the Law is sin.

DID YESHUA LIVE A LONG LIFE?

53:10 "He will prolong his days."

Answer for yourself: Not only did Yeshua die young and childless, but how could the days be prolonged of someone who is alleged to be God?

CAUSE OTHERS TO BE JUST OR JUSTIFY THE UN-GODLY?

53:11 "With his knowledge the righteous one, my Servant, will cause many to be just."

Please notice again the correct translation: the Servant will cause many to be just, he will not "justify the many."

The Jewish mission is to serve as a "light to the nations" which will ultimately lead the world to a knowledge of the one true God, this both by example (Deut. 4:5-8; Zech. 8:23) and by instructing the nations in God's Law (Isa. 2:3-4; Micah 4:2-3).

Deut 4:5-8

- 5 Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.
- 6 Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.
- 7 For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?
- 8 And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? (KJV)

Zech 8:23

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you. (KJV)

Isa 2:3-4

- 3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

- 4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. (KJV)

Micah 4:2-3

- 2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.
- 3 And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. (KJV)

As you can see, we Gentiles are not "just" by something Israel does in our place; rather, we are just because we learn from them the principles, ordinances, and laws of God contained in God's Torah, which when obeyed and kept, makes one righteous before God. God's ways are enumerated in His Law: 248 positive commandments, and 365 negative commandments. Each individual Law is a part of a Covenant foundation; whether it be the laws pertaining to the Covenant of God with the Jews or the non-Jews of the world. Each of these laws are Covenant stipulations whereby when obeyed we maintain right-standing before God.

HOW CAN GOD GIVE HIMSELF ANYTHING...HE HAS IT ALL!

53:12 "Therefore, I will divide a portion to him with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the mighty."

Answer for yourself: If Yeshua is God according to traditional Christian teaching, does the idea of reward have any meaning?

Answer for yourself: Is it not rather the Jewish people - who righteously bore the sins of the world and yet remained faithful to God (Ps. 44) - who will be rewarded, and this in is described more fully in Isaiah chapters 52 and 54?

THE ONLY CONCLUSION WE CAN RIGHTFULLY DRAW FROM TRUTHFUL EXAMINATION OF THE TEXTS IS THAT THE IDENTITY OF THE "SERVANT" IN THE PROPHET'S FOURTH SERVANT SONG, ISAIAH 53, MUST BE THE NATION OF ISRAEL AND NOT ONE INDIVIDUAL...NOT YESHUA BY HIMSELF...AND YESHUA IS NOT THE FULFILLMENT OF ISAIAH 53

DID THE JEWS ALWAYS INTERPRET ISAIAH'S SUFFERING SERVANT OF CHAPS. 52 & 53 AS THE NATION....OR DID RASHI CHANGE THE INTERPRETATION AS CHRISTIANITY MAINTAINS?

Jews for Jesus publish in their literature that Rashi, a Jewish Rabbi around 1000 A.D., is responsible for the altering of the interpretation of Isaiah 53 for all of Israel whereby they, after his influence, no longer interpreted Isaiah 53 as an "individual" but as a "nation."

Answer for yourself: Is such a statement made by Jews for Jesus accurate?

The following is from Contra Celsum 1:55 …from around 248 C.E./A.D. [long before Rashi] by the early Church Father Origen:

"Now I remember that, on one occasion, at a disputation held with certain Jews, who were reckoned wise men, I quoted these prophecies (Isaiah 52:13-53:8); to which my Jewish opponent replied, that these predictions [referring to Isaiah 52 and 53] bore reference to the whole people, regarded as one individual, and as being in a state of dispersion and suffering, in order that many proselytes might be gained, on account of the dispersion of the Jews among numerous heathen nations. And in this way he explained the words, "Thy form shall be of no reputation among men;" and then, "They to whom no message was sent respecting him shall see;" and the expression, "A man under suffering." Many arguments were employed on that occasion during the discussion to prove that these predictions regarding one particular person were not rightly applied by them to the whole nation. And I asked to what character the expression would be appropriate, "This man bears our sins, and suffers pain on our behalf;" and this, "But He was wounded for our sins, and bruised for our iniquities;" and to whom the expression properly belonged, "By His stripes were we healed." For it is manifest that it is they who had been sinners, and had been healed by the Saviour's sufferings (whether belonging to the Jewish nation or converts from the Gentiles), who use such language in the writings of the prophet who foresaw these events, and who, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, applied these words to a person. But we seemed to press them hardest with the expression, "Because of the iniquities of My people was He led away unto death." For if the people, according to them, are the subject of the prophecy, how is the man said to be led away to death because of the iniquities of the people of God, unless he be a different person from that people of God? And who is this person save Jesus Christ, by whose stripes they who believe on Him are healed, when "He had spoiled the principalities and powers (that were over us), and had made a show of them openly on His cross?" At another time we may explain the several parts of the prophecy, leaving none of them unexamined. But these matters have been treated at greater length, necessarily as I think, on account of the language of the Jew, as quoted in the work of Celsus." Now if you read this close you see two opinions concerning the interpretation of the text:

- the Jewish and
- the Gentile Church Fathers.

But without a doubt, the Jews, at this early date, believed that the Isaiah 52 and Isaiah 53 passages dealt with corporate Israel and not an individual and to say that Rashi changed the traditional interpretation of Isaiah 53 because of Jesus is a lie of the greatest magnitude and one made routinely by "Jews for Jesus".

This is all the more important because the Christians [Jews for Jesus] teach that the Jews interpreted Isa. 53 as referring to the Messiah (individual) until the medieval commentator Rashi who began to explain it as referring to the people of Israel, thus changing the prior interpretation that the passages referred to only an individual. Nothing could be further from the truth. The evidence speak for itself. So when Christians claim that it was only with the commentary of Rashi (1040-1105) that the Jews began to refer to Isaiah 52:13-53:12 as referring to the entire nation of Israel then they are in error and their message is false .

This misconception began with Edward Pusey, who wrote in his 1876 introduction to The Suffering Servant Of Isaiah According To Jewish Interpretations (trans. Driver and Neubauer, New York: Hermon Press, 1969) that "The new interpretation began with Rashi" (p. XLIV).

As you have seen the interpretation of corporate Israel for Isa. 52 and 53 is neither new, nor did it begin with Rashi. Over 800 years before Rashi the Church Father Origen records for us that the Jews contemporary with him interpreted this passage as referring to the entire nation of Israel.

This material can be found on the Internet or by obtaining Contra Celsum, trans. Henry Chadwick, Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, Book 1:55, 1965, p. 50).

So the bottom line is this: Jewish Biblical exegesis subscribing to the belief that the people of Israel was the suffering servant spoken of throughout the entire passage pre-dates Rashi by many centuries and Jews for Jesus, or anyone who says different is simply wrong.

Looking at this whole series of articles it now become painfully apparent for the Christian that in no way can Isaiah 53 be considered a prophecy of a later Jesus of Nazareth let alone a prophecy of the world's atonement accomplished by the death of one person.

GNOSTICISM AND THE MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD #2

WILL THE MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD BECOME THE PRIESTHOOD OF ISRAEL?

We have already learned a lot but there is more to come as we not get to where the rubber meets the road. We have to look at the Priesthood of Melchizedek and see if it was understood by normative Judaism and James and the Jerusalem Church to be the replacement for the Aaronic Priesthood.

Let us preface our study by remembering that the writer of the Book of Hebrews teaches that not only has the Mosaic Covenant been replaced with a "NEW" Covenant but that the Aaronic Priesthood had been replaced by the Melchizedek Priesthood. Added to this was the writer's belief that Yeshua was the heir apparent to this Melchizedek Priesthood owing to the fact that he was resurrected from the dead.

Answer for yourself: Is this the truth and can this be shown from the Hebrew Scriptures?

Psalm 110:4

4 The L-rd ["YHVH"] has sworn, and will not change His mind, "on my word, you are to serve for ever, my righteous king." [or, alternatively, "you are a priest for ever, in the manner of Melchizedek."]

As noted previously the passage in Psalm 110:4 is used as a 'proof text' by Christian missionaries to support the notion that Jesus will be both the king (Messiah) and a high priest, as Melchizedek was, with the Aaronic/Levitical priesthood supplanted by a new priesthood like that of Melchizedek. These claims are supported by passages such as Heb 7:21,

Heb 7:21 21 (For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek:) (KJV)

and,

Hebrews 7:3 (KJV) - Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.

Answer for yourself: What are we to believe? Has the Melchizedek Priesthood supplanted the Aaronic Priesthood and is Jesus our new Melchizedek Priest?

In order to arrive at truth we need to remember that, at the time of the crucifixion, the New Testament didn't exist – it was written over a period of a fair number of years and quite some time after the event. Much oral teaching was later written down and some of it accepted by the people of various theological persuasions. Over time some of this was written down and some even made its way later into what we call the New Testament. The Book of Hebrews was officially accepted into the Canon of the New Testament around 600 A.D. The Scripture in force at the time of the crucifixion was the Hebrew Bible and not the New Testament. We need to understand that much of the "later" theologies came into being because of the events surrounding and following the destruction of the Temple in 70 A.D. In other words, much of the theologies we as Christians accept today are "hindsight" after the fact. This as best is reverse prophecy! Prophecy predicted what was to happen; "Reverse prophecy" is the evaluation and attempted understanding of what has happened since what was expected was not fulfilled. This best describes the Book of Hebrews.

Instead of looking into "why" the Messianic Prophecies were not fulfilled and "why" the Temple was destroyed we find the writer of the Book of Hebrews reacting to what happened by trying to dissuade others from turning to Biblical Judaism in repentance following the judgment of God upon Israel and the apostate religious leaders. The problem we saw in a prior article was not with the "Sacrificial System" or the Temple but with those who represented God to the people and who had led the people astray. We are speaking of the apostate Sadducees which were little more than puppets of Rome. It was they that had allowed idolatry into the Temple along with sacrifices to Ceasar. This was outright idolatry and blasphemy. The people and the Pharisees strongly resisted this and religious movements were birthed to stop such apostasy such as the Zealots and the Scarii.

The author of Hebrews has taken some editorial liberties with things that he may have learned from reading the Hebrew Bible (or a Greek rendition of it). So, first we need to set the record straight on that score. Let's discuss Melchizedek. The Hebrew expression "malki-tzedek" (which means 'my king is righteousness/my righteous king') appears only twice in the Hebrew Bible - in Gen 14:18 and in Ps 110:4, Genesis 14:18 - And Melchizedek ["malki-tzedek"], king of Shalem, brought out bread and wine; and he is a priest of the most high God.

[There is also a related, but not identical, reference to an "adoni-zedek" (which means 'my lord is righteousness/my righteous lord') King of Jerusalem in Josh 10:1,3.] In Gen 14:18 the reference is to the King of Shalem (an earlier designation for the city of Jerusalem) in Abraham's days. Melchizedek was a Gentile priest-king who worshipped the 'One True God' as one of the righteous Gentiles who were unconnected with Israel (i.e., such as Noah, Jethro, and Job of Biblical times).

We saw previously that in Ps 110:4 the likely reference is to King David by the psalmist. King David's legendary power came through Divine favor earned through his righteousness. The English translation of the Hebrew term "koheyn" which appears in this verse as 'a priest' can be challenged on two grounds.

The Hebrew word for "koheyn" from Gen. 14:18 as found in the Strong's Concordance?

3548 kohen (ko-hane'); active participle of 3547; literally, one officiating, a priest; also (by courtesy) an acting priest (although a layman): KJV-- chief ruler, priest, prince, principal officer.

As we see from the earliest mention of the Hebrew word "koheyn" the meaning of the word is NOT limited to "priest" but comprises the meaning of a "chief ruler," "prince," and "principal officer." According to the "Law of First Mention" this first occurrence of the word "koheyn" sets the tone and example for all further meanings of the word. It also carries the meaning of "do the office " and these terms are non descript. Reference can be either a religious one or political one.

Let us not confuse the situation that existed before the Jewish nation with Melchizedek and after the Jewish nation was established and given the Sacrificial Laws concerning the Temple and the Priesthood following the Golden Calf [the Law that was added]. First, according to the Hebrew Bible, God clearly has a different plan for Israel – a separation between the functions ofpriesthood and monarchy; something like a separation of 'church' and 'state', if you will, as described in the Torah. We see this clearly when we read Deut. 17:14-20.

Deut 17:14-20 14 When thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me; 15 Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the LORD thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother. 16 But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the LORD hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way. 17 Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. 18 And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites [SEE THE SEPARATION BETWEEN THE OFFICE OF THE KING AND THE PRIEST]: 19 And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them: 20 That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel. (KJV)

The passage Deut 17:14-20 defines the selection, qualifications, and duties of the king – the political leader. And starting with the Davidic dynasty (II Sam 7:12-16), the king has to be from the Tribe of Judah and a biological descendant of King David through King Solomon.

The very next passage, Deut 18:1-8, describes the other category of leadership – the spiritual leaders, the Priests and Levites, who will all be from the Tribe of Levi..

Deut 18:1-11 1 The priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance. 2 Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren: the LORD is their inheritance, as he hath said unto them. 3 And this shall be the priest's due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep; and they shall give unto the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw. 4 The firstfruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the first of the fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give him. 5 For the LORD thy God hath chosen him out of all thy tribes, to stand to minister in the name of the LORD, him and his sons for ever [NOTICE THE AARONIC PRIESTHOOD IS TO LAST FOREVER]. 6 And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Israel, where he sojourned, and come with all the desire of his mind unto the place which the LORD shall choose; 7 Then he shall minister in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which stand there before the LORD. 8 They shall have like portions to eat, beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony. (KJV)

Answer for yourself: What can we conclude from this in addition to the listed qualifications? The two positions – king and priest – are mutually exclusive, i.e., a king may not be a priest, and vice versa and that the Levitical/Aaronic Priesthood is to last forever! It cannot be replaced or nullified not matter what the writer of the Book of Hebrews maintains!

Answer for yourself: How do we know that for sure? Take a look,

Leviticus 4:22-26 – (22) When a ruler [KING] has sinned, and done something through ignorance against any of the commandments of the L-rd his God concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty; (23) Or if his sin, where he has sinned, come to his knowledge; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish; (24) And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt offering before the L-rd; it is a sin offering. (25) And the priest [DIFFERENT OFFICE] shall take of the blood of the sin offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt offering. (26) And he shall burn all its fat upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace offerings; and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

This passage describes the King's sin-offering ritual. He must be as subservient as any commoner must be in the performance of the ritual –the priest must perform certain functions which the king may not perform (vs. 25-26). The Priest and King are NOT THE SAME PERSON OR HOLD THE SAME OFFICE!

Second, the term "koheyn" (plural, "kohanim"), in addition to having the meaning of ministering as a priest, also means to serve in an official ruling capacity, a context in which it is occasionally used in the Hebrew Bible (even as correctly understood and translated by the KJV!), e.g.,

- II Samuel 8:18 (KJV) - And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David's sons were chief rulers ["kohanim"].
- II Samuel 20:26 (KJV) - And Ira also the Jairite was a chief ruler ["koheyn"] about David.
- I Kings 4:5 (KJV) - And Azariah the son of Nathan was over the officers: and Zabud the son of Nathan was principal officer ["koheyn"], and the king's friend:

As shown before the term "koheyn" does not necessary have to mean priest as we might think. The Hebrew Bible records David and his sons performing certain priestly functions,

II Samuel 6:14,17 – (14) And David danced before the L-rd with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod. (17) And they brought in the ark of the L-rd, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it; and David offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the L-rd.

Here we find the King performing functions normally reserved for religious leaders and Priests.

This, too, will be the case with the King/Messiah of Israel in the messianic era,

Ezekiel 45:17 - And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt offerings, and meal offerings, and drink offerings, at the feasts, the new moons, and the Sabbaths, in all the appointed feasts of the house of Israel; he shall prepare the sin offering, and the meal offering, and the burnt offering, and the peace offerings, to atone for the house of Israel.

Ezekiel 46:12 - And when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt offering or peace offering to the L-rd, the gate facing east shall be opened for him, and he shall prepare his burnt offering and his peace offerings, as he did on the Sabbath day; then he shall go out; and after he goes out, the gate shall be closed.

The above passage does not mean the abolishment of the Aaronic Priesthood in the Messianic era any more than the Davidic passages meant the abolishment of the Levitical/Aaronic Priesthood in his day. All is said is that the King will in a symbolic way function in like capacity as the Priests.

So the status of David is defined in Ps 110:4, which also confirms that the distinctive monarchy of David would be continued in his successors.. In addition to his regal dignity, he would also perform certain priestly functions, albeit not of the same standing as Aaron and his male descendants. Just as Melchizedek was not consecrated into the priesthood (Gen 14:18), King David was not; but he ruled his people in the light of God's will and, as such, symbolically functioned as a priest-king. That was the ideal for the Davidic dynasty - A JEWISH KING SHOULD BE SYMBOLICALLY LIKE A PRIEST, drawing the Jewish people closer to serving God...BUT David was not a REPLACEMENT for the Priesthood nor did he render it obsolete or annul it!

According to the teachings of the Hebrew Bible, the possibility of a valid priestly order outside of the Aaronic/Levitical priesthood is not recognized within Judaism. Any priesthood that predated Levi was outside of Judaism, not within it.

The Levitical priesthood has been established for eternity in spite of what the Gnostic writer of the Book of Hebrews has to say or the publishers of Christian Bibles who insert italicized words into their translations in order to foster such concepts!

Exodus 40:15 - And you shall anoint them [Aaron's sons], as you did anoint their father, that they may minister to Me in the Priest's Office; for their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood throughout their generations.

Numbers 25:12-13 – (12) Therefore say, "Behold, I give to him My covenant of peace; (13) And he shall have it, and his seed after him, the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the people of Israel.

Consequently, the references in the Letter to the Hebrews to a Jesus being a priest of the order of Melchizedek are irrelevant to Psalm 110 - the two are in entirely different contexts.

There is one additional point that needs to be made regarding the claim that the Melchizedek priesthood is superior to the Aaronic/Levitical priesthood of Israel because Melchizedek conferred a blessing on Abraham and, thereby, he also blessed Levi, one of Abraham's great-grandsons. This is a flawed argument. Though it is Melchizedek who is being acknowledged as a priest/king of the "…Most High God" (Gen 14:18), it was ABRAM who "…gave him a tenth of all" (Gen 14:22). The salient point here is that this was done prior to ABRAM's name being changed to ABRAHAM and his formal entry into Hebrew Monotheism (i.e., Judaism) through the covenant of circumcision Gen 17:5-14. In other words, ABRAM was still a Gentile at the time he received that blessing and, therefore, it cannot be claimed that Melchizedek's priesthood is superior to Aaron's.

This presentation has demonstrated that Christian claims about Psalm 110, a central 'showpiece' in their 'proof text' collection are based on mistranslations and false assumptions.

Though there are several different interpretations of Psalm 110 by the Jewish sages, they are all consistent with the teachings of the Hebrew Bible. On the other hand, the common Christian interpretation of this Psalm, with its Christological implications, falls apart under careful scrutiny. Not only can Jesus not be the one sitting to the right of God, his supposed priesthood in the order of Melchizedek is a self-defeating line of reasoning, since Melchizedek was a Gentile priest, not a Jewish priest. If Jesus is claimed to have been a Jew, he cannot be a priest in an order that is outside of Judaism, since the Aaronic/Levitical priesthood was established exclusively and eternally for Israel. If he is claimed to not be a Jew, then he cannot be king of Israel according to Torah. Once once begins a serious study of Gnosticism then it becomes readily evident the "stars wars" theology of Gnosticism and their Cosmic Redeemer cannot be the Jewish Messiah let alone Yeshua.

Answer for yourself: Now, having seen what the Hebrew has to say does it seem possible that the writer of the Book of Hebrew understood or accepted his own Hebrew Scriptures or had a working knowledge of the Priesthood and the Torah? It sure seems not to me. This philosophy or theology in the Book of Hebrews is definitely not Jewish but has more in common with Gnosticism and Essenism; two movements that had in that day rejected Biblical Judaism and has begun their own unique understanding of their faith that supplanted and replaced Biblical faith.

In the above passage we see and remember that the priesthood of Melchizedek predated the Levitical Priesthood. But more than that in the mind of the writer of the Book of Hebrews the priesthood according to the Order of Melchizedek was the replacement for the Aaronic Priesthood. We just saw that it cannot be regardless of what the writer of the Book of Hebrews has to say. We need not forget as we study that the Levitical Priesthood was created for a specific time period (Eternal) and a specific nation of people. The Priesthood of Melchizedek was, in the mind of the writer of the Book of Hebrews not only a replacement for the Aaronic Priesthood but was understood by him that it was now effective forever and for all mankind (Jew and Gentile). This shows a total disregard for the Hebrew language, the Hebrew Scriptures, the Torah, and Moses and God who gave these Revelations in the first place!

Answer for yourself: As if that is not enough where do we find explicitly in the Torah or Moses, like we did the instruction concerning the Aaronic Priesthood, any comprehensive teaching concerning this supposedly new Melchizedek Priesthood? We don't.

To the writer of the Book of Hebrews, himself a Gnostic, the Levitical law was weak and unprofitable and has been made redundant by a new hope. That was the fruit of his apostasy. Again we need to see that such concepts are reflective not of Mosaic faith nor of any movement within first century Judaism. This rather reveals Gnosticism for its rejection of the Covenant, the Law, the existing Priesthood, and any attempt to correct and redeem this creation by obeying the Torah. Escape from the flesh and this world was the the way of the Gnostic through "secret knowledge" only which they possessed. THIS REPLACEMENT THEOLOGY IN THE BOOK OF HEBREWS SHOWS A TOTAL DISREGARD FOR THE AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, THE TORAH, BIBLICAL FAITH, THE TEMPLE, AND THE DYNAMIC OF THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM WHICH ARE MANIFESTATIONS OF GOD'S WORD! The theology of the writer of the Book of Hebrews shows one not possessing or having an understanding of how the Sacrificial System worked along with a total nullification and denial of any efficacy of repentance, prayer, confession, restitution, alms, etc. These spiritual dynamics was thought unproductive by the Gnostics in that this was, according to them, an attempt to redeem the physical (world, man) and the flesh, which according to them was unredeemable. Conduct was not important; only attainment of the spiritual knowledge to traverse the spiritual highway after death and only they could dispense that "secret knowledge" for salvation. Of course this nullifies the Hebrew concept of Holiness and Righteousness. Many, but not all Gnostics were often very liberal in their physical pursuits and sexual habits for the reasons mentioned. The Levitical law and Sacrificial System, in that it was only a picture of the resultant condition of the repentant sinner, could not redeem anyone; only reflect the spiritual condition of the sacrificer. The Levitical Law and Sacrificial System was only a picture of the repentant sinner once he was brought back into fellowship with the Father as pictured by his blood/life/soul being placed on the altar through the animal representative in Temple where God had promised to meet and commune with man. Understanding that this provided only a "picture" of the spiritual condition of the repentant then we now understand that the Priesthood might pass away but would never be replaced but will be reestablished with the rebuilding of the Temple. Another way of thinking of this picture was the soul/soul transfer which ended up upon the altar where man, in the picture of the blood/soul/life of the animal was on the altar where God rested. It was the final testimony following repentance that "all is well with my soul." This the writer of the Book of Hebrews no longer accepted.

SO THE WRITER OF THE BOOK OF HEBREWS SAYS WE ARE UNDER A NEW COVENANT....ARE WE?

God's intent is to call all to Him people of all nations [Jews and Gentiles] and bring them together as one, grafting them into the family of God through respective Covenants. As stated previously the Covenant of Noah is the foundation upon which the Covenant of Moses is built. You might say the Covenant of Moses absorbed the Covenant of Noah. Jeremiah 31 speaks of God renewing His Covenant with His people and writing these Covenant stipulations, requirements, and laws upon the hearts of His people. We find that this same Covenant [combination of Noah and Moses] was later brought to the Gentile nations due to the movement that began in Judaism by Yeshua's followers after his death. We find that specifically that the Covenant of Noah was taken to the Gentile nations in Acts 15 and 16.

And if some of the branches were broken off, and you [non-Jews], being a wild olive tree, were grafted in among them, and with them became a partaker of the root and fatness of the olive tree, -- Romans 11:17

This New [Re-Newed] Covenant has been made with "Israel" [request our Covenant series of articles and the article on the Re-Newed Covenant].

Now the writer of the Book of Hebrews records for us in chapter 8:8-11:

Because finding fault with them, He says: "Behold, the days are coming, says the LORD, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they did not continue in My covenant, and I disregarded them, says the LORD.

For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, says the LORD: I will put My laws in their mind and write them on their hearts; [remember the original Old Covenant was founded upon obedience originally] and I will be their God, and they shall be My people. None of them shall teach his neighbor, and none his brother, saying, 'Know the LORD,' for all shall know Me, from the least of them to the greatest of them.

We already address how the "them" of verse 8 referred to the apostate Sadducee Priesthood and Chief Priest of the First Century. The writer of the Book of Hebrews makes us think that he is quoting accurately Jeremiah 31:31-32 but he is NOT! He is lying again! Let me show by looking at the Hebrew of Jer. 31:31-32 and comparing it with the supposed quote from Heb. 8:8-11.

Let us look at the Hebrew of Jer. 31:31-32

31 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; 32 not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; forasmuch as they broke My covenant, although I was a lord over them, saith the LORD.

The KJV renders it this way:

Jer 31:31-32 31 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: 32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD: (KJV)

We need to look at the Hebrew word translated by the Tanakh as "lord" and the KJV as "husband."

The Strong's Greek/Hebrew Dictionary tell us the word is:

1166 ba` al (baw-al'); a primitive root; to be master; hence, (as denominative from 1167) to marry: KJV-- have dominion (over), be husband, marry (-ried, X wife).

Answer for yourself: Did we see that the writer of the Book of Hebrews quotes the verse and tells his readers that Jeremiah says that "and I disregarded them [the Jews], says the LORD" but when we looked at the words from the Hebrew did you see that God is saying something quite the opposite; God is saying that "although I was a lord over them" or "an husband unto them"?

Answer for yourself: Does it not seem to you that the writer of the Book of Hebrew is DELIBERATELY MISQUOTING JEREMIAH and trying to push his Replacement Theology down the throats of his readers who lacked the ability to read Hebrew and would never spot the changes?

Now let us focus on what Jeremiah says. God desires to write His Laws and Commandments on our hearts and not just books. The writer of the Book of Hebrews tells us that God is doing away with His Covenant of Laws and Commandments and beginning something "NEW" because He "disregards" Israel. Without some foresight and inquisitiveness then we might never know that the writer of the Book of Hebrews is lying to us.

Answer for yourself: How are we taught that we can know God? By knowing and obeying the Laws of God; these same Laws that the Gnostics like the author of the Book of Hebrew sought to do away with and institute a new way to God.

1 John 2:3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

Answer for yourself: Does this sound like we are under grace and not under the Law (Commandments)? Does this sound like a "NEW" Covenant to you? Does this sound like a "REPLACED" Covenant that the writer of Hebrews tries to make his readers believe?

Answer for yourself: Does this sound like we need a new Priesthood that nullifies the need for repentance, prayer, confession, and a return to the obedience of the Commandments of God which, after we do, then we attain right standing with God and then able to bring the life/blood of an animal and place it on the altar as a current picture of ourselves and our spiritual attainment following such repentance and our renewed right standing with God? It sure does not to me. What we have here in the Book of Hebrews is out and out Gnosticism. Jesus was not a Gnostic! Jesus was a righteous Jew that understood his own Sacrificial System and never believed in any form of vicarious atonement which would be attributed to him after he was dead by Hellenized Essenes and the Gentiles which these apostate and Hellenized Essenes influenced. Jesus knew what Christians do not; namely, that such false atonements come from the Gentiles and their sun worship and their sun-gods and sun-godmen.

Answer for yourself: Do you see the connection between knowing God and keeping/obeying His commandments today in the New Testament is just like in the Old Covenant which was founded upon obedience to God's Laws and Commandments [and not the sacrificial laws and commandments and the blood of animals which never could take away sin]? Now understanding somewhat the sacrificial system it was the repentance, confession, remorse, prayer, restitution, giving of alms, etc., that attained atonement BEFORE an animal was chosen and its blood put on the altar as only a picture of the life/soul of the person bringing the sacrifice which had PREVIOUSLY done these spiritual dynamics.

For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their lawless deeds I will remember no more." -- Hebrews 8:8-12

WHO ARE ISRAEL AND JUDAH? WHERE DOES THE NON-JEW FIT?

But it is not that the word of God has taken no effect. For they are not all Israel who are of Israel, nor are they all children because they are the seed of Abraham; but, "In Isaac your seed shall be called." That is, those who are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted as the seed. -- Romans 9:6-8

To God an Israelite is more than a nationality. All who come to God are heirs of Abraham and are partakers of the same Covenant that Abraham shared....being a non-Jew he understood and accepted the Covenant of Noah which was given to all the Gentile nations long before Moses. This Noahide Covenant is conditional. Now please don't confuse this Conditional Covenant of Laws and Ordinances with the Unconditional Covenant later made with Abraham that promises him and his seed the land (The Abrahamic Covenant).

We, as Gentile believers become heirs because of the fact that when we come to God we accept our Covenant with God and its Covenant stipulations which are Laws and Commandments which frame our requirements before our King/God. When we accept our spiritual state described below and repent and ask for forgiveness and accept God's gracious gift to us then we are reconciled with God and are "spiritually" grafted into the people of God [Israel], and are reborn into the family of God. Without this our lot as non-Jews is not good:

that at that time you were without Christ [the ministry of Yeshua's apostles that took the non-Jew the Covenant of Noah and the Laws of Noah whereby they could be accepted with God], being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. But now in Christ Jesus [because of the death of Jesus which caused a mission to you carrying the opportunity of Eternal Life], you who once were far off have been brought near by the blood of Christ [by the death of Yeshua and the outreach that it produced]. For he Himself is our peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the middle wall of separation, -- Ephesians 2:12-14

Answer for yourself: How were Jews and Gentiles made one? Simply in that circumcision was no longer enforced of the Gentiles for inclusion into the Israel of God by Yeshua's followers and the Gentiles were taught the Laws of Noah which were already part of the Laws of Moses. In this way the Gentile and Jew had common requirements to avoid idolatry and blasphemy and since the obstacle of circumcision was removed then they was nothing preventing the Jew and Gentile from accepting one another and being one. The only thing lacking was "food" issues and we deal with that in the "Anitoch Series" [request].

Acts 15:19-21 19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: 20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. 21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath day. (KJV)

Here we find the repentance of the Jews toward their handling of the non-Jews and the teaching of them the Laws and Commandments of the Covenant and Laws of Noah for Eternal Life. It was in this way the Gentile learns of God's way of forgiveness through his repentance, confession, prayer, restitution, alms. etc.

DID THE JERUSALEM CHURCH AND THE APOSTLES BELIEVE JESUS AS ASSUMED THE NEW MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD?

We need look at Acts 21 for our answer. In the time period of Acts 21 the Temple was still standing, sacrifices were daily being offered, and the Priesthood was still functioning.

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that in Acts 21 James, the leader of the assembly in Jerusalem commanded Paul to submit to a Nazarite vow and that this entailed blood sacrifices and atonement offerings ministered by the Levitical/Aaronic Priesthood? If not then you need to look into this Nazarite vow and Numbers chapter 6 to see for yourself what it entails. What you will see is that sin offerings and atonement offerings were commanded in such a vow and this was commanded by James and submitted to by Paul.

Answer for yourself: From such actions does it look as if after Pentecost and after Jesus' death that James and the Jerusalem Church thought that Jesus has assumed the Melchizedek Priesthood and that the Levitical and Aaronic Priesthood had been made obsolete?

The Essenes had refused to participate in the Temple offerings but the Jerusalem Church, James, and the Apostles did not refuse to participate in blood sacrifices following the death of Jesus.

Answer for yourself: Does this continual participation in the Temple and Sacrificial System by the Jerusalem Church and the Apostles seem to indicate that the Jerusalem Church did not hold or agree with the theology espoused by the writer of the Book of Hebrews which maintained that the existing Mosaic Covenant had been replaced by Jesus with a "NEW REPLACED COVENANT," that the existing Levitical/Aaronic Priesthood had been replaced with the resurrection of Jesus, or that the Laws of God had been nullified by Jesus' death and resurrection (as believed by them)? It sure seems that way to me!

Answer for yourself: Does this new information we have learned expose the writer of the Book of Hebrews as a fraud and make the Book of Hebrew rather silly in light that the Jerusalem church never believed this brand of Gnosticism that the Book of Hebrews promotes in substituting a "NEW" covenant and a "NEW" Melchizedek Priesthood when the Jerusalem Church never accepted it?

Answer for yourself: When we look at Acts 21 we see the Apostles and the men Jesus put in charge of his movement and to whom he gave the Great Commission yielding to a vow and blood sacrifices and sin offerings and atonement offerings in the Temple which were ministered 30 years after Jesus' death by the existing Aaronic Priesthood. Do these actions indicate that James, Yeshua's brother to whom he appeared following his resurrection and to whom Jesus put in charge of his church, believed that a "New Priesthood" achieved by Jesus, his brother, had replaced the Aaronic Priesthood? No way.

Answer for yourself: Do we see any indication that James or even Paul for that matter believed that a "new" Melchizedek Priesthood had supplanted the Aaronic Priesthood following Jesus' death? Their actions sure don't seem to indicate it!

Heb 10:29 29 Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? (KJV)

- Answer for yourself: Don't you think that the Apostles, supposedly full of the Holy Spirit after Pentecost, would have known that such actions of yielding to the Aaronic Priesthood, Temple sacrifices, sin offerings, and atonement offerings following Jesus' death, would have amounted, according to the Gnostic writer of the Book of Hebrews, as "counting the blood of the covenant wherewith he (Jesus) was sanctified unholy"? Yet they still did it. It would seem to any thinking believer that they did not share in the beliefs of the writer of the Book of Hebrews.
- Answer for yourself: Was the Jerusalem Church then not afraid of punishment? Had they purposefully trodden under foot the Son of God and his blood and didn't care? Did they buy into any of what the writer of the Book of Hebrews has to say or did they know it was all rubbish from an apocalyptic and Gnostic sect of Jews that had gotten "off base"?

- Answer for yourself: Had somebody failed to tell them in that this Aaronic Priesthood had been replaced by a "new Melchizedek" Priesthood? Did Jesus forget to tell them this major development during his time with them following his resurrection?
- Answer for yourself: Had Jesus failed to tell them during the 40 days he spent with them after his resurrection that the Aaronic Priesthood had been replaced with the "NEW" Jesus/Melchizedek Priesthood, that the Temple and the Sacrificial System had become nullified, that the Eternal Covenant and Eternal Priesthood had all of a sudden become "NOT" Eternal any longer?
- Answer for yourself: Did Jesus forget to tell them that the "God that changes not"... had changed?
- Answer for yourself: Was the Jerusalem church and Jesus' hand-picked Pastor not up for the job?
- Answer for yourself: Does this indicate Jesus was incompetent and put the wrong men at the head of his movement destined to go into all the world?
- Answer for yourself: How could the Jerusalem Church and Apostles get something as important as teaching the correct Covenant messed up and yet be post-Pentecost-Spirit filled believers?
- Answer for yourself: How could the post-Pentecost Church fail to know Jesus has begun a NEW Priesthood let alone continue to observe and participate in an incorrect atonement and not know that it had ceased?
- Answer for yourself: Had the the Jerusalem Church failed to learn these important things from a resurrected Christ?
- Answer for yourself: Or was some other sect spreading their Gnostic religious beliefs and attaching them to Jesus and distributing them among Hellenized Jews and Gentiles who knew not the first thing about the historical Jesus or Biblical Judaism?

It does not take a rocket scientist to figure this out. The writer of the Book of Hebrew is not an Apostle but one who espouses Gnostic thought and religious beliefs; one who hates the Law and the Covenant that it represents.

So it should be clear that the Jerusalem Church did not replace their Covenant or their Priesthood following the death and resurrection of Jesus. Nor did they teach a "new Melchizedek" Priesthood to the Gentiles as seen in Acts 15 where the Laws and Covenant of Noah was affirmed and letters sent signifying this decision to all of Asia minor to strengthen the churches. Again we see no change; the Jerusalem Church believed in and taught the Covenant of Noah to the Gentiles and let me remind you that these Laws and Commandments of Noah were the foundation for the subsequent Laws and Covenant of Moses.

Adherence to these Laws of Noah and the Covenant of Noah by the Gentiles through the ministry of Jesus' Apostles allowed the Gentiles to be "spiritually grafted" into the Israel of God. These believing Gentiles who had repented and placed their faith in the God of Israel had become one with the nation with Israel and heirs according to the promises made to Abraham. The expansion of Israel (or the extension of the family of God) was prophesied in Isaiah,

"Thus saith the LORD, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil. Neither let the son of the stranger (we Gentiles), that hath joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying, The LORD hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree. For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs (Gentiles) that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant; Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters (better than the Jews): I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off. Also the sons of the stranger (Gentile), that join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." Isa 56:1-7 (KJV)

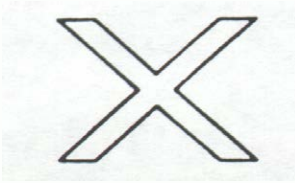
Answer for yourself: Did you notice that their sacrifices will be accepted in God's House/Temple? Yet the writer of the Book of Hebrews would have us believe that this Temple was obsolete and completely misjudges and misunderstands the Sacrificial System.

Answer for yourself: Can you show me just one time where the writer of the Book of Isaiah refers to a "new Melchizedek" Priesthood or a "New Replacement Covenant" that will do away with the Covenant of Noah or the Covenant of Moses? NO!

The Almighty God has renewed His covenant with this new Israel [Gentiles and Jews] to call to Himself a new and holy nation of kings and priests.

Now pay attention. We saw that David was not of the Tribe of Levi but of the Tribe of Judah. But yet functioned as a "Priest." There is a lot about Jesus we don't need to believe because much about him taught in the New Testament is out and out error and lies due to Replacement Theology. But we must at the same time be fair. When all the dust clears Yeshua has been used by God to function as the Gentile's Priest in the same manner and example left to us by King David. This does not make Yeshua a "LITERAL PRIEST" but only in symbolism and in allegory. Although Yeshua is used by God to lead men to God this does not make a NEW Priesthood that supplants the Levitical/Aaronic Priesthood. The same could be said for many "avatars" sent by God such as Chrishna, Buddha, Mohammed, etc. A Priest leads men and women to God and in such a capacity Yeshua has been used by God to point many of the Gentile nations to Himself. This is to be understood as allegory ONLY!



"But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." 1 Pet 2:9-10 (KJV)

Let us finish our study in the third and concluding article

ST. ANDREW'S CROSS

St. Andrew's Cross resembles the letter "X" in the English alphabet and is also referred to as the "saltier" or "Crux Decussata." According to tradition Andrew, the brother of Peter, was crucified on a cross of this shape. Andrew did not feel worthy enough to die on the same style of cross that Christ had died and requested a cross of another shape. His request was granted and he was crucified upside down on a cross which now bears his name. Rather than using nails to secure his limbs to the cross, Andrew was bound to the cross with ropes. His suffering was thus prolonged.

St. Andrew's Cross came into wide use during the Medieval Period and became the national cross of Scotland, since St. Andrew was the patron saint of Scotland.

DEATH ON A CROSS...TRUTH...OR SUN-MYTH RETOLD?

EXAMPLES OF SAVIORS CRUCIFIED ON CROSSES FOR SALVATION

I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and him crucified, writes Paul in 1 Cor 2:2. The determination not to know anything but the crucifixion of Jesus Christ was narrowing down knowledge to rather a small compass. Evidently converts in Corinth were questioning, and Paul begins by establishing that questions are not allowed to Christians. Paul has to berate the wise and praise the foolish in this epistle. God chose the foolish things of the world not the wise. And so it has always remained —the most marvellous way of gulling the credulous. Anyway, already in the 50s of the first century some people were asking questions and one of the questions will have been whether Jesus was really crucified.

Irenaeus, one of the most frequently quoted Christian writers of the ancient bishops, declares upon the authority of the martyr Polycarp, who claimed to have got it from St John and all the elders of Asia, that Jesus Christ was not crucified, but lived to be about fifty years old. There must have been a large margin for distrusting the fact of the crucifixion.

Yet, if Jesus was a saviour, it is likely that he must have been crucified because other saviours of the same type were. Sacrilege! Paul's Christians, trained in foolishness, cry.

Jesus Christ was the only crucified saviour!

Sorry, many more saviours are suspected of crucifixion. Irenaeus might have felt it politic to deny it to distinguish the Christian saviour from the others!

Chrishna was depicted as if crucified. The Persian remembered only the atoning sufferings on the cross of Mithras the Mediator. Aztecs prayed for the return of their crucified saviour, Quexalcoatl, and were rewarded with Cortez. Caucasians chanted praises to their slain Divine Intercessor, Prometheus, for voluntarily offering himself upon the cross for the sins of a fallen race. Yet the Christian disciple hugs to his bosom the bloody cross of the murdered Jesus, confident that only one god ever died for the sins of man.

To retain their following, religions are based on unchangeable dogmas which disciples must accept to the exclusion of all knowledge adverse to their own creed. Whenever they are able they actually destroy contrary evidence for fear of rivalry. Then they magnify their own religion to a unique position above all others.

The earlier Christian saints, having determined like Paul, to know only Jesus Christ and him crucified, made stern efforts to obliterate from the page of history facts damaging to their case.

A report on the Hindu religion, made out by a deputation from the British Parliament, sent to India to examine their sacred books and monuments, was left in the hands of a Christian bishop at Calcutta, with instructions to forward it to England. On its arrival in London, it was so horribly mutilated as to be scarcely recognizable. The account of the crucifixion was gone. The inference is patent.

The disciples of the Christian faith have burnt books, blotted out passages and altered testaments which suggested the opposite of their belief. Not only that, they have demolished monuments showing crucifixions of previous atoning gods so that they are now unknown. Hence, the disbelief of Christians when other cases are mentioned.

Kersey Graves, in a well known book written over a century ago, gives examples of sixteen crucified gods or saviours. Most are very ancient and arguable, depending upon the interpretation of pictures or scriptures since no original written sources now exist, often victims of Christians determined to preserve the memory of only one crucified god.

For the same reasons the dates of their occurrence are doubtful and because chronology before the time of Alexander the Great (330 BC) is far from certain, and the dating of icons, especially from distant or isolated cultures is uncertain. Even mainstream studies of the ancient Near East are involved in controversy over dates, Peter James for example claiming in a well argued case that several centuries have been mistakenly inserted into near Eastern chronologies. It is certain these crucifixions occurred before the time of Christ, but their exact date cannot be fixed.

These crucifixions are not presented as actual occurrences. The objective is not to prove them real events but simply that the belief in the crucifixion of gods was prevalent long before the crucifixion of Christ. To establish this point then six will prove it as well as sixteen. Indeed, one case is sufficient. The reader is left to decide.

Tammuz of Mesopotamia 1160 BC.

Tammuz was a god of Assyria, Babylonia and Sumeria where he was known as Dumuzi. He is commemorated in the name of the month of June, Du'uzu, the fourth month of a year which begins at the spring equinox. The fullest history extant of this saviour is probably that of Ctesias (400 BC), author of Persika. The poet has perpetuated his memory in rhyme.

> Trust, ye saints, your Lord restored,
> Trust ye in your risen Lord;
> For the pains which Tammuz endured
> Our salvation have procured.

Tammuz was crucified as an atonement offering: Trust ye in God, for out of his loins salvation has come unto us. Julius Firmicus speaks of this God rising from the dead for the salvation of the world. This saviour which long preceded the advent of Christ, filled the same role in sacred history.

Wittoba of the Telingonesic 552 BC.

Wittoba is represented in his story with nail-holes in his hands and the soles of his feet. Nails, hammers and pincers are constantly seen represented on his crucifixes and are objects of adoration among his followers, just as the iron crown of Lombardy has within it a nail claimed to be of his true original cross, and is much admired and venerated for that reason. The worship of this crucified God prevails chiefly in the Travancore and other southern states of India in the region of Madura.

Iao of Nepal 622 BC.

Iao was crucified on a tree in Nepal. The name of this incarnate god and oriental saviour occurs frequently in the holy bibles and sacred books of other countries. Some suppose that Iao is the root of the name of the Jewish God, Yehouah (Jehovah), often abbreviated to Yeho.

Hesus of the Celtic Druids 834 BC.

The Celtic Druids depict their god Hesus as having been crucified with a lamb on one side and an elephant on the other, and that this occurred long before the Christian era.

The elephant, being the largest animal known, was chosen to represent the magnitude of the sins of the world, while the lamb, from its proverbial innocent nature, was chosen to represent the innocence of the victim, the god offered as a propitiatory sacrifice. We have the Lamb of God taking away the sins of the world. The Lamb of God could therefore have been borrowed from the Druids. This legend was found in Gaul long before Jesus Christ was known to history.

Quezalcoatl of Mexico 587 BC.

Historical authority of the crucifixion of this Mexican god is explicit, unequivocal and ineffaceable. The evidence is tangible, and indelibly engraven upon metal plates. One of these plates represents him as having been crucified on a mountain. Another represents him as having been crucified in the heavens, as St Justin tells us Christ was. Sometimes he is represented as having been nailed to a cross, sometimes with two thieves hanging with him, and sometimes as hanging with a cross in his hand.

Quirinius of Rome 506 BC.

The crucifixion of this Roman saviour is remarkable for the parallel features to that of the Judaean saviour, not only in the circumstances of his crucifixion, but also in much of his antecedent life.

He is represented, like Christ:

- As having been conceived and brought forth by a virgin.
- His life was sought by the reigning king, Amulius.
- He was of royal blood, his mother being of kingly descent.
- He was put to death by wicked hands or crucified.
- At his mortal exit the whole earth is said to have been enveloped in darkness, as in the case of Christ, Chrishna, and Prometheus.
- And finally he is resurrected, and ascends back to heaven.

Prometheus 547 B.C.

The crucifixion of Prometheus of Caucasus, described by Seneca, Hesiod, and other writers, states that he was nailed to an upright beam of timber, to which were affixed extended arms of wood, and that this cross was situated near the Caspian Straits. The modern story of this crucified God, which has him bound to a rock for thirty years, while vultures preyed upon his vitals, is a Christian fraud.

The poet, in portraying his propitiatory offering, says:

> Lo! streaming from the fatal tree
> His all atoning blood,
> Is this the Infinite?–Yes, 'tis he,
> Prometheus, and a god!
> Well might the sun in darkness hide,

> And veil his glories in,
> When God, the great Prometheus, died
> For man the creature's sin.

It is doubtful whether there is to be found in the whole range of Greek letters deeper pathos than that of the divine woe of the beneficent demigod Prometheus, crucified on his Scythian crags for his love to mortals. When he dies:

- That the whole frame of nature became convulsed.
- The earth shook, the rocks were rent, the graves were opened, and in a storm, which seemed to threaten the dissolution of the universe, the solemn scene forever closed, and Our Lord and saviour Prometheus gave up the ghost.

The cause for which he suffered was his love for the human race. The whole story of Prometheus' crucifixion, burial and resurrection was acted in pantomime in Athens five hundred years before Christ, which proves its great antiquity. Minutius Felix, one of the most popular Christian writers of the second century addresses the people of Rome:

> Your victorious trophies not only represent a simple cross, but a cross with a man on it, and this man St. Jerome calls a god.

These coincidences are more proof that the tradition of the crucifixion of gods has been very long prevalent among the heathen.

Thulis of Egypt 1700 BC.

Thulis of Egypt, whence comes Ultima Thule, died the death of the cross about thirty-five hundred years ago.

Ultima Thule was the island which marked the ultimate bounds of the extensive empire of this legitimate descendant of the gods.

This Egyptian saviour appears also to have been known as Zulis. His history is curiously illustrated in the sculptures, made seventeen hundred years BC of a small, retired chamber lying nearly over the western section of the temple. Twenty-eight lotus plants near his grave indicate the number of years he lived on the earth. After suffering a violent death, he was buried, but rose again, ascended into heaven, and there became the judge of the dead, or of souls in a future state. He came down from heaven to benefit mankind, and that he was said to be full of grace and truth.

Indra of Tibet 725 BC.

This Tibetan saviour is shown nailed to the cross. There are five wounds, representing the nail-holes and the piercing of the side. The antiquity of the story is beyond dispute.

Marvellous stories are told of the birth of the Divine Redeemer. His mother was a virgin of black complexion, and hence his complexion was of the ebony hue, as in the case of Christ and some other sin-atoning saviours. He descended from heaven on a mission of benevolence, and ascended back to the heavenly mansion after his crucifixion. He led a life of strict celibacy, which, he taught, was essential to true holiness. He inculcated great tenderness toward all living beings. He could walk upon the water or upon the air; he could foretell future events with great accuracy. He practised the most devout contemplation, severe discipline of the body and mind, and completely subdued his passions. He was worshiped as a god who had existed as a spirit from all eternity, and his followers were called Heavenly Teachers.

Alcestos of Euripides 600 BC.

A less usual crucified God was Alcestos, who was female, the only example of a feminine God atoning for the sins of the world upon the cross. The doctrine of the trinity and atoning offering for sin was inculcated as a part of her religion.

Attis of Phrygia 1170 BC.

Speaking of this crucified Messiah, the Anacalypsis informs us that several histories are given of him, but all concur in representing him as having been an atoning offering for sin. And the Latin phrase suspensus lingo, found in his history, indicates the manner of his death. He was suspended on a tree, crucified, buried and rose again.

Crite of Chaldaea 1200 BC.

The Chaldeans have noted in their sacred books the crucifixion of a god with the above name. He was also known as the Redeemer, and was styled the Ever Blessed Son of God, the saviour of the Race, the Atoning Offering for an Angry God. When he was offered up, both heaven and earth were shaken to their foundations.

Bali of Orissa 725 BC.

In Orissa, in Asia, they have the story of a crucified God, known by several names, including the above, all of which, we are told, signify Lord Second, his being the second person or second member of the trinity. Most of the crucified gods occupied that position in a trinity of gods, the Son, in all cases, being the atoning offering. This God Bali was also called Baliu, and sometimes Bel. Monuments of this crucified God, bearing great age, may be found amid the ruins of the magnificent city of Mahabalipore, partially buried amongst the figures of the temple.

Mithras of Persia 600 BC.

This Persian God was slain upon the cross to make atonement for mankind, and to take away the sins of the world. He was born on the twenty-fifth day of December, and crucified on a tree. Christian writers both speak of his being slain, and yet both omit to speak of the manner in which he was put to death. And the same policy has been pursued with respect to other crucified gods of the pagans, as we have shown.

Devatat of Siam, Ixion of Rome, Apollonius of Tyana in Cappadocia, are all reported to have died on the cross."

Ixion, 400 BC, was crucified on a wheel, the rim representing the world, and the spokes constituting the cross. He bore the burden of the world, the sins of the world, on his back while suspended on the cross. He was therefore called the crucified spirit of the world.

It is curious that Christian writers will recount a long list of miracles and remarkable incidents in the life of Apollonius of Tyana, the Cappadocian saviour, forming a parallel to those of the Christian saviour, yet say not a word about his crucifixion.

Christian writers find it necessary to omit the crucifixion of these saviours fearing the telling would lessen the spiritual force of the crucifixion of Christ, which has to be unique. They thus exalted the tradition of the crucifixion into the most important dogma of the Christian faith. Hence, their efforts to conceal from the public the fact that it is of pagan origin.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry says that Freemasons secretly taught the doctrine of the crucifixion, atonement and resurrection preceded the Christian era, and that similar doctrines were taught in all the ancient mysteries.

To those who say the ancient crucifixions of gods were mere myths or fables, having no foundation in fact, but added to their histories as mere romance, we reply that there is as much ground for suspecting the same thing as being true of Jesus Christ.

Many of the early Christians and contemporary Jews and Gentiles doubted it, and some openly disputed its ever having taken place. Others bestowed upon it a mere spiritual significance, and not a few considered it symbolical of a holy life. One circumstance, calculated to lead to the entire discredit of the story of the crucifixion of Christ, is the relation, in connection with it, of a violent convulsion of nature, and the resurrection of the long-buried saints, events not supported by any contemporaneous history, sacred or profane.

As these events must be set down as fabulous, they leave doubt about the crucifixion itself, especially when the many absurdities involved in the doctrine of the crucifixion are brought to view.

If the inhabitants of this planet required the murderous death of a god as an atonement, we must presume that all other inhabited worlds need a divine atonement. If there are millions of world inhabited by intelligent beings in the universe then they all need a saviour. Presumably there is only one Most High and it is he who has to be incarnated in each case. He begins to look a bit like a fetishist getting a kick out of slumming it in the worlds of the mortals. Or rather, it begins to make the whole concept look ludicrous.

The idea of gods coming down from heaven, being born of virgins and dying a violent death for the moral blunders of the people originated in an age of the world when mankind was savage and blood was the requisition for every offence. In those days no one had any idea of other possible worlds besides our own and the realms of the gods themselves. So the idea of the supreme god playing his tricks seemed reasonable. Today it does not to anyone with a remaining brain cell.

ORIGIN OF THE BELIEF OF THE CRUCIFIXION OF GODS

It has always been presumed that death, and especially death by crucifixion, involved the highest state of suffering possible to be endured by mortals. Hence, the gods must suffer in this way as an example of courage and fortitude which their followers must emulate. To do this they must be superior to their devotees. They must not merely die, but submit to the most ignominious mode of suffering death that could be devised—crucifixion. This gave the highest finishing touch to the drama.

And thus the legend of the crucifixion became the crowning chapter, the aggrandizing episode in the history of their lives. It was presumed that nothing less than a god could endure such excruciating tortures without complaining.

Hence, when the victim was reported to have submitted with such fortitude that no murmur was heard to issue from his lips, this circumstance of itself was deemed sufficient evidence of his godship. The story of the crucifixion, therefore, whether true or false, deified or helped deify many great men and exalt them to the rank of gods. Though some of the disciples of Buddhism, and some of the primitive professors of Christianity also (including, according to Christian history, Peter and his brother Andrew), voluntarily chose this mode of dying in imitation of their crucified Lord, without experiencing, however, the desired promotion to divine honours. They failed of an exaltation to the deityship, and hence are not now worshiped as gods.

The doctrine of salvation by crucifixion had, like most of the ancient forms of religious faith, an astronomical origin. People were saved by the sun's crucifixion or crossing over the equinoctial line into the season of spring, and thereby gave out a saving heat and light to the world and stimulated the generative organs of animal and vegetable life. The ancients would carve or paint organs of generation on the walls of their holy temples with this stimulation in mind. The blood of the grape, which was ripened by the heat of the sun, as he crossed over by resurrection into spring, i.e., was crucified, was symbolically the blood of the cross, or the blood of the Lamb.

Christian reader, what can you now make of the story of the crucifixion of Jesus Christ but a borrowed legend —at least the story of his being crucified as a god?

The Indian chief Red Jacket is reported to have replied to the Christian missionaries:

> Brethren, if you white men murdered the son of the Great Spirit, we Indians have nothing to do with it, and it is none of our affair. If he had come among us, we would not have killed him. We would have treated him well. You must make amends for that crime yourselves.

This view of the crucifixion, from the viewpoint of a people regarded as savage, is more sensible and rational than that of Christians, who make it meritorious and a moral necessity. If the act were a moral necessity then Judas as well as Jesus was a saviour, because without him in the Christian story the act which saved the world could not have happened. If it was necessary for Christ to suffer death upon the cross as an atonement for sin, then the act of crucifixion was right, and a monument should be erected to the memory of Judas for bringing it about. Only Christian logic can find a flaw in this argument. They say that even though it was God's fore-ordained plan, Judas could only have played his part because he was wicked! So the Christians finish up believing that the means justify the end, because their own Father would use a wicked man to achieve the salvation of the world. It is hardly any surprise that the Christian world remains so wicked despite being saved.

THE ESSENES....WHAT CAN WE KNOW FOR SURE?

With the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the relationship between Essenism and the religious doctrines taught in the New Testament has become a subject of consuming interest. The evidence now coming to light confirms what various scholars have long surmised: namely, that it is impossible to evaluate pristine Christianity correctly except through an understanding of the Essenes.

Old prejudices die hard; but since that day in 1947, when a Bedouin goatherd stumbled into a cave in which the Essenes had secreted their manuscripts just before they fled before the Roman armies in 68 or 69 A.D., it is scarcely possible any longer to deny their direct influence upon Christianity. A few cautious scholars have questioned whether the Covenanters who lived at the Qumran Monastery were actually those Essenes described by Pliny, Philo, and Josephus. Others have argued that the Scrolls are medieval forgeries" or were composed by Jewish Christians of the third or fourth century. Such arguments, of course, serve merely to accentuate the generic relationship between the Covenanters and the religious doctrines as taught in the New Testament which reveal a strong orientation to Essene religious faith; otherwise it would be impossible to maintain that documents unquestionably composed in the second or first century before Christ were composed by Christians several centuries later.

Space does not permit us to reproduce the archeological, paleographical, and other evidence which proves that the Dead Sea Scrolls were composed between 170 and 60 B.C.E. by a Jewish cult which flourished until 69 A.D. This material is carefully reviewed by Millar Burrows in his Dead Sea Scrolls. Professor W. F. Libby of the University of Chicago subjected a piece of linen wrapping which covered one of the MSS. to the Carbon-Process and found that its date of origin was approximately 33 A.D. Suffice it to say that today no competent scholar doubts that the latest possible date on which any of the Scrolls could have been copied was 68 A.D. This, of course, does not determine the date of composition, which could have occurred at any time during several preceding centuries and which must be determined from internal evidence.

There can be no dispute concerning the authenticity of the Scrolls, which, in addition to several previously unknown and complete documents, now translated and published, include two MSS. of Isaiah and literally thousands of fragments found in various caves. Among these are portions of practically every book of the Old Testament.

In addition to the Old Testament scriptures, the celibates of Qumran had a sacred literature of their own. Of documents previously known, fragments have been found of the Book of Enoch, The Book of the Jubilees, and The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. In addition, a complete manuscript of The Damascus Document was discovered. We know, therefore, that these writings, long known but never correctly evaluated, must be identified with the Dead Sea Covenanters. Finally, other complete works were also found; these have now been translated and they cast a brilliant light upon the cult: The Manual of Discipline, The Habakkuk Commentary, The War of the Sons of Light with the Sons of Darkness, and The Thanksgiving Psalms.

We agree with Mr. A. Dupont-Sommer that the Essenes and the Qumran Covenanters were most certainly one and the same. It is simply incredible that Khirbet-Qumran and its occupants could be anything other than the monastery and the cult described by Pliny, who wrote about 60 A.D.: "Lying on the west of Asphaltites [Dead Sea], and sufficiently distant to escape its noxious exhalations, are the Esseni, a people that live apart from the world, and marvellous beyond all others . . . for they have no women among them; to sexual desire they are strangers; money they have none.... Day after day, however, their numbers are fully recruited by multitudes of strangers that report to them, driven thither to adopt their usage by the tempests of fortune, and wearied with the miseries of life" (Nat. History, Bohn, I, 430-431).

Whether or not Pliny had seen the Qumran monastery, it is certain that his information was accurate: the ascetics who lived there were known to him as Essenes, and, since not the slightest vestige of any other remotely similar group has ever been discovered and since the words of Pliny are reinforced and elaborated not only by Philo and Josephus but also by the Dead Sea Scrolls, we must conclude that they and the Covenanters were identical. Essenes means "holy ones"; this was a nickname used only by outsiders, and never by the cultists themselves.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE ESSENES

We need to begin our study examining the practices of the Essene sect. This unique order existed for more than two centuries. Only their inner circle knew their esoteric doctrines. The organization consisted almost entirely of male celibates, of whom there were some four thousand. A small percentage of them lived in the Dead Sea Monastery; the remainder, residing in special communal houses scattered throughout Judaea, worked full time at some regular occupation, and were to be found in every walk of life; and so great were the compensations of membership that the Order flourished, even though unaugmented by the birth of children.

THE ESSENES OF JESUS' DAY WERE PYTHAGOREANS

The Essenes were in no wise mendicants, like the Buddhists; nor were they monks, except perhaps the specially selected brethren who lived at Khirbet-Qumran; in fact, there was apparently little external difference between them and other Jews. They did not renounce work; they simply rejected the individualism of the world, its acquisitive ways, the obligations of family and relatives, and the sensual appetites common to humanity.

We have already noted the statement of Josephus that the Essenes had adopted the Pythagorean way of life (Antiq. XV, x, 4). And indeed the parallels between the Essenes and the Pythagoreans were many and striking:

- Both were organized into celibate thiasoi, or communal communities
- Both rejected animal sacrifices
- Both practiced daily baptismal purification
- Both ate common sacramental meals
- Both rejected the use of oaths
- Both were organized on the basis of strict precedence and priority
- Both taught similar doctrines concerning atonement
- Both taught similar doctrines concerning predestination
- Both taught similar doctrines concerning redemption.
- Both taught similar doctrines concerning eschatology
- The leaders of both were regarded with such veneration that their names must not be uttered
- Both believed to have received revelations directly from God.
- Both required new members were required to undergo an initiation of several years
- Both required novices to sell all their possessions and place the money in escrow with the treasurer of the Order
- Both gave back to the novice the money if they were finally rejected, but if accepted it became a part of the communal treasury

The Essenes, however, never adopted the Pythagorean doctrine of metempsychosis (the transmigration of the soul): on this one point they remained closer to Zoroastrianism, which as we have seen, had already made deep penetration into Judaic thought. We may say that mature Essenism was seventy per cent Pythagorean, fifteen per cent Zoroastrian, and fifteen per cent Judaistic, which element, however, was pertinent only in relation to its external forms.

THE ESSENES' ANSWER TO THE SUFFERING OF THE RIGHTEOUS AND THE PROSPERITY OF THE WICKED

To their own satisfaction, the Essenes had delivered the definitive answer to the ethical problem of Job. No longer need the saints be perturbed over the misery of the righteous and the prosperity of the wicked, for now they had an eschatology which would right all wrongs in an everlasting existence after death. To achieve the bliss of heaven and escape the eternal torments of hell, God's Elect will love Him and do His will in the present life. To that end, they will combine into communal societies, where all will contribute according to their ability and receive according to their need; by achieving this perfect brotherhood now, the righteous are made fit for the apocalyptic kingdom of God on earth and for a blessed eternity thereafter in heaven.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE ESSENES

THE ZADOKITES AND THE CHASIDIM

During the period preceding the desecration of the Temple by Antiochus Epiphanes, apostasy to Hellenism had become rampant; and, to combat it, a group had arisen known as the Zadokites and later as the Chasidim (Hasidim, Assidaeans). Zadok had been the high priest in the time of David. We must realize that these patriots of 185- 160 B.C.E. underwent a complex evolution and division into parties during the ensuing decades. The old name continued as a badge of honor; and therefore we find both the Essenes and the antithetical Sadducees calling themselves the Sons of Zadok as late as 60 B.C.E.

The Sadducees were the nobles, the wealthy, the educated, who composed the dominant class. They rejected the Zoroastrian-Pythagorean eschatology, and were totally unaware of any social injustice.

THE THREE JEWISH PARTIES

During the early Maccabaean campaigns, the original Sons of Zodok, who were simply intensely Judaistic, split into two divisions:

- The Sadducees, or the political nationalists
- The Chasidim, or the religious enthusiasts
- The Pharisees, which would come from the fragmented Chasidim

We need to take time to look at these Chasidim for it would be them who would depart from normative Judaism and Jewish beliefs:

- The Chasidim absorbed the Zoroastrian eschatology
- The Chasidim remade the Jewish Messiah in the image of the Saoshyant
- The Chasidim engrafted the doctrines of hell, heaven, immortality, resurrection, and the last judgment upon the traditional Judaism
- It was a Chasid who wrote the last six chapters of Daniel, which became the model for Revelation.
- The older portions of The Book of Enoch were composed by Chasids, as were other documents ever after held sacred by the Essenes.

While discussing the reign of Jonathan, 160-143 B.C.E., who became also high priest in 152 B.C.E., Josephus declares that during this period (about 145 B.C.E.) the three great religious sects, which were really political parties, became established among the Jews. He declares that the Sadducees, like the Epicureans, denied the existence of providence and believed in free will; the Pharisees, like the Stoics, believed in determinism; but the Essenes, like the Pythagoreans, taught the doctrine of necessity or fate (Antiq., XIII, v, 9).

What happened was this: the Sadducees became more conservative economically and politically, but less religious; the Chasidim split into two divisions, the Pharisees and the Essenes. As the last two matured between 145 and 100 B.C.E., their divergence, in spite of their common Zoroastrianism, became wider and deeper. Whereas the Essenes more and more abandoned the temporal, the Pharisees, becoming worldly, sought power, wealth, and popular influence. The latter became the spokesmen for the people, and the former the depository of extreme religious fervor. The Pharisees envisioned a world in which the Jews would rule over a great empire to be established by their Messiah, the son of David; the Essenes considered themselves the Elect Ones of the Supreme God, chosen by Him to rule over an apocalyptic kingdom of saints to be inaugurated by the supernatural Angel-Messiah of Moral Judgment. The Pharisees accepted and developed the Temple worship, while the Essenes, rejecting the ritual of blood-sacrifice, established a severe and all-encompassing discipline based upon faith, sacraments, and holy works. While the Pharisees externalized religion into an elaborately formalized discipline, the Essenes made it a way of life, requiring profound moral regeneration intended to govern every overt act and secret thought. That many of these characteristics already existed by the time of John Hyrcanus in 134 B.C.E., we can scarcely doubt. Josephus declares that the "Pharisees have delivered to the people a great many observances . . . which are not written in the laws of Moses and" which "the Sadducees reject," who "are able to persuade none but the rich," while "the Pharisees have the multitude on their side" (Antiq., XIII, x, 6). Eventually, the latter elaborated thirty-nine classes of labor forbidden on the Sabbath, and made endless subdivisions under each. Various schools of religious persuasion and interpretation arose, which debated the finest points of interpretation. For example, a woman could untie certain knots on the Sabbath, but only if she could do it with one hand. A light might be extinguished to exorcise an evil spirit, but not for the sake of thrift. And so it went.

THE ESSENES BECOME PYTHAGOREANS

Shortly before the year 100 B.C.E., a revolutionary development took place among the Essenes. A great leader, called the Teacher of Righteousness, arose among the Essenes, who, perhaps, like Zoroaster and Pythagoras traveled abroad and absorbed the religions of Persia, Egypt, and Greece; certain it is that he mastered Pythagoreanism; upon the Zoroastrianized Judaism which already constituted Essene ideology, he engrafted the discipline and the mysteries of the Orphic---Pythagoreans. It is also certain that he claimed a divine power by which to interpret the prophets. It was this Teacher of Righteousness that also composed an additional revelation in the name of Enoch which we know today as the Book of Enoch; he wrote The Manual of Discipline; and that he interpreted various ancient prophecies as descriptions of current catastrophes. He transformed Essenism into a doctrine of social revolt, in which the possession of wealth or property became criminal per se. Under his leadership, the cult abandoned Judaism more than ever before and embraced much broader ideas concerning race and salvation: the Messiah, no longer a mere moral judge nor simply an avenger of the Jews, as in Daniel and Isaiah, became an international Saoshyant. In short, under the new dispensation, the Essenes were transformed substantially into Pythagoreans.

YET THE ESSENES MAINTAINED A CONNECTION WITH JUDAISM

The Essenes, however, even while abandoning Judaism in reality never surrendered the discipline of the Mosaic Law, for which they remained sticklers to the end. Nor did they surrender the Jewish scriptures, especially the prophets, for they saw in these fervent denunciators of wealth and idolatry their own true brethren and forerunners. Yet they would be responsible for the translation and alteration of the Jewish Scriptures into Greek in Alexandria, Egypt, whereby they would alter the texts to promote their sect's religious beliefs and gain authority for their movement over others. In order to establish their peculiar doctrine, they composed documents which they attributed to Enoch and the Patriarchs, men whose antiquity did, and whose authority might, exceed that credited to the Torah itself. In fact the Teacher of Righteousness attributed greater authority to his writings that to the writings of Moses. After adopting the eschatology of Zoroastrianism and the discipline and soteriology of the Pythagoreans, what remained of Judaism was a mere husk, as it were, to support the concepts derived from Persia, India, Greece, and Asia Minor. Thus was formed the great Jewish synthesis which was contemporaneous with Mithraism but which followed Pythagoras by four centuries.

EXCAVATIONS AT KHIRBET-QUMRAN

From February 9 to April 24, 1954, an expedition worked to uncover the ruins of Khirbet-Qumran, which include a principal building 111X90 feet and several smaller ones. From coins, pottery, and other evidence, found there, we know that the monastery was first used about 104 B.C.E.; and this original occupation continued to about 31 B.C.E., when the structure was seriously injured by an earthquake. It was then abandoned until 4 B.C.E., when the building was repaired and reoccupied as before, until 68-69 A.D., when it was gutted by fire. It was again used in 132-135 A.D. by Bar Cochba, and then abandoned forever to the shifting sands. We know, consequently, that Khirbet-Qumran was the headquarters of the Essenes from about 104-31 B.C.E. and from 4 B.C.E. to 68-69 A.D.

The construction of the building establishes that it was a community center; it contained a large upper room (see Mark 14:15) in which the eucharistic feasts were celebrated; it had a scriptorium, equipped with seats and benches, in which the scrolls were studied and copied; it had a commissary in which the common goods were stored; and just outside stood the cistern in which the daily baptismal baths were taken. It is obvious that the main building contained no living quarters; the residents, who may have numbered some two hundred at any given time, lived in caves or tents nearby. The cemetery, which lies to the east of the building, contains about two thousand graves, of which a small percentage have been excavated.

DIVISION WITHIN THE JEWISH SOCIETY

We know that John Hyrcanus, 134-104 B.C.E.—the first who assumed the triple crown of ruler, high priest, and prophets — carried out various military expeditions against his neighbors. The Hasmoneans, having achieved independence, immediately sought to establish a savage imperialism upon the Samarians, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and others. Nor were they content with tribute: they gave their neighbors the short shrift of accepting Judaism, being driven from their homes, or suffering death at the point of the sword (Antiq., XIII, ix-x). About 109 B.C.E., however, an event occurred which was fraught with fearful consequences for the Jewish nation: Hyrcanus went over to the Sadducees, and embarked upon a career of domestic persecution.

THE TEACHER OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

It was undoubtedly soon after this that the Essenes reorganized themselves into their thiasoi under their current Master of Justice or Teacher of Righteousness. Thereafter, the fierce struggles between the Pharisees and the Sadducees became a matter of indifference to the Essenes, who withdrew from all such conflicts among the Sons of Darkness and dedicated themselves to meditation concerning the impending apocalyptic catastrophe. Considering this momentary existence quite inconsequential, they gave formal allegiance to whatever civil power happened to exercise authority at the moment; but their esoteric religious documents and doctrines became profound secrets, to be shared only by their tried and trusted comrades.

Thus, under the leadership of their Master, the Essenes lived their submerged life for something like forty years preceding Pompey's capture of Jerusalem, which, at a single stroke, put an end to the Hasmonean dynasty and the political independence of the Jews.

Authentic history knows even less concerning the Teacher of Righteousness than it does of Jesus. And is this so strange? The Essenes were sworn to absolute secrecy. Since their doctrines were revolutionary, the publication of these would have brought rightful punishment upon them. Even as Pythagoras and his followers were ruthlessly slaughtered, so the Essenes had good reason to fear at all times bloody assault and general destruction. We can only say that the Teacher was venerated by the community, but that his identity was little known beyond its pale.

THE EXECUTION OF THE TEACHER OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

Nevertheless, in spite of their secrecy and their apparently innocuous activity, the Essenes must have incurred suspicion and enmity:

- They refused to take any oath
- They were pacifists
- Their holy days were different from those of the orthodox
- They ignored the Temple worship
- They rejected marriage which is the first commandment in the Torah
- They rejected private property

All this must have been generally known, even though their scriptures were effectively concealed. It is possible that Aristobulus II, the last Hasmonean king, had learned their secrets from spies planted within their ranks. At all events, it is certain that shortly before Pompey rent the veil of the Temple, the Teacher of Righteousness was arrested, tried, condemned to death, and executed. Some have surmised that this was the "Onias, a righteous man . . . and beloved of God," who was stoned to death by "wicked Jews," (Antiq., XIV, ii, 1), about 65 B.C.E. However, the evidence is too fragile to establish such a conclusion.

THE TEACHER OF RIGHTEOUSNESS BECOME THE EXPECTED MESSIAH OF THE ESSENES

Thereupon the conviction took hold upon his followers that the Teacher had risen from the dead, had ascended to heaven, and would shortly return as the all-powerful Son of Man, surrounded by myriads of angels; and that he would conduct the last judgment, establish the kingdom of heaven upon earth, and send all sinners—that is, all who love material things, indulge in marriage, and reject the communal life—to an eternal flaming hell. The Essenes expected this Angel-Messiah to be the reincarnation of their Teacher of Righteousness. The Teacher of Righteousness became thus, in his first appearance, a divine incarnation, who, in his second, was to be a reconstituted Danielic Son of Man who would also be the Messiah of Moral Judgment, actuated by Buddhist-Pythagorean ethical principles. Precisely when his Parousia was expected we cannot now declare with certainty; but we know that the delay was to be brief. Those who had seen his execution expected also to witness his return in glory.

Had the Hasmonean dynasty continued in power after the execution of the Teacher, the Essenes in general would probably have suffered a similar fate. But with the advent of Roman sovereignty in Jerusalem, such extirpation could no longer be carried out. The Essenes, therefore, more secretive than ever retired to their monastery and to their various thiasoi throughout the land, to practice their communal living, study their mysterious scriptures, and await their Messiah.

ABSENCE FROM THE MONASTERY

We have noted that the monastery at Khirbet-Qumran remained unoccupied after the earthquake of 31 B.C.E. until 4 B.C.E. What was the reason for this? We believe that a passage in Josephus supplies the key (Antiq., XV, x, 4-5). While Herod was very young, the Essene Manahem had prophesied that he would one day be king; and, therefore, "he continued to honor all the Essenes." Because of the constant conspiracies against him, Herod required oaths of allegiance. "The Essenes," however, "were excused from this imposition" (Ibid.). Many scholars believe that during the reign of Herod, they enjoyed such favor and immunity that they abandoned their headquarters in the desert.

THE ESSENE MESSIAH FAILS TO RETURN

By 25 A.D. the Essene Messiah was more than half a century overdue. Nevertheless, the air was electric with expectation. At this juncture, John the Baptist, believing himself the incarnate Elijah and the harbinger of the Messiah, appeared suddenly in the wilderness off the shore of Jordan in Judea declaring that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Whether he was an Essene who had left the Order or whether he was simply an individual prophet attempting to establish a cult of his own, we cannot now determine. Like Jesus, he despised and hated Pharisee and Sadducee alike, whom he characterized as "a generation of vipers" (Larson, The History of Christian Origins, p. 236).

We doubt that the careers of John or of Jesus himself provoked more than a passing ripple within the Essene community. Their Messiah had already completed his earthly career, and, even if his return was inexplicably delayed, there could certainly be no other. And so the Essenes gazed skyward and waited. Their dreams, however, were crushed in the general catastrophe which destroyed the Jewish state in 70 A.D. We know only that the Romans burned the Khirbet-Qumran monastery and we conclude that the Essenes were scattered to the winds.

DESCRIPTIONS OF THE ESSENES BY CONTEMPORARIES

PHILO JUDAEUS

It is indeed fortunate that we possess detailed descriptions of the Essenes from the pens of two great Jewish writers, Josephus and Philo Judaeus. The second of these was an Alexandrian, who made himself the master of Hellenic philosophy, especially that of Plato, Pythagoras, and the Stoics, and who had attempted a union of Greek metaphysics with Judaic theology. He it was who first gave the Logos doctrine, previously enunciated by Zeno, its final formulation. Since Philo was an earnest inquirer who lived a long life which ended about 40 A.D., he must have known intimately all the elements constituting Jewish life during the half century preceding his death. His testimony, therefore, must be accepted as authentic. We read that their leader had "trained to'' community of living many thousands of disciples, who are called Essens, because of their holiness.... They dwell in many cities of Judaea and many villages, and in large and populous societies.... And their mode of life is our evidence of their liberty; none ventures to acquire any private property at all, no house or slave, or farm cattle, or any of the other things which procure or minister to wealth; but they deposit them all in public together, and enjoy the benefit of all in common. And they dwell together in one place, forming clubs and messes in companies, and they pass their whole time in managing every kind of business in the public good. But different members have different occupations, to which they strenuously devote themselves, and toil on with unwearied patience, making no excuses of cold or heat or any change of weather. .

Of the men, then, who thus differ in occupations, every one on receiving his wages gives them to one person who is the appointed steward: and he, on receiving them, immediately purchases the necessary provisions, and supplies abundance of food and other things of which men's life is in need. And they who live together and share the same table are content with the same things every day, being lovers of frugality . . . Not only have they a common table, but also common raiment; for they are supplied in winter with thick coats, and in summer with cheap tunics, so that every one, who will, may easily take whichever he likes, since what belongs to one is considered to belong to all, and the property of all to be, on the other hand, the property of each one.

Moreover, if any of them should fall sick, he is medically treated out of the common resources. . . And so the old men if they happen to be childless, are wont to end their lives on a very happy and bright old age, inasmuch as they are blest with sons both many and good....

Further, then, as they saw with keen discernment the thing which alone, or most of all, was likely to dissolve their community, they repudiated marriage and also practiced continence in an eminent degree. For no Essene takes to himself a wife, because woman is immoderately selfish and jealous . . . For the man who is either ensnared by the charms of a wife, or induced by natural affection to make his children his first care, is no longer the same toward others, but has unconsciously become changed from a free man into a slave.

A second passage from Philo contains complementary information (A Treatise to Prove that Every Man Who Is Virtuous Is Also Free, XIII).

There are . . . Essenes, in number something more than four thousand . . . not sacrificing living animals but studying rather to preserve their minds in a state of holiness and purity. These men . . . not storing up treasures of silver and gold, nor acquiring vast sections of the earth out of a desire for ample revenues . . . are nevertheless accounted very rich, judging contentment and frugality to be great abundance, as in truth they are.

Among these men you will find no makers of arrows, or javelines, or swords, or helmets, or breastplates, or shields, no makers of arms or military engines; no one, in short, attending to any employment whatever connected with war, or even to any of those [ordinary] occupations even in peace which are easily perverted to wicked purposes; . . . they repudiate and keep aloof from everything which can possibly afford any inducement to covetousness; and there is not a single slave among them, but they are all free, aiding one another with a reciprocal interchange of good offices; and they condemn masters, not only as unjust, inasmuch as they corrupt the very principle of equality, but likewise as impious, because they destroy the ordinances of nature, which generated them all equally.

But in their view this natural relationship of all men to one another has been thrown into disorder by designing covetousness, continually wishing to surpass others in good fortune, and which has therefore engendered alienation instead of affection, and hatred instead of friendship; and leaving the logical part of philosophy . . . they devote all their attention to the moral part....

Now these laws they are taught at other times, indeed, but most especially on the seventh day, for the seventh day is accounted sacred, on which they abstain from all other employments . . . a great many precepts are delivered in enigmatical modes of expression, and allegorically....

In the first place, then, there is no one who has a home so adequately his own private property, that it does not in some sense also belong to every one: for besides that they all dwell together in companies, the house is open to all those of the same notions, who come to them from other quarters; . . . and they cherish respect for their elders, and honor them and care for then, just as parents are honored and cared for by their lawful children; being supported by them in all abundance both by their personal exertions, and by innumerable contrivances.

JOSEPHUS

We turn now to Josephus, who was born about 37 A.D. and died about 100 A.D. He was a general in the Jewish army of insurrection during 68-69 A.D., but earned the clemency and favor of the Romans after he decided the war was hopeless. In his Life, he tells us that at the age of sixteen he became an Essene neophyte and dwelt for three years in the wilderness with a teacher named Banus, who bathed constantly in cold water to curb his libido, who, like John the Baptist, lived on uncooked food that grew wild, and who wore only such clothing as could be procured from trees. We conclude that this discipline lost its attraction, because presently Josephus joined the Pharisees, "which is of kin to the sect of the Stoics" (Life, 2). Although he was never admitted to the inner circle of the Essenes, he certainly knew snore about them than any other extant witness; and he has left us several descriptions of them. In one passage he declares (Antiq., XVIII, 1, 3-6):

The doctrines of the Essens is this: That all things are best ascribed to God. They teach the immortality of souls, and esteem the rewards of righteousness are to be earnestly striven for; and when they send what they have dedicated to God into the temple, they do not offer sacrifices there, because they have more pure lustrations of their own; on which account they are excluded from the common court of the temple, but offer their sacrifices themselves; yet is their course of life better than that of other men; and they entirely addict themselves to husbandry. It also deserves our admiration, how much they exceed all other men that addict themselves to virtue.... This is demonstrated by that institution of theirs which will not suffer anything to hinder them from having all things in common, so that a rich man enjoys no more of his own wealth than he who bath nothing at all. There are about four thousand men that live in this way, and neither marry wives, nor are desirous to keep servants; as thinking the latter tempts men to be unjust, and the former gives the handle to domestic quarrels; but as they live by themselves, they minister to one another. They also appoint certain stewards to receive the incomes of their revenues, and of the fruits of the ground; such as are good men and priests, who are to get their corn and their food ready for them. They none of them differ from others of the Essens in their way of living.

We find that the Essenes, like the Buddhists and the Pythagoreans, sought personal freedom and independence by rejecting marriage, together with all family ties and responsibilities; and they mortified "the body of this death," by renouncing sex-consummation, which has appeared to ascetics of all ages as the ultimate triumph over our lower nature.

The following is our most detailed account (Wars of the Jews, II, viii, 2-13).

For there are three philosophical sects among the Jews . . . the third sect, which pretends to a severer discipline, are called Essens. These last are Jews by birth, and seem to have a greater affection for one another than the other sects have. These Essens reject pleasures as an evil, but esteem continence, and the conquest over our passions, to be virtue. They neglect wedlock, but choose out other persons' children while they are pliable, and form them according to their own manners....

These men are despisers of riches. . . Nor is there any one to be found among them who bath more than another; for it is a law among them that those who come to them must let what they have be common to the whole order, insomuch that among them all there is no appearance of poverty, or excess of riches, but every one's possessions are intermingled with every other's possession, and so there is, as it were, one patrimony among all the brethren....

They have no certain city, but many of them dwell in every city; and if any of their sect come from other places, what they have lies open to them, just as if it were their own, and they go into such as they never knew before, as if they had been ever so long acquainted with them. For which reason they carry nothing at all with them when they travel into remote parts, though still they take their weapons with them for fear of thieves. Accordingly, there is, in every city where they live, one appointed particularly to take care of strangers, and to provide garments and other necessaries for them.... Nor do they allow of the change of garments, or of shoes, till they be first entirely torn to pieces, or worn out by time. Nor do they either buy or sell anything to one another, but every one of them gives what he bath to him that wanteth it, and receives from him again in lieu of it what may be convenient for himself; and although there be no requital made, they are fully allowed to take what they want of whomsoever they please.

....every one of them are sent away by their curators to exercise some of those arts wherein they are skilled, in which they labor with great diligence till the fifth hour. After which they assemble themselves together again into one place, and when they have clothed themselves in white veils, they then bathe their bodies in cold water. And after this purification is over, they every one meet together in an apartment of their own, into which it is not permitted to any of another sect to enter; while they go, after a pure manner, into the dining room, as into a certain holy temple, and quietly set themselves down; upon which the baker lays them loaves in order; the cook also brings a single plate of one sort of food, and sets it before every one of them; but a priest says grace before meat, and it is unlawful for any one to taste of the food before grace be said. The same priest, when he bath dined, says grace again after meat, and when they begin, and when they end, they praise God, as he that bestows their food upon them: after which they lay aside their white garments, and betake themselves to their labours again till the evening....

And truly, as for other things, they do nothing but according to the injunctions of their curators; only these two things are done among them at every one's own free will, which are to assist those that want it and to show mercy; for they are permitted of their own accord to afford succour to such as deserve it, when they stand in need of it, and to bestow food on those that are in distress; but they cannot give anything to their kindred without the curators. They dispense their anger after a just manner, and restrain their passion. They are eminent for fidelity, and are the ministers of peace; whatsoever they say also is firmer than an oath; but swearing is avoided by them, and they esteem it worse than perjury; for they say that he who cannot be believed, without swearing by God, is already condemned. They also take great pains in studying the writings of the ancients, and choose out of them what is most for the advantage of their soul and body, and they inquire after such roots and medicinal stones as may cure their distempers.

But now, if any one bath a mind to come over to their sect, he is not immediately admitted, but he is prescribed the same method of living which they use for a year, while he continues excluded, and they give him also a small hatchet, and the forementioned girdle, and the white garment. And when he bath evidence, during that time, that he can observe their continence, he approaches nearer to their way of living, and is made a partaker of the waters of purification; yet is he not even now admitted to live with them; for after this demonstration of his fortitude, his temper is tried two more years, and if he appear to be worthy, they then admit him into their society. And before he is allowed to touch their common food, he is obliged to take tremendous oaths that, in the first place, he will exercise piety towards God; and then that he will observe justice towards men, and that he will do no harm to any one, either of his own accord or by the command of others; that he will always hate the wicked and be assistant to the righteous; that he will ever show fidelity to all men, and especially to those in authority; because no one obtains the government without God's assistance; and that if he be in authority, he will at no time whatever abuse his authority, nor endeavour to outshine his subjects, either in his garments or any other finery; that he will be perpetually a lover of truth and propose to himself to reprove those that tell lies; that he will keep his hands clear from theft, and his soul from unlawful gains; and that he will neither conceal anything from those of his own sect, nor discover any of their doctrines to others, no, not though any one should compel him so to do at the hazard of his life. Moreover, he swears to communicate their doctrines to no one any otherwise than as he received them himself; that he will abstain from robbery, and will equally preserve the books belonging to their sect, and the names of the angels (or messengers). These are the oaths by which they secure their proselytes to themselves.

But for those that are caught in any heinous sins they cast them out of their society, and he who is thus separated from them does often die after a miserable, manner; for as he is bound by the oath he bath taken, and by the customs he bath been engaged in, he is not at liberty to partake of that food that he meets with elsewhere, but is forced to eat grass, and to famish his body with hunger, till he perish....

Moreover, they are stricter than any other of the Jews, in resting from their labour on the seventh day; for they not only get their food ready the day before, that they may not be obliged to kindle a fire on that day, but they will not remove any vessel out of its place, nor go to stool thereon. Nay, on other days . . . covering themselves round with their garment, that they may not affront the divine rays of light, they ease themselves....

Now after the time of their preparatory trial is over, they are parted into four classes; and so far are the juniors inferior to the seniors, that if the seniors should be touched by the juniors, they must wash themselves, as if they had intermixed themselves with the company of foreigner. They are long-lived also, in somuch that many of them live above a hundred years, by means of simplicity of their diet, nay, as I thing, by means of the regular course of life they observe also. They condemn the miseries of life, and are above pain, by the generosity of their mind. And as for death, if ti will be to their glory, they esteem it better than living always; and indeed our war with the Romans gave abundant evidence what great souls they had in their trials, wherein, although they were tortured and distorted, burnt and torn to pieces, and went through all kinds of instruments of torment that they might be forced either to blaspheme their legislator or to eat what was forbidden them, yet they could not be made to do either of them, nor once to flatter their tormentors, or to shed a tear; but they smiled in their very pains, and laughed those to scorn who inflicted the torments upon them, and resigned up their souls with great alacrity, as expecting to receive them again.

For their doctrine is this, that bodies are corruptible...but that the souls are immortal, and continue forever and that they come out of the most subtle air, and are united to their bodies as to prisons, into which they are drawn by a certain natural enticement; but that when they are set free from the bond of the flesh, they then, as released from long bondage, rejoice and mount upward.....and thence are those exhortations to virtue, and dehortations from wickedness collected, whereby good men are bettered in the conduct of their life by the hope they have of reward after their death, and whereby the vehement inclinations of bad men to vice are restrained, by the fear and expectation they are in, that although they should lie concealed in this life, they should suffer immortal punishment after their death. These are the divine doctrines of the Essens about the soul, which lay an unavoidable bait for such as have once had a taste of their philosophy.

There are also those among them who undertake to foretell things to come, by reading the holy books, and using several sorts of purifications....

Moreover, there is another order of Essenes, who agree with the rest as to their way of living, and customs, and laws, but differ from them in the point of marriage, as thinking that by not marrying they cut off the principal part of human life, which is the prospect of succession; nay rather, that if all men should be of the same opinion, the whole race of mankind would fail.... But they do not use to accompany with their wives when they are with child, as a demonstration that they do not marry out of regard to pleasure, but for the sake of posterity.

SUMMARY

Instead of consuming the space necessary to analyze these quotations, we ask the reader to re-read and carefully consider every statement, for each is weighted with far-reaching implications. It is my desire that we proceed now to an analysis of several Essene documents, which corroborate fully the statements of Philo and Josephus, but which, in addition, reveal a great many facts and doctrines entirely unknown, or not attributed with assurance to the Essenes, before the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

I would like to recommend Martin Larson's books on this subject as they are possibly the most comprehensive on the subject of the Essenes which I have ever read.

HISTORICAL OVERVIEW OF THE ESSENE MOVEMENT AND THE ESSENE HERITAGE

It never ceases to amaze me in my studies the overall failure of Christian commentators to be acquainted with the evolution of the Essenes and their doctrines, dogmas, philosophies from generation to generation. It seems as if the vast majority of writers on the Essenes read Josephus, Philo, or Pliny and believe these accounts are a realistic and total view of this theologically complex group of apocalyptists. An unbiased study of the Essenes will show that this group grew by gradual stages, from a Judaizing program at the beginning into an esoteric cult of celibate-communist apocalytpists at the end some two-hundred years later. Serious investigation into these Essenes will reveal how they were able to create in secrecy the elements, which, according to accepted Christian history, were proclaimed for the first time to an astonished public by John the Baptist and Jesus of Nazareth.

Many writers, including Martin Larson, Dupont-Sommer, Edmund Wilson, and John M. Allegro have given vivid intimations of this. The knowledge gleaned from these men and their research into Essene history as well as their religious doctrines, gives unsuspected light upon the origin of Christianity and the career of its founder, as well as that of a predecessor, the Teacher of Righteousness.

THE HISTORY OF THE ESSENE MOVEMENT...A CHRONOLOGY

It is only by looking at the Essene movement and tracing its evolution by comparing the doctrines within their writings can we see for certain how the theological views of this "sect" changed over two-hundred years!

By 143 B.C.E., the Zadokites had become known definitely as the Sadducees; and the Chasidim, splitting into two parties, had become known as the Pharisees and the Essenes. The Essenes could be looked upon as "ultra-strict" Pharisees. The Sadducees became identified with the rich and successful; the Pharisees became the popular leaders; and the Essenes gradually evolved into an esoteric communion of celibate communists.

As stated above, it is a shame that so few have endeavored to trace the evolution of these Essenes (Holy Ones) from their pristine, pre-Chasidic beginnings as a Zadokite reaction against Hellenization among the Jews, into the frozen, rigid, esoteric, and celibate-communist mystery-cult which they had become in the days of Philo and Josephus. Until this is done then it is very difficult to look at the writings left from this group of individuals and discern that many of their "religious doctrines" originated outside of normative Judaism and find their points of origin in the Pythagorean, Buddhist, and Iranian religious culture.

There is evidence which indicated that, about 70 B.C.E. or soon thereafter, an Essene prophet known as the Teacher of Righteousness had been put to death by the Jewish authorities because of doctrinal, ritualistic, and organizational heterodoxy; that, in due course, his followers declared that he was God himself, appearing as a man in Jerusalem, and that his death was an atoning sacrifice for the elect; that he arose from the grace and returned to heaven; and that he would send a representative in a few years who would be precisely the kind of Messiah that was proclaimed for Jesus by his followers. There is a strong indication that if Jesus was not at one time affiliated with the Essenes, that he was strongly influenced by them and their doctrines; yet at times we find Jesus' individuality and diversion from some of the Essene tenants. Many feel that Jesus was persuaded that he was himself the Messiah expected by the Essene Community, that he left it and preached the Gospel to the public; and that finally, in a revised concept of his own mission, re-enacted the role and the passion of the slain Teacher, and proclaimed that in his eschatological role he would appear as the last judge and the all-powerful Son of Man.

The book of Acts attests that the core of the pristine Christian communion consisted of individual Essenes who defected to the "Jesus Movement" soon after Jesus' crucifixion; that soon after Jesus' death and later after the destruction of Jerusalem these Essene Priests came over in large numbers and constituted the Christian-Essene communion known as the Ebionites; and, finally, that many of the multifarious primitive Gnostic communions, which flourished during the early centuries of this era, bear the indelible imprint of Essene origin and influence.

Those who speak of "our Judeo-Christian tradition or culture" are laboring under a serious misconception. Ours is not the social, political, or economic system reflected in the Mosaic Law or the Yahweh prophets, which existed in Palestine following David and Solomon; and western life is separated by an even more impassable gulf from the ethics, political economy, and religious discipline set forth in the Essene and Synoptic Scriptures. Our culture is based substantially upon Graeco-Roman antecedents. The Essenes absorbed their basic ideology originally from Zoroastrianism and later from Dionysus & Greek-mystery sources, particularly Pythagoreanism. The Essenes group, originally a return to Torah movement, would evolve into a group that would reject Judaism in toto; and except for certain Buddhist accretions, Jesus and the pristine church reproduced the Essene pattern faithfully. Since, however, this form of Christianity was wholly unacceptable in the pagan world, it was Hellenized in the Pauline literature and the Fourth Gospel, both of which reflect Stoic influence; these eventually became the essential foundation for that reconstruction or restitution of Christianity known as the Protestant Reformation. Ancient Hellenized Christianity itself did not long survive; for the soon-to-be victorious Catholic Church, in order to establish itself as a theocracy, absorbed their most salient elements from the great pagan cults which were its competitors.

It should be obvious to almost any reader or disinterested observer that very few indeed believe and fewer still practice the Gospel as proclaimed in the New Testament, especially the Synoptics. A dwindling minority profess to embrace one or two of its elements, while ignoring the remainder. It is safe to say that not one American in a thousand would accept the Gospel if he were required to live according to its commandments.

Answer for yourself: Why, then, does it continue as the dominant religion of the western world?

Neither inertia or surrender to the past nor yet the power of vested and venerable institutions can explain the power of the Christian religion. For the dominance of Christianity in the western world finds its momentum from the fact that Paul and the writer of the Fourth Gospel Hellenized the pristine Essene evangel, then it was paganized by Catholicism, and then the Protestant Reformation revolutionized, not only the religious, but also the political and economic structure of northern Europe. The broad appeal of Christianity stems from the fact that it a synthesis of the most important doctrines which had already been developed in the great pre-Christian cultures over a period of centuries. Had this not been so, it would simply have been a restrictive creed and would, like many others, soon have vanished from the stage of history.

The central elements in the Synoptic Gospels as derived from Essene theology are:

- The divine, atoning, and sacrificial savior, who gives his own life to redeem that of his communicants and who, by rising from the grave, is empowered to confer divinity and immortality upon them also
- An ethical system which makes every one economically and politically equal in a social order where want and injustice are forever abolished, and in which the family, based on sex and procreation, is replaced by the larger family of the celibate saints
- An eschatological doctrine, according to which the redeemed will enjoy everlasting happiness in communion with each other in a kingdom of righteousness, from which all others will be banished into everlasting torture
- The promise of an imminent Parousia when the savior will reappear in power to conduct the Last

Judgment and institute the everlasting celibate-communal kingdom of heaven on earth, which will then belong to the saints in perpetuity.

- The redeemed were to be healed of all their physical and other maladies for time and eternity

What escapes the understanding of 99.9 % of all Christians is that the immediate source of these concepts was the Essene society and the pagan influences and sun-worship to which they had yielded over two-hundred years. Behind them the ultimate origins of these above religious concepts must be traced to the mystery-cults and the major religions of the pre-Christian world.

THE TRADITIONAL AND POPULAR MISCONCEPTION CONCERNING THE ESSENES

Most believe, judging by the recent publicity concerning the Dead Sea Scrolls since their discovery, that the casual inquirer might conclude that the existence of the pre-Christian Essene cult was revealed for the first time after a Bedouin boy, following his goat, discovered a cave near the Dead Sea in 2947. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The truth is that many scholars and historians had dealt with this religious organization at length in articles, essays, and even in elaborate scholarly works long before the discovery of the caves. Every competent student of western religion knows well of the celebrated passages in Pliny, Philo, and Josephus describing the Essenes and most take for granted this is all that is needed to be known to describe this religious sect and their beliefs. Again nothing could be further from the truth and far too many Christian writers and "supposed" authors of the Dead Sea Scrolls have failed to look beyond these three "summary statements" in writing upon the pre-Christian Essenes.

Enough material to fill a small library has now been produced concerning the Essenes; and yet, in spite of all the advantages available to modern scholarship, one of the most accurate analyses of them yet today was published in 1889 and was authored by Frederick William Evans. He maintained that Jesus was heavily influenced by Essene theology and was most likely a member of the order at one time (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 21). John Allegro also stated: "The Essenes were, many of them, converted on the day of Pentecost, and formed the body of the Jerusalem Church, with its spiritual origin" (John Allegro, The Dead Sea Scrolls, p. 161). Allegro goes on to say: "the members of the first Christian Church 'were Essenes. They loved one another so that they sold their possessions and had all things in common. They forsook the generative life, with its wives and husbands, for Christ's sake and the Gospel's…" Jesus then, taught celibacy and communism; and the first Jerusalem Church consisted largely of Essenes who came over to Christianity.

As stated in another article, the Essenes of Jesus' day were a far cry from the Essenes who began a separatist movement from the Temple and corruption of the Priesthood in roughly 150 B.C.E. Warren Felt Evans, who died in 1889, makes mention of the "method of healing practiced by Jesus, and perhaps also of the mystic Pythagorean sect of the Jews called the Essenes…to which sect Jesus himself unquestionably belonged" (Ibid.). Evans states that the writer of the Gospel of Luke was an Essene (Esoteric Christianity, Boston, 1886, p. 100), and he adds: "Jesus came to do for the world at large, by revealing the sublime wisdom of the ancient mystical sects and brotherhoods, what had been done only for the chosen few in the sacred privacy of the inner recesses of the temple" (Ibid., p. 79). Jesus, then, according to this was an Essene; the Essenes were Pythagoreans; and the unique mission of Jesus was to reveal the esoteric doctrines of the Essene-Pythagoreans to the world at large" (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 21-22).

The surprising this is not that the Essenes have been well known, but that very little has been understood concerning their esoteric nature and doctrines. Even more amazing is the fact that although several of their most important documents have long been extant and widely circulated, not even the most acute scholars ever suspected the true origin of these before 1947; and that to this day a great deal of confusion persists concerning them.

THE NATURE OF THE ESSENE FAITH

Among a people totally dedicated to religion, the Essenes, from their proto-beginnings to the end of their career, were the most fervent, pietistic, and dedicated. Furthermore, after the consolidation of Yahwism, the Essenes alone were able to absorb the essence of other religions and so create a new and powerful synthesis of their own. It is for these reasons that several Jewish scholars have found it difficult to accept the Essene documents. J. L. Teicher, agreeing with various other writers, maintains that the Essenes were none other than a cult of Christians (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 25). Upton C. Ewing believes that all the Christological and Messianic references in Essene literature point only to the founder of Christianity, that they are, therefore, genuinely prophetic, and that there was only a single cult of this kind in Palestine, which might be called Essene-Christian (The Prophet of the Dead Sea Scrolls, p. 132-133).

But before we call this religious sectarian group "proto-Christian" we need to look at the religious beliefs they held; both in the beginning of their conception as well as their demise.

Like many other cults, the Essenes began by accepting the dominant religion of Judaism and its Scriptures; before very long they were creating new and divergent revelations, which to them in time became superior to the orthodox or to the writings of Moses. Every successful prophet builds upon, but remakes, the doctrines and practices accepted by his prospective converts. Thus, almost every new faith possesses in reality two related but also disparate scriptures: first, the established and conventional; and, second, the new revelations, the distinctive possession of the avant-garde. Thereupon, the cult takes the next step; it claims also a unique power to interpret the old canon. Thus, the new communion become independent. Almost from the beginning the Essenes began the creation of new scriptures; and they believed with realizing certainty that their leader, known in successive generations as the Teacher of Righteousness, the Master of Justice, the Man Who Reneweth the Law, etc., alone could reveal the esoteric and prophetic meanings of the orthodox Jewish canon (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 26-27).

THE ESSENE METHODOLOGY IN CREATING NEW SCRIPTURE

Answer for yourself: What is the pseudepigraphic technique as used by the Essenes?

The Essenes were certain that their scriptures, especially the Book of Enoch, possessed unquestionable priority and supremacy. The unparalleled authority of such works lay in their exact prophecies, accurate to the date of composition, which the amazed communicant could easily understand. These already-accomplished predictions were then followed by others for which similar and imminent fulfillment was confidently expected. This is known as the pseudepigraphic method; and behind it lies a long and interesting story.

When the Jewish priests consolidated their power after the return from Babylon, they outlawed all prophecy (Zech. 13:3-6), since that could disturb the public tranquillity and discredit the incumbent priesthood. The purpose of this proscription was to freeze the existing canon. The ingenuity of man, however, is not so easily thwarted; and effective techniques were developed by which new revelations could be promulgated. The ban against prophecy gave rise to the literary form known as the pseudepigraphic apocalypse, which was to play so large a role for several centuries in Jewish life.

The method is daring: a fervent prophet with an irrepressible message composes a "revelation" which he attributes to some ancient personage, provides a suitable historical setting, delineates history up to his own day under an easily understood symbolism, and the, relying on the credit established for the immediate future, especially an eschatological cataclysm. The Chasids, the Essenes, and the Pharisees became masters of this pseudepigraphic method and, by its use, composed an entire corpus of extraordinary literature, edited by R.H. Charles and published in 1913 as the Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL EVOLUTION OF THE ESSENE CULT

THE ZADOKITE PERIOD 195-175 B.C.E.

For want of a better description, we can refer to the earliest anti-Hellenizing reaction among the Jews as the Zadokite movement: it began and ended during this period.

THE CHASIDIC PERIOD 175-145 B.C.E.

This period is best described as the "proto-Essenism" period. These thirty years were crucial for the formation of the ultimate Essene theology. The Chasids (Chasidim, Hasidaeans) came into existence about 175 B.C.E. and had split away from the more conservative Zadokites. These Chasids formed a fervent and militant organization dedicated to the establishment of a purified Judaism. The immediate objective was the total defeat of the Syrian Hellenizers and the Jewish apostates who cooperated with and supported them. For some reason, an extraordinary event seems to have occurred during the first decade of this period, without which there would probably never have been any Essene communion; the Chasidim split into two divisions., of which one remained in Judea while the other exiled itself, or was driven, into the Syrian desert, not far from Damascus, shortly before or about the year 170 B.C.E.

However, the evidence indicates also that these exiles returned soon after Mattathias and his sons wet up their standard at Modin in 167 B.C.E. During the struggle against the Syrians, the two fractions submerged their differences and became militant co-patriots. Precisely what Chasidic developments occurred from 160-145 B.C.E., remain obscure. However, we believe that the two divisions not only remained distinct but that the gulf between them probably deepened.

The thirty years following 175 B.C.E. were prolific in literary production. The oldest extant writing is the Damascus Document, composed before 170 B.C.E.. This was followed by the first portion of Enoch, to which is assigned the date 170-168 B.C.E. The third scripture consists of Chapters 7-12 of the canonical Daniel; this was not produced by the Essene movement proper, but by the more conservative Chasids, who never left Judea; the date is probably 164 B.C.E. The fourth scripture is the second portion of Enoch, composed about 162-161 B.C.E. The fifth work, The War of the Sons of Light, written about 163, is quite different. Following this, there seems to be a literary interruption, for no extant documents reflects a date following 160 and preceding 142 B.C.E.

ESSENISM AS A PUBLIC CULT 145-105 B.C.E.

About 145 B.C.E., as we learn from Josephus, the three great Jewish sects or political parties emerged as well-known and definite entities (Antiq., XIII, v9). The old right-wing Zadokites became the Sadducees; the more conservative wing of the Chasids emerged as the Pharisees; and the radical Chasids, the People of the Covenant, became the Essenes. Allegro states that from "the Pious Ones," or Hasidim…we can almost certainly trace the origins of the Essenes, and the Pharisees (Dead Sea Scrolls, p. 97). The Sadducees were rich, educated, successful, powerful Jews; and they absorbed the Epicurean philosophy. The Pharisees became the popular leaders of the people; in due course, they elaborated the Mosaic Law into an extraordinarily elaborate code; and they were probably influenced by the Stoic school of thought. The Essenes became more and more dedicated to the holy life of religious separation, which drew them finally into the Pythagorean way of life. The Essenes of 140 B.C.E. were quite different from the esoterics of 75 B.C.E., and even more from the rigid celibate-communists described by Philo, Pliny, and Josephus. One can, upon personal investigation, observe the gradual trajectory of their development way from traditional Judaism and toward a synthesis of Pythagorean-Buddhist-Iranian apocalyptic beliefs.

During and following the years beginning at 145 B.C.E., the People of the Covenant continued for some time as a public organization which required no novitiate or secret indoctrination and which lived a fairly conventional existence. They developed a corpus of literature which gradually supplemented or supplanted the canonical; they had undoubtedly already revised the calendar. The revised calendar was probably one of the first Essene deviations from orthodox Judaism because the Damascus Document refers to The Book of the Divisions of the Times According To Their Jubilees and Their Weeks, which probably contained a system connected with their novel calendar (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 30). This calendar placed their feasts and holy days on date diverging from those celebrated by the orthodox; and, although we cannot be sure just when they ceased to offer burnt sacrifices, this deviation may have begun about 125-120 B.C.E., and it is certain that such ritual were proscribed when they became Pythagoreans (Ibid.). This conclusion is supported by the fact that Jubilees (140 B.C.E.) reflects the common practice of burnt sacrifices in many passages; but the Testaments (130-125 B.C.E.) has only a single reference to such a ritual (Levi 9). There is no reference at all to such sacrifices in the subsequent documents; and they are condemned in The Manual of Discipline (104 B.C.E.).

Although there was no new apocalypse, several scriptures of high order were produced during this period, probably including many of the Thanksgiving Psalms. To the great doctrinal composition known as the Book of Jubilees as well as the third portion of Enoch, we assign the approximate date of 140. The fourth major production is the substratum which constitutes the bulk of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, probably written about 130-125 B.C.E.

THE CELIBATE-COMMUNIST CULT EMERGES 105-60 B.C.E.

The continual evolution of the religious theology of the Essene cult, which began in 195 B.C.E., take a turn again before or about the year 105 B.C.E. This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that it was never necessary for the cult to discard or even to revise its own previous literature; and still more by the fact that modern scholarship has often failed to distinguish between pre- and post-Pythagorean documents among the Essene collection. We cannot know all the factors which brought about the transformation of a separatist movement within Judaism that ultimately culminated in a Pythagorean-Buddhist cult that elevated their own writings above the Tanakh, but we know that late in his career, John Hycranus ("the Wicked Priest") went over from the Pharisees to the Sadducees and began to persecute the Pharisees (Antiq., XIII, x, 5-6). Along with this he persecuted the dissident Essenes who were "super scrupulous Pharisees" in many regards and they suffered in double measure. We know that the Essenes gave allegiance to John Hycranus while he was opposed by Antiochus VII and when he assumed the triple crown (Prophet, Priest, King); but they must have turned against him during the cruel aggressions he perpetrated upon his neighbors after 125 B.C.E. And they would certainly never have condoned the savage sadism of Aristobulus I during his one year reign of terror.

Around 104 B.C.E. the Essenes established their headquarters at the Dead Sea; and we consider it certain that about this time they gravitated even more toward Pythagorean religious beliefs in rejection of the Temple cult and all that Judaism personified. Basically you, at this time, could consider them a Pythagorean mystery cult.

Some of the most influential and important scriptures date from this period! The Manual of Discipline summaries the laws and organization of this Pythagorean Essenic cult. It contains a large amount of information that was apparently unknown to Philo Judeaus and even to Josephus. In this period also belongs possibly some of the most important literature of the Essene collection; ENOCH FOUR and FIVE, which reflect a totally altered social philosophy. The Habakkuk Commentary is very important, because of the story which details the Wicked Priest in Jerusalem (John Hycranus who usurped the position deserved by the Zadok priesthood) who, because of "the wrong done the teacher of righteousness and the men of the party, God delivered into the hands of his enemies." The final Essene composition, and perhaps the most important of all, consists of additions to the Testaments which re-create in vivid term the ministry, sacrificial death, resurrection, and ascent to heaven of the last Teacher of Righteousness.

THE LAST OF THE ESSENES 60 B.C.E. TO 70 A.D.

What is said next is very important that you understand. When the Essenes became known to Philo and Josephus, they had long been in their state of rigid maturity. Never has there existed a more secretive or thoroughly disciplined organization. They expected their Messiah (Angel-Messiah) within two or three decades following 60 B.C.E.; and if so, they must have found means of rationalizing the delay in his coming after 30 B.C.E. Also, what had probably been intended as an interim or preparatory morality and organization became for them not only a permanent but also a highly desirable way of life. By selling all that they had and giving it to themselves collectively, by turning over to the Order all that they earned during many years of industry, and by living always in the strictest frugality, the members had made their community wealthy. The hope of a supernatural kingdom was, therefore, no longer the sole attraction: for the Society could practically guarantee life-long security from the ills and buffetings of a cruel and uncertain life.

While the Pharisees, who were already the rabbis of the Diaspora, assumed spiritual leadership over the scattered nation, the Essenes, like their opposites, the Sadducees, vanished as an independent cult; and there is evidence that soon after Christianity burst upon the Judean scene, a majority of the Holy Ones came over, forming the first Jerusalem Church; and then, after the destruction of the Jewish capital in 70 C.E., reorganized themselves into the Christian sect known as the Ebionites. (Larson, The Essene Heritage, p. 20-32).

Let me say in closing this article that these delineations of evolution of the Essene cult along with the time frames need to be committed to memory. As we concern ourselves with the various literatures created within each time period it would do us well to remember the dates as we see the evolution and changes within the Essene theology over these two-hundred years. As we note the changes we need only find the sources from them and then identify the origin from which these changes came and the influences upon the Essenes to make such changes in their religious beliefs system.

So let us now see a doctrinal overview that will help us in our further understanding of the evolution of Essenic religious beliefs.

THE ESSENES...THE STORY OF CHRISTIAN ORIGINS

The religious faith of the occident, or the western world, consists substantially of a synthesis of beliefs and doctrines which had their origin in many lands and among various peoples and which were combined and proclaimed in what we may call the New Testament. Dispersed among the New Testament is this synthesis of religious beliefs amidst Biblical Judaism. The creeds, disciplines, and dogmas on which almost all the churches of Europe and the Americas and many of those in Asia are based, purport to derive their authority from these Gospels and Epistles; and all these multifarious communions proclaim that theirs is the religion established by Jesus, whom they revere as the Christ.

The principal concepts of the Christian Gospels, which have played so crucial a role in occidental life, can be traced to their ultimate sources. Over the last 15 years scores of old as well as modern books and hundreds of articles in encyclopedias were first read by way of orientation; but, since recondite knowledge is to be had only by a minute study of the sources, this soon became an industry. More than four years were consumed in the intensive study of ancient Egyptian, Persian, Brahmana, Gaina, Buddhist, Judaistic, Essene, and Christian literature. Quotations were copied and organized for easy reference. All the major streams of thought were then carefully analyzed. Important elements from various ancient cultures were discovered to have converged, first, in the Pythagorean thiasoi and then in the Essene Order, whence the Christian Gospel emerged, which, in turn, proceeded to penetrate the emotions and to achieve dominion over the Graeco-Roman world.

THE ESSENE RELIGIOUS SYNTHESIS

The Essenes, lately the object of so much attention, play a central role in our drama. They were an extraordinary group of Jewish communist-celibates who, in their formative stage about 170 B.C.E., absorbed the metaphysics and the eschatology of the Zoroastrians, and then, some sixty-five years later, by becoming Pythagoreans, incorporated into their system much of the discipline and soteriology of Attis, Dionysus and the mystery-cults of Greece and Asia Minor. Upon all this, they engrafted a Christology which combined a Persian with a Messianic Judaic concept, which, in a period of crisis, they personalized in their martyred Teacher of Righteousness, whom they expected to return upon the clouds about 35-30 B. C., accompanied by myriads of angels to conduct the Last Judgment. If you were to invest study into these areas it would be your conclusion, based on the evidence and facts available for your inspection, that Jesus was an Essene who, convinced that he was himself the incarnate Christ destined to redeem and judge mankind, left the Order of the Essenes (strict Pharisees) for the purpose of creating a mass-movement.

The certainty finally emerges that Christianity was a highly composite doctrine which combined many of the age-old religious concepts first developed by Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, India, Buddhists, and Greeks, as well as by Jews, Phrygians, Syrians, and other inhabitants of Asia Minor. It was congenitally related to all of these; and when any of them accepted Christianity, they were simply recovering what was, at least in part, originally their own.

This religious synthesis explains the ease at which Gentile Christianity became a world religion, yet had its roots in a Jewish movement.

In the light of worldwide anti-Semitism this is amazing to say the least.

We at Bet Emet feel that the realization of this fact must induce among all sectarians a definite humility, which should in turn, contribute toward eliminating those doctrinal differences which divide our society into a multiplicity of groups shut off from each other by ideological barriers, as if we all lived in hermetically sealed compartments, incapable of fellowship or communion.

THE CORE OF ESSENE TEACHING IN RELATIONSHIP TO SALVATION

Mature Essenism taught the following concepts as synthesized from Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, Buddhists, and Greeks, as well as by Jews, Phrygians, Syrians:

- That the human race is divided into two groups which are forever separated, the Elect and the unrighteous, the Children of Light and the Children of Darkness
- That the former may be redeemed for everlasting glory in heaven, but only through divine intervention; that a god-man (Angel-Messiah) must appear as a human being on earth, and, in fact, had appeared, to bring salvation to humanity
- That all of the Elect who accept him and become his disciples will be redeemed; that all others are doomed to super eternally in hell fire
- That the Children of Light are made manifest through their celibacy, saintly brotherhood, and communal poverty and equalitarianism
- That the god-man is the Soter, i.e., the divine sacrifice who gives his life for many and whose flesh and blood are consumed by his communicants so that they too may become divine and immortal
- That in his first manifestation the savior proclaims his revelation; that after his death, he returns to the Father for a period while his followers preach his gospel; that before the end of the then existing generation he would certainly return in a grand Parousia to judge all mankind and establish the kingdom of heaven.

This was the Essene-Christian faith, which is also the religion of the occident.

This gospel consists primarily of four basic elements: soteriology, eschatology, ethics, and the Messianic concept. If one is to be honest with the material available in relationship to Christian doctrine and dogma, he must first consider the sources of this Essene soteriology, that is to say, its doctrine concerning the incarnate godman who dies for humanity and whose body and blood must be consumed sacramentally so that the Elect may become divine and immortal. As you see salvation did not come from faith and obedience, but though mystic rituals involved in the eating allegorically the flesh of a godman and the symbolic drinking of the blood of this godman. The trail leads us first to the Nile, where civilization and organized religion began in the dim reaches of tile prehistoric past.

The first officially authentic Essene scriptures were published shortly after an Arab goatherd, following one of his animals, stumbled into a cave near the Dead Sea, where a treasure-trove of ancient documents was found, several of which were virtually intact. By a strange succession of fortunate incidents, these were quickly published, and that made available to the world.

This set off one of the most intensive archeological hunts in history; scholars and scientists hastened to the Judaean desert in search of additional Scrolls. In this, they were signally successful: remnants, large and small, of hundreds of Essene scriptures were recovered, all of which had been secreted in sealed jars about 69 A.D. Material was found in at least five caves, of which that in Cave 4 alone constituted a corpus of original Essene scripture sufficient, should it be translated and published, to fill two volumes the size of the King James version of the Bible.

Then, however, strange things began to occur. In the beginning, and for several years, no portion of this treasure, deposited in the Jordanian Museum in Jerusalem, has been published, or even made available to scholars. Of the 8 men, appointed to collate, arrange, publish, and translate these documents, 4 were Roman Catholics; and only John Marco Allegro, the English researcher, was without denominational affiliation. When he quickly translated and published the Copper Scroll and the few fragments entrusted to him; and then when he declared that the Essene Teacher of Righteousness, executed by the Jewish priests about 70-68 B.C., may have been crucified, he was denied all further access to the Scroll material.

As year after year passed away without the appearance of any more Essene scripture, although from time to time elaborate promises were made that they would soon be available, many began to question the reasons for the delay and the concealment.

Since then, ample time has elapsed for the preparation and publication of all Essene material. But not one line of the hundreds of pages found in the caves has been released until the last few years.

Although additional Essene scriptures failed to appear, there was a plethora of books and articles dealing with the cult and its Scrolls during the years following 1950. Dozens of books and hundreds of articles, expressing every conceivable point of view, have appeared. It is probable that a complete bibliography of all material printed in this field might comprise somewhere between 1,500 and 2,000 titles.

During the Six-Day War of 1967, the Jewish force overran Jerusalem and captured the Jordanian Museum. To the best of our knowledge, nothing has been published concerning the fate or the whereabouts of the Essene Scrolls—the most precious concentration of ancient literature ever discovered in modern times.

Until recently no outsider, of course, knew the contents of these documents; but it seems difficult to doubt that there was a constructive conspiracy to conceal them and to prevent their publication. All discussion concerning the Scrolls seems to have been silenced for years and only recently all the contents of the scrolls have been made public.

The motive for this concealment, we believe, is not far to seek. Although the evidence linking pristine Christianity to the Dead Sea Covenanters is already very substantial, there are still men of stature who deny the existence of such a relation. ship. With the release of the later documents, it was established beyond all doubt that Christianity grew out of Essenism.

The concealing the Essene scriptures for years was an concerted effort by Christian religious authorities in hopes of preventing or forestalling the the verification made from them that pristine Christianity developed from an esoteric Jewish cult which had forsaken Judaism as we understand it and gravitated toward a Pythagorean, Buddhist, Iranian apocalyptic sect. We believe, secondly, that the whole orthodox or so-called Christian world, with its material assets worth hundreds of billions of dollars, wishes to preserve the myth of its unique origin, founded on the inspired message of a god-man whose only source of doctrine or inspiration was the creator of the universe. The Dead Sea Scrolls prove otherwise!

The vested interests of those religious communities are therefore at stake; they will not, if they can prevent it, permit the publication of authentic materials which may eventually reduce their influence and credibility and, more importantly, cause a decline in their wealth and income. Thankfully, they forestalled the publication of these scrolls but could not prevent it.

Since most people read only what reinforces the persuasions they have already accepted, we realize that few indeed among those already committed to some creed will be motivated to read these articles. Edwin Franden Dakin once remarked that the greatest miracle in the world is the capacity of humanity to believe—without evidence. Most people are nurtured by their delusions. However, true education or enlightenment cannot exist except among those who follow St. Paul's dictum to try all things and in the end retain the good.

In these articles and web-pages, therefore, we have sought the truth concerning Gentile Christianity and how it borrowed from all religions by examining their own sacred scriptures: our position being that if these are internally unassailable, they probably constitute a solid foundation for faith. However, if they are filled with discrepancies, contradictions, and presentations which are mutually exclusive; if they are patently false or even ridiculous on their face, how can those who rely on them for ultimate truth confirm themselves in their belief except by refusing to examine the most obvious facts? How can divine infallibility be claimed for "revelations" which bear every earmark of forgery or folk-myth?

We have submitted the evidence and conclusions found in the following pages to critics everywhere who would assuredly be delighted to demonstrate their error or fallacy; but, since they cannot deny the words of their own official Scriptures, no one has been able to impugn anything we have written. It is one thing to deny something; but it is entirely another thing to refute it. Emotion and zeal is a poor substitute for facts and evidence!

We are well aware of how desperately suffering humanity craves the consolation of religion, and we do not for a moment deny that millions obtain this from delusions which are as unfounded as they are irrational and untruthful. Again, what we don't know will not hurt us...until we die and find out we were wrong!

We believe, however, that it is possible for an increasing number of men and women to develop and embrace a system of ethics and intellectual superstructure which will create a happy and successful life without the fear of imagined specters or a dependence upon false dogmas. Many are they who have done so. We at Bet Emet look forward to a time when a large portion of the human race will obtain the moral and intellectual elevation which will enable them to live according to truths revealed by God and not by the false religious beliefs of men desiring power and authority over the people. Shalom.

THE ESSENES: THEIR INFLUENCE UPON THE OLD & NEW TESTMAENTS AND CHRISTIANITY IN GENERAL

LETS START BY TESTING YOUR CURRENT KNOWLEDGE?

- Did you know that the Essenes were among the first Christians?
- Did you know that the Essene brought their own sect's religious beliefs into the Jesus movement with them following the crucifixion of Jesus and that these "religious beliefs" can be shown to have more in common with the religious beliefs of the Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, Indians, Buddhists, Phrygians, Syrians, Greeks, as well as Zoroastrianism and the Greek Mystery cults of Attis, Demeter, Orpheus, as well as with Pythagoreanism than they do with Biblical Judaism?
- Did you know that the Essenes evolved "theologically" over 200 years; beginning as a righteous Zadok moment in 170 B.C.E. which was theologically based upon the Torah into a celibate, ascetic sect in the days of Jesus which adopted pagan religious ideas over the Torah and the Tanakh? In other words, the religious belief system of the Essenes consistently absorbed other religious beliefs and evolved?
- Did you know that the Essenes, in the 2nd century B.C.E. in Alexandria, Egypt, were responsible for forging and corrupting the Greek translation of the Jewish Scriptures in order make it seem that the fJewish Prophets and the Writings had endorsed "their particular theology as derived from sun-worship; when in reality the writers of the Jewish Scriptures had not?"
- And did you also know that many of the passages and quotes from this Greek-forged Old Testament, bent toward Essenic philosophy and theology, as recorded in the New Testament, didn't come from the Jewish Masoretic text but but the Essene-altered Greek translation of the Jewish Old Testament and are therefore not true and never were given by God in the first place? Hundreds of examples await your inspection at: http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com.

NOW DO YOU WANT TO SEE THIS FOR YOURSELF....WANT THE FACTS CONCERNING THE QUESTIONS ABOVE?

First of all understand that this is not an hypothesis but facts that you can see for yourself. The only problem is most likely no one has ever shown you before. We hope to do that God-willing.

SO LET US BEGIN A SERIOUS STUDY ON THESE ESSENES AND THEIR INFLUENCE ON THE OLD & NEW TESTAMENT AND CHRISTIANITY IN GENERAL

The religious faith of the western world, Christianity, consists substantially of a synthesis of religious beliefs and doctrines which had their origin in many lands and among various peoples and which were combined and proclaimed in what we may call the New Testament, specifically those documents known as the Gospels along with the Pauline Epistles. Needless to say this is not common knowledge and few practicing and devout Christians are aware of the inherent paganism they practice. The creeds, disciplines, and dogmas on which almost all the churches of Europe and the Americas and many of those in Asia are based purport to derive their authority from this New Testament document; and all these multifarious denominations and non-denominations proclaim that theirs is the religion established by Jesus, whom they revere as the Christ.

For more than fifteen years I have been fascinated by the thought that the principal concepts of the Christian faith, which have played so crucial a role in occidental life, might be traced to their ultimate sources. Some six or seven years ago, leisure for such an elaborate project became possible: scores of modern and old books were purchased and hundreds of articles in encyclopedias were first read by way of orientation; but, since discernment and knowledge is to be had only by a minute study of the sources, this soon became an industry that consumed me day after day. More than seven years were consumed in the intensive study of ancient Egyptian, Persian, Brahmana, Gaina, Buddhist, Judaistic, Essene, and Christian literature.

What you will discover if you embark on such a study is that important elements from various ancient cultures converged and literally we find a synthesis of religious beliefs, first, in the Pythagorean thiasot and then in the Essene Order, whence the Christian Gospel emerged, which, in turn, proceeded to penetrate the emotions and to achieve dominion over the Graeco-Roman world.

The Essenes, lately the object of so much attention, play a central role in our drama. They were an extraordinary group of Jewish communist-celibates who, in their formative stage about 170 B. C., absorbed the metaphysics and the eschatology of the Zoroastrians, and then, some sixty-five years later, by becoming Pythagoreans, incorporated into their system much of the discipline and soteriology of the mystery-cults of Greece and Asia Minor. Upon all this, they engrafted a Christology which combined a Persian with a Messianic Judaic concept, which, in a period of crisis, they personalized in their martyred Teacher of Righteousness, whom they expected to return upon the clouds about 35-30 B. C., accompanied by myriads of angels to conduct the Last Judgment. It is our conclusion at Bet Emet Ministries that Jesus was strongly Essenic in his religious beliefs and who, convinced that he was himself the incarnate Christ destined to redeem and judge mankind, left the Essenic Order for the purpose of creating a mass-movement and revealing these "secret doctrines" to the masses in preparation of the expected imminent appearing of the Kingdom of God.

The certainty finally emerges that Christianity was a highly composite doctrine which combined many of the age-old religious concepts first developed by Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, Buddhists, and Greeks, as well as by Jews, Phrygians, Syrians, and other inhabitants of Asia Minor. Christianity was congenitally related to all of these; and when any of them accepted Christianity, they were simply recovering what was, at least in part, originally their own. This explains why Christianity became such a success and world-wide religion in such a short time.

THE ESSENE CHRISTIAN FAITH

Mature Essenism taught the following concepts which is known today as the Essene-Christian Faith:

- That the human race is divided into two groups which are forever separated, the Elect and the unrighteous, the Children of Light and the Children of Darkness
- That the Elect/the Children of Light may be redeemed for everlasting glory in heaven, but only through divine intervention
- That a god-man must appear as a human being on earth, and, in fact, had appeared, to bring salvation to humanity
- That all of the Elect who accept him and become his disciples will be redeemed; that all others are doomed to suffer eternally in hell fire
- That the Children of Light are made manifest through their celibacy, saintly brotherhood, and communal poverty and equalitarianism

- That the god-man is the soter, i.e., the divine sacrifice who gives his life for many and whose flesh and blood are consumed by his communicants so that they too may become divine and immortal
- That in his first manifestation the savior proclaims his revelation; that after his death, he returns to the Father for a period while his followers preach his gospel
- That before the end of the then existing generation he would certainly return in a grand Parousia to judge all mankind and establish the kingdom of heaven.

NOW WHERE DID THE ESSENES GET THESE BELIEFS...FROM THE TORAH, THE PROPHETS, OR THE WRITINGS....OR DID THEY GET THEM FROM SEVERAL DIFFERENT PAGAN INFLUENCES?

One thing is for certain; you cannot assume anything in Biblical studies. Our study will show you a rather clever and unique religious synthesis of ideas taken from Egypt, Babylon, India, Assyria, Greece, Asia Minor, Persia, as well as Judaism. To complicate matters these proto-Essenes, in Alexandria, Egypt, in 200 B.C.E., mistranslated on purpose the Jewish Scriptures by writing their "pagan theologies" into the texts and passing the finished product off to the Greek-speaking Jews of the world as a "translation of the Jewish Scriptures." Nothing could be further from the truth, but these Greek-Jews could not read Hebrew; who was to know any different?

This document was to establish what was to be later called the Essene-Christian faith, which is also the religion of the occident and the Western world. Instead of being a unique revelation such tenants as described above are nothing more than a synthesis of major doctrines contained in the religions of the Egyptians, Babylonians, Assyrians, Persians, Buddhists, Greeks, Phrygians, Syrians, and other inhabitants of Asia Minor.

This gospel of Christianity consists primarily of four basic elements: soteriology, eschatology, ethics, and the Messianic concept. And first in this series of articles we will consider the sources of its soteriology, that is to say, its doctrine concerning the incarnate godman who dies for humanity and whose body and blood must be consumed sacramentally so that the Elect may become divine and immortal. The trail leads us first to the Nile, where civilization and organized religion began in the dim reaches of the prehistoric past. Our objective is to understand the forces which have created our ideologies and theologies within Christianity.

CHRISTIANITY: A DIVINE REVELATION OR ESSENISM REDISCOVERED?

The first officially authentic Essene scriptures were published shortly after an Arab goatherd, following one of his animals, stumbled into a cave near the Dead Sea, where a treasure-trove of ancient documents was found, several of which were virtually intact. By a strange succession of fortunate incidents, these were quickly published, and thus made available to the world.

This set off one of the most intensive archeological hunts in history; scholars and scientists hastened to the Judaean desert in search of additional Scrolls. In this, they were signally successful: remnants, large and small, of hundreds of Essene scriptures were recovered, all of which had been secreted in sealed jars about 69 A.D. Material was found in at least five caves, of which that in Cave 4 alone constituted a corpus of original Essene scripture sufficient, should it be translated and published, to fill two volumes the size of the King James version of the Bible.

Then, however, strange things began to occur. Up until just a few years ago, no portion of this treasure, deposited in the Jordanian Museum in Jerusalem, has been published, or even made available to scholars. Of the 8 men, appointed to collate, arrange, publish, and translate these documents, 4 were Roman Catholics; and only John Marco Allegro, the English researcher, was without denominational affiliation. When he quickly translated and published the Copper Scroll and the few fragments entrusted to him; and then when he declared that the Essene Teacher of Righteousness, executed by the Jewish priests about 70-68 B.C., may have been crucified, he was denied all further access to the Scroll material.

As year after year passed away without the appearance of any more Essene scripture, although from time to time elaborate promises were made that they would soon be available, many began to question the reasons for the delay and the concealment. Since then, ample time has elapsed for the preparation and publication of all Essene material. But not one line of the hundreds of pages found in the caves has been released until stolen and made public just a couple of years ago.

Although additional Essene scriptures failed to appear, there was a plethora of books and articles dealing with the cult and its Scrolls during the years following 1950. Dozens of books and hundreds of articles, expressing every conceivable point of view, have appeared. It is probable that a complete bibliography of all material printed in this field might comprise somewhere between 1,500 and 2,000 titles.

During the Six-Day War of 1967, the Jewish forces overran Jerusalem and captured the Jordanian Museum. To the best of our knowledge, nothing has been published concerning the fate or the whereabouts of the Essene Scrolls up until just a couple of years ago.

Answer for yourself: Why not?

These scrolls are the most precious concentration of ancient literature ever discovered in modern times. No outsider, of course, knew the contents of these documents; but it seems difficult to doubt that there was a constructive conspiracy to conceal them and to prevent their publication forever. All discussion concerning these "unreleased" Scrolls seems to have been silenced up until just a couple of years ago.

Placed in caves almost 2000 years ago, and not discovered until 1947, the Dead Sea Scrolls provide a unique insight into Jewish and Christian origins. They have held a fascination over academics, religious leaders, and they lay public alike for the last forty-five years. From 1952, when a team of scholars was appointed and Cave 4 at Qumran was discovered they have been under the control of an elite and secretive clique. Finally, in the autumn of 1991, this monopoly of "secrecy" was effectively broken when the Huntington Library in California announced it would allow public access to its collection of Dead Sea Scrolls photographs. This was soon followed by the publication of a Facsimile Edition by the Biblical Archaeology Society in Washington.

The motive for this concealment, we believe, is not far to seek. Although the evidence linking pristine Christianity to the Dead Sea Covenanters is already very substantial, there are still men of stature who deny the existence of such a relationship.

However, since these scrolls are available today, the remaining Essene documents establish beyond all doubt that Christianity grew out of Essenism and was not a unique expression or revelation from God.

Answer for yourself: Who, then, is so desperately bent on concealing the Essene scriptures?

- First, the Jewish religious community wished to suppress them because these scrolls are filled with condemnation of the Jewish rulers and nation
- Secondarily, the knowledge contained in these scrolls proves that pristine Christianity developed from an esoteric Jewish cult outside the main of normative Biblical Judaism. The whole orthodox or so-called Christian world, with its material assets worth hundreds of billions of dollars, wished to preserve the myth of its unique origin, founded on the inspired message of a god-man whose only source of doctrine or inspiration was the creator of the universe.

The vested interests of those religious communities are therefore at stake; they did not for the longest time, allow the publication of authentic materials which reduce their influence and credibility and, more importantly, cause a decline in their wealth and income.

But the day has come when the Essene Scrolls have come to light.

Since most people read only what reinforces the persuasions they have already accepted, we realize that few indeed among those already committed to some creed will be motivated to read about these documents. Edwin Franden Dakin once remarked that the greatest miracle in the world is the capacity of humanity to believe without evidence. Most people are nurtured by their delusions. However, true education or enlightenment cannot exist except among those who follow St. Paul's dictum to try all things and in the end retain the good.

In this study and forthcoming articles on this web-site, therefore, we seek the truth of Christianity and its composite religious parts by examining each religions assimilated into Christianity and their own sacred scriptures.

Answer for yourself: How can divine infallibility be claimed in Christianity for "revelations" which bear every earmark of forgery or folk-myth which has been handed down from sun-myths and paganism for thousands of years and which can be shown to be the backbone of Essene religious thought?

The following articles provide the facts you need to see and understand in order to make an intelligent decision of the matter; for after all, after all the data is consumed and the smoke clears, we are commanded to worship the Father in Spirit and Truth! Have we?

ANALYSIS OF MAJOR ESSENE RELIGIOUS BELIEFS AND TRADITIONS

ESSENE RELIGOUS DOCTRINES AS TAKEN FROM THEIR RELIGIOUS LITERATURE

The Risen Savior

In the Essene documents at our disposal, we find no specific statement that the Teacher had risen from the grave and ascended to heaven; however, the doctrine of his Parousia (same thing Paul would later teach about Jesus) implies his resurrection.

The Sacrificial God-Man

Scholars have traced from its source the evolution of the central doctrine of Christianity, which is that the savior-god who dies that men may live and become immortal is himself the eucharistic bread and wine by which this miraculous transformation occurs. This is the same thing we see since Osiris.

Answer for yourself: Where did the New Testament derive this concept?

Among the Jews, no one but the Essences practiced this sacrament before the advent of Christianity; and Buddhism, which could have provided the only discernible elements in the Gospel not derived from Essenism, had no soter/savior whatever. While they were appropriating so much else from the Pythagoreans, it is unreasonable to believe that the Essenes should have failed to adopt the heart of the mystery. In some way, they identified their food with a concept of the sacrificed deity. If you start from Osiris and trace the godman religious synthesis down through history it will not take a rocket scientist to see the same "Osiris Pattern" filtered down through successive great nations and it ultimate resting place in Essenic - Apocalyptic Judaism. The Pharisees did not accept this fringe astral theology and the Jewish nation does not today as well.

The Sacraments

However, the Eucharist among the early Essenes must have been of an impersonal nature; for we can find no evidence that before 63 B.C.E. they had any specific savior-god but only an "office"; and this would indeed have been incompatible in a cult established upon Jewish tradition. Nothing could be more difficult than to engraft the soter/savior upon Judaism. Before that date, the bread and wine they took so reverently must have been considered primarily as a consecrated gift.

The New Soteriology-The New Salvation The Essenes Promoted

The death of the Teacher of Righteousness, however, must have effected an almost immediate revolution in their soteriology. We learn specifically that the Essene Teacher of Righteousness was "the Savior of the World . . . the sinless one who shall die for ungodly men in the blood of the covenant." He was God, the King of Heaven, appearing in the form of a man, who walked humbly among men and was seen in Jerusalem.

The electrifying effect of this doctrine cannot be overstated: for instantly the age-old concepts which had grown up around Osiris-Adonis-Dionysus and the Persian Saoshyant crystallized themselves about this new god man who had also suffered the very fate of his divine predecessors.

There is even a cryptic passage in which a virgin-birth seems attributed to him: "And I saw that from Judah was born a virgin wearing a linen garment, and from her was born a Lamb, without spot (Joseph, II, 74).

After the death of the Teacher, the sacramental meal of the Essenes took on a new and more potent symbolism and became for them mystically the blood and the body of their savior-god. He became their heavenly bread and the gift of everlasting life. This is the same thing we see by devotees of:

- Osiris
- Adonis
- Attis
- Dionysus
- Demeter and Persephone
- Orpheus
- Isis and Serapis
- Mithra

Answer for yourself: You need to ask yourself is what is ascribed to Jesus by Paul and other New Testament writers is a unique and Divine revelation or just a re-make of an older pagan ritual that finds its origin in sun-worship?

ESSENE, CHRISTIAN, PYTHAGOREAN, AND BUDDHIST DOCTRINE

If one undertakes an in-depth study into the areas covered by our website, then it is easy for him to see and demonstrate for his own benefit the relationship of Christianity to other faiths. This similarity excludes the Sadducees since they were antithetical to the Essenes and the message Jesus taught on every point of doctrine and practice; nor do we include the Pharisees, who were similar to the Essenes only in Sabbath observation and partially in certain eschatological concepts, which their successors, the rabbis, soon abandoned. One should, however, include the Buddhists, who were the source of several important elements found in the Synoptics; and also the Pythagoreans, who were the direct progenitors of the Essenes, as were the latter of the message we find preached by Jesus in the New Testament.

If such a study is undertaken, then will find that Essene doctrine or practice reproduced the Pythagorean religious beliefs in 31 of out a possible 44 subdivisions or Pythagorean religious beliefs. What is important for our study is that the Early Church taught 34 of them! What is even more amazing is that under 15 of them the ideology of Buddhism recurs in the Gospels; and finally that the Essenes reproduced Zoroastrian religious doctrine in 6 of the categories as well.

But we must emphasize that the Gospels contains certain specific Buddhist elements: among these are the repudiation of the Sabbath, the establishment of democracy, and the abolition of oaths, secrecy, classes, and the novitiate. Most important are the doctrines, stated or implied, that the poor are holy per se, that thrift, industry, and self-reliance are of little value or actually criminal, that the indigent are entitled to alms, and that a mendicant society should replace the self-supporting communist brotherhood. In all these respects Jesus is seen as more of a Buddhist rather than an Essene-Pythagorean.

Finally, upon your personal examination, will can see that there exists a whole complex of religious doctrines found only among the Essenes and in the Gospels: these deal with eschatology, the soter/savior, the Messiah, and the Parousia. The Essenes were the first who taught the doctrine of irrevocable hell-torture for every unbeliever; who combined the concept of the soter with that of the Messiah; and who proclaimed the Parousia. All of these were reproduced intact in the Gospels and became the basic doctrines of Christianity through the Epistles of Paul.

When the Gospels portray Jesus as repudiating the fanatical Sabbath observation so holy to the Essenes, the Gospel writers portray him and his Buddhist internationalism most dramatically. Other Buddhistic divergencies developed in part from the pressure of the situation: when he began his ministry, he was convinced that the kingdom of God was immediately at hand. The time was short: he was under the fearful compulsion of creating a mass-movement immediately. Instead of making it difficult to join as had other mystery-sects like the Essenes, he invited everyone; oaths and initiations were consequently impractical; disciples were not forbidden to divulge his doctrines, but encouraged to do so; in his democratic following, there was room neither for seniority nor distinction; and he did not find it expedient to make an issue of economic exploitation. After all, in the kingdom now imminent, all the saints would be equal forever.

And we should note that although the Essenes were fanatics in their observation of the Sabbath, they did not follow the entire Mosaic Law. It is almost certain that they were vegetarians; and nothing indicates that they believed in circumcision. We know that they repudiated the Temple worship and sacrifices, and much else which was sacred to the reigning priesthood. The seeds of a classless and international philosophy were present in their ideology; Jesus simply went far beyond them.

JESUS AND THE ESSENES

Several Hypotheses

It may be interesting to note that the Essene-Christian relationship has long fascinated New Testament scholars, among whom several Germans developed intriguing rationalist theories. Bahrdt, 1784-1792, Venturini, 1800, Gforer, 1831-38, Hennel, 1840, and van der Alm, 1863, published disquisitions in which Jesus was represented as trained or controlled by the Essenes, who, in several of the hypotheses, staged his crucifixion with or without the cooperation of the Romans, revived him after the ordeal, and so created the myth that he had risen from the grave. This is just conjecture at best. I personally feel that he was resurrected, but personal faith is free to anyone. But the fact remains that many discount his resurrection.

About 1830, Thomas de Quincey wrote an essay (Essenism and Christianity) in which he contends that no such group as Essenes ever existed, that Josephus merely mistook the Christians— whom he never mentions even oncel—for these strange persons, who were certainly not then known by that name. He argues that to assume the prior existence of a large and tightly organized group of men with teachings identical to those of the Christians would be a deadly offense against the faith: "If the Essenes were not the early Christians in disguise, then was Christianity, as a knowledge, taught independently of Christ; nay, in opposition to Christ" (Coleridge, Works, VIII, p. 136), which, he implies, is impossible and therefore a blasphemous opinion.

The significant fact is that all these and many others recognized the substantial identity of Essenism with the Gospels and Jesus long before the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Since 1947, more realistic theories have appeared. Mr. Dupont-Sommer declares: "The Galilean Master, as he is represented to us in the writings of the New Testament, appears in many respects as an astonishing reincarnation of the Master of Justice" (Dead Sea Scrolls, p. 99). Mr. Edmund Wilson says, concerning the monastery at Kirbet-Qumran: "this structure that endures, between the bitter waters and precipitous cliffs, with its oven and its inkwell, its mill and its cesspool, its constellations of sacred fonts and unadorned graves of its dead, is perhaps, more than Bethlehem or Nazareth, the cradle of Christianity" (The Scrolls from the Dead Sea, pp. 97-98).

JESUS WAS NOT SPONSORED BY THE ESSENES...AT LEAST NOT AT FIRST....NOT UNTIL HIS CRUCIFIXION

In spite of the detailed parallelism existing between Essenism and the Gospels and the portrayal of Jesus by Paul in his Epistles, it would be a serious error to believe that Jesus could have been a commissioned spokesman for the Order, a mistake which various German scholars made for his divergencies were quite drastic. The revelation of himself as the Messiah would necessarily have been a monstrous blasphemy in Essene eyes, probably as much as in Pharisaic. And the greatest treason of all would have consisted in the simple publication of their esoteric doctrines, and the application of them to himself. All that awaited was the fulfillment of the reincarnation and death of their prior Teacher of Righteousness; then the parallels would be apparent that their "Teacher" had returned. But yet, lacking was the fulfillment of the Jewish Scriptures. But conveniently, the doctrine of the Parousia, the imminent return or "coming" of the Daniel Son of Man was the remedy to that. The prophecies will be fulfilled in a second Advent. Christians express the same belief today; while the Jews look for the first coming of their "true" Messiah who will not leave them to be killed by the Gentile powers of the world, but vindicate them by the fulfillment of the Jewish Scriptures.

BUDDHIST ELEMENTS

And beyond all this we must note again that certain elements in the Gospel are Buddhist and not Essene-Pythagorean at all, of which the most important was the substitution of a type of communism for the self-dependent community. We know that Asia Minor teemed with Buddhist proselytizers in the first century; and that almost no one could have been immune from their propaganda. We know also that the Pythagorean societies differed from the Buddhist primarily in that the former were organizations of working and self-reliant communists while the latter, living in idleness, depended upon gifts and beggary. The Buddhists therefore emphasized the importance of charity, of giving to the poor, whose rights and virtues they always proclaimed. In all this, the Gospel Jesus is far more Buddhist than Essene.

Once we admit that this element in the Gospel is Buddhist, other problems are also solved. Whereas the Essenes were a secret order with a tightly knit membership, regimented into classes, who imparted their doctrines to initiates only after prolonged discipline, the Buddhists broadcast theirs to all who would listen: and they offered to heal the sick, the halt, the lame, and the blind, and to establish a universal kingdom in which private wealth, poverty, and exploitation would be abolished forever. Christians, like Buddhists, had no barriers to membership, no oaths, no novitiates, no distinct orders among themselves, and no rule against divulging their doctrines. In all this also the Gospels and the New Testament Jesus was patterned upon Buddhist rather than Essene antecedents.

However, it is also indisputable that the Gospel, by and large, is not Buddhist, but Essene; that many aspects of Buddhism were present in Pythagoreanism from the beginning and could thus have been transmitted to the Essenes indirectly; and that, finally, many elements are therefore common to Buddhism, Pythagoreanism, Essenism, and the Gospels, such as communism, rejection of marriage and family, and the glorification of personal poverty.

A REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT

We must realize that Essenism as well as the Gospels belong among those movements of social revolt which have agitated mankind some three thousand years, the appeal of which has been to the poor and the unsuccessful and which were designed to ameliorate the sufferings of, and supply consolation to, the exploited and the downtrodden. Their ultimate source was Buddhism, which sanctified idleness and mendicancy as the holy pathway to Nirvana, and which renounced labor, property, sex, and family as the only practical means by which to escape the frustration of unrequited toil. All such movements tend to repudiate the nationalist ideal in favor of a classless, international communion of the poor and the exploited. The philosophy proclaimed by Gautama, however, was so altered by the Pythagoreans as to make themselves self-supporting; but they still refused to surrender any of their labor to parents, brothers, sisters, wives, children, or relatives, and very little, if any, to the state. Such movements have always been distinguished by a fervently proclaimed brotherhood among the oppressed and a violent hatred for the wealthy and the powerful.

DOCTRINES PARALLEL TO THE CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS BELIEFS SYSTEM

Many scholars have demonstrated that The Book of Enoch, The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, and other Essene documents written before or immediately after the death of the last Teacher contain a whole galaxy of concepts central to the Synoptics. Among these we may list the doctrines of:

- Everlasting torture in hell for the damned
- Eternal bliss in heaven for the saints, a dogma previously unknown in that precise form
- The doctrine of the Last Judgment
- The concept of the god-man prophet who appears as a man in the flesh
- This same sun-god-man who has been resurrected from the grave after 3 days
- This same sun-godman who combines the functions of the Greek soter with those of the Persian Saoshyant
- The concept of the Son of Man as the universal Messiah of Moral Judgment
- The conviction that the possession of property is incompatible with righteousness
- The certainty that those who seek material wealth or who profit by the labor of others must spend eternity in hell fire
- The persuasion that only by practicing communal brotherhood on earth is it possible for human beings to achieve eternal salvation
- The principle of non-violence even under the most extreme provocation since we know that sinners will be punished amply in the hereafter
- The teaching that the righteous will come into possession of the lands and houses of the wicked when these are dragged away to the everlasting flames
- The belief that the kingdom of the saints is to be established in a renewed and renovated earthly and heavenly kingdom by the savior at his second and imminent appearance

Before 63 B.C.E., the Essenes had no savior-god; but the execution of their most celebrated Teacher provided them with this crucial necessity, precisely as the crucifixion of Jesus served the same purpose in the Christian Church.

After 60 B.C.E., therefore, the Essenes projected their second basic and original doctrine which reappeared in the Gospels and the life of Jesus: that of the incarnate god-man who dies sacrificially for the sins of the world, is resurrected from the dead, ascends to heaven, where he sits at the right hand of God, whence He (as a godman) is to return in a final Parousia to judge the quick and the dead and establish the kingdom of heaven.

On this website we have demonstrated conclusively by the chronological evolution of religious beliefs, beginning in Egypt and Sumer, and following the trail through the Aryan nations that sun-worship personified in soter/saviors of almost every Gentile nation, culminated in a religious doctrine of an incarnate-godman who dies for the sins of his followers and who offers Eternal Life to his devotees through the sacrament of eating his flesh and drinking his blood, either literally or figuratively, in a pre-mass, or as it is known today, as the Eucharist!

There is truly nothing new under the sun! These same concepts were adopted by these Essenes who had rejected Judaism in toto in the first century because of many factors; the least of which was the crucifixion of their "Teacher" and their rejection from their rightful Priesthood by the Hasmoneans a hundred years or more earlier. Simply said, in such repudiation of normative Biblical Judaism along with its Temple and sacrificial system, they generated their own "new revelations" that condemned the status-quo and elevated themselves with a hope of Divine intervention to right the wrong. It did not happen as history attests. But yet millions read their documents which found a re-print in the New Testament and believe this over the Torah which they had rejected along with the many of the Prophets. Even more, their predecessors had purposefully altered the translation of the Torah and the Prophets in Alexandria, Egypt, over 200 years earlier when they transformed a Davidic Messiah into a godman of virginous birth as had been done previously by almost all Gentile nations involved in sun-worship.

WORLD SIGNIFICANCE

The importance of the Essenes in the history of the occident can scarcely be overstated. Had they never existed, there would have been no Christianity and therefore no Catholic Church. In that event one of the rationalistic, scientific, and exclusive cults of Persia would have become dominant in the Graeco-Roman world: possibly Mithraism, but much more probably Manichaeism. Many scholars are convinced that had either of these defeated all its rivals, Greek enlightenment would have prevailed after a bitter struggle and the civilization of the ensuing centuries as well as the life of every human being in the western world would have been totally different from what it has been during the last sixteen hundred years.

SO WHAT CONCLUSION CAN WE MAKE?

The evidence strongly suggests that Jesus had for some years been a member of the Essene community, but had developed serious doubts concerning the validity of its Judaic discipline, and, even more significantly, had become convinced that he, instead of the long overdue Teacher, was the true incarnate Messiah in his human manifestation. During this period of reorientation, he may well have come under the influence of a Buddhist proselytizer, from whom he could have adopted the missionary methods of Gautama. But since he had no following and probably no preeminence among the Essenes, he could not possibly reorganize the Community, which had become thoroughly fixed in its doctrines. His only alternative was, therefore, either to live and die in complete obscurity as an obedient member of the Order, or, combining the Essene synthesis with certain Buddhist and Torah concepts, to go forth as an individual, broadcasting the seditious tenets of the sect, proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord, and hinting broadly that he was Himself the Messiah. In doing this, he would, of course, be repudiated by the Order; he would place his life in constant jeopardy, and his very survival from day to day would depend upon the utmost caution. In any event, he could not long continue in such a perilous undertaking. Schonfield and other scholars believe that Jesus consciously re-created the career of the Teacher of Righteousness and pursued by design a course of action which would lead inevitably to his sacrificial and spectacular death as an atonement for the sins of mankind, persuaded that in this way but in no other could he establish the kingdom of heaven. Basically Jesus had faith in a Divine intervention as had occurred with the Maccabee victory over Antiochus Epiphanies earlier in the history of Israel.

Once dead, his teachings were picked up by those who saw in his crucifixion a "fulfillment" of the Teacher's prophecies than a second Messiah would follow him. These doctrines, which were already a closely-knit synthesis of already established beliefs of the Buddhists and Pythagoreans, were later mixed with already-established pagan doctrine. Over time, after the dissolution of Israel following the 70 C.E. war, this unique synthesis of religious doctrines began to take hold; especially in the Gentile nations as they recognized such a "bridge" to their already held pagan notions which can be shown to be traced directly to sun-worship. Over all, this must be seen, in its final form as we see it today in Christianity, an almost total repudiation of Moses, Sinai, and Biblical Judaism. Jesus possessed an immense advantage among the Greeks over his predecessor, the Essene Teacher; through his absorption of Buddhist techniques and appeal, He laid the foundations for a mass-movement. And when a few zealous missionaries began proclaiming the Risen Christ, Jesus' message, his Gospel spread like wildfire in the Graeco-Roman world, which was already athirst for just this "elixir of life" (Larson, The Story of Christian Origins, 1977, p. 280-292).

What you, the reader must separate, is this. Today Gentile Christianity is a religious synthesis; but so was the Judaism of Jesus' day. Jesus, I personally believe, taught the best, lived the best, and died the best. His dedication to the improvement of the human condition was paramount before his face every day. His truth came from many sources: Torah, Moses, the Prophets, David, Solomon, Buddha, Pythagoras, etc. No one holds the patent on God's truths. Some have them; some don't. There were many voices crying "in the wilderness" of religious confusion in the days of Jesus. Jesus was just a voice in the crowd crying out for those who had "ears to hear" the message of God. God has has given His message to not just the Jews down through history. Remember Abraham who was a non-Jew? How about Noah?

What I am saying is that in the teachings of Jesus the Kingdom of God went forth as he helped people draw closer to God. His death was a catalyst that took to the Gentile world such a message. It is a crying shame that mixed with his words are those of the New Testament writes who merged this the Divine message of Jesus blatant sun-worship and idolatry and wove it together in such a way that the normal man cannot detect it. Winners write history; they also write religious works. Just look at Rome for a minute in that day and time and examine the men and their ideologies that wrote later about Jesus and made him into a sun-god. These man had a lot in common with the Essenes who also believed in a sun-godman. Jesus never, I said never, said he was this man. Millions have said that about him, but they are wrong, besides idolators. Without study you are assured to die and meet YHWH face to face and be told you "have done evil in the sight of the LORD" as were the Kings of Israel who lead the people astray. Jesus took the "best" from each "ideology" or "theology" and shared their truths as his "good news." There is a big difference though in teaching practical love, sacrifice, giving, alms, sharing, faith that acts, love in action, as Jesus did, and putting into him mouth words and doctrines of pagan origin and sun-worship he NEVER would have believed and taught as a good Jew who himself believed he was the hope of Israel and the world. The New Testament is full of them and you just don't know where these "land-mines" are located as you have been taught to read the whole thing as if "God-breathed."

I challenge you to SERIOUSLY read the websites we have provided. Yes, its a lot of material. But many, many lies have been told and ignorance reigns supreme today as falsehoods pass for truth. May your love for God compel you to hunger and thirst for righeousness.....your own.....for that is what the Torah from Sinai and Moses teaches. Repentance is the remedy of sin and not a crucified sun-godman created by astrologers and Gentile star-gazers for over 6 thousand years. And the same message played again by a group of dissent excommunicated Priests in the wilderness who would later reject Sinai and create their "own Torah" to replace the one handed down by holy men of old must be exposed for what it is....sour-grapes theology.

Let me leave you with a statement I truly love by Lawrence Schiffman, in his Reclaiming the Dead Sea Scrolls. He says that the "Essene Apocalyptic is totally discredited". It is time for you, the God loving Christian, to know the same. Shalom and love in my heart for you.

CONSTANTINE THE GREAT....ROMAN EMPEROR....SUN-WORSHIPPER... 307-337 A.D.

In 325 A.D. the Roman Catholic Church was created by a pagan emperor named Constantine. It was only superficially a Christian Church. The First Nicean Council as assembled to work out the details. While it was supposed to have been made up of Christian elders from five major Christian centers (Rome, Athens, Alexandria, Jerusalem and Antioch), it also included elders of all the major Pagan religions of Rome. Bishops from the cults of Mithras, Tammuz, Oannes (Dagon), Ceres, Janus, Bacchus, Apollo, Osiris, Jupiter, and Constantine's own religion: Sol Invictus, were invited. It was Constantine's wish that all of the Pagan religions, then at odds with each other, creating unneccesary conflicts, be unified into one "Catholic" church. "Catholic" means universal. The proceedings of that council were conducted by Constantine with an iron hand, and one of the positions which he insisted upon, and got, was to make Pistis a doctrine of the new church. Gnosticism could not be tolerated, because it encouraged its members to question authority. Pistis was thus politically expedient, because it forbade questioning.

This is a very common copper coin of the Roman emperor Constantine the Great who ruled 307 to 337 AD. This coin is 23 millimeters in diameter (almost an inch, like a quarter). It says his name and three titles on the obverse reading clockwise (the legend begins at 8:00):

CONSTANTINVS P F AVG

(The spaces between words do not usually appear on Roman coins.) Roman names usually end in "VS" which is the Roman way of writing "us" (as in the names Marcus and Lucius). We call him "Constantine," they called him "Constantinvs".

In the legend, "P F" abbreviates "Pius", which means "pious" or "dutiful", and "Felix," which means "happy". Finally, "AVG" abbreviates "Augustus", which is the Roman title for "emperor". Again, the "V" shape serves as the modern letter "u".

The reverse depicts a standing figure of Sol, the sun god, naked but for a cloak, raising his right hand in blessing and holding a globe in his left hand. Constantine invoked the support of the sun god before he converted to Christianity. Can you make out the letters in the reverse legend? It is around (beginning at 7:00), with PLG below, and S and F in the fields to the left and right of Sol. The legend translates to "Sol, invincible comrade (of Constantine)." The "PLG" mark is a mint mark of Lugdunum, now the modern Lyons in southern France. No one knows what the extra symbols S and F in the field mean, but they do distinguish this issue of coins from other similar issues.

So what we have here is evidence that although Constantine professed Christianity he maintained his pagan religious beliefs in the Sun-gods as well. This influence will be felt mightily at the Council of Nicea in 325 A.D. for it is here, under Constantine's influence that the Jewish Jesus, and his faith, is transformed and made to mimic the already existing Gentile Pagan religious beliefs as held by Constantine.

ADOPTIONISM...THE EARLIEST BELIEF ABOUT JESUS

Put most simply, adoptionism is the theory that Jesus was in nature a man who became God by adoption. Most identify this event with his baptism. The Ebionites were the earliest to teach "adoptionism" concerning the nature of Jesus.

The earliest extant work which expresses this position is the Shepherd of Hermas, thought to be written by the brother of the bishop of Rome about A D 150. It taught that the Redeemer was a virtuous man chosen by God, and with him the Spirit of God was united. He did the work to which God had called him; in fact, he did more than was commanded. Therefore he was by divine decree adopted as a son and exalted to great power and lordship. This book was consistently considered "scripture" by the earliest church writers and finds its way into the earliest "canon" lists of the Early Church Fathers. Later it will be removed and we no longer have it in our New Testament for obvious reasons.

Adherents of this Christology who were declared heretics in the third century asserted it had at one time been the dominant view in Rome and that it had been handed down by the apostles. This view was perpetuated in the second and third century church by the dynamistic monarchians, who taught that Christ was a mere man on whom the power of God came and who was then adopted or constituted the Son of God. A leader in that general movement was Theodotus, who came to Rome from Byzantium about 190. He taught that Jesus was a man who was born of a virgin through the operation of the Holy Spirit. After the piety of his life had been tested, the Holy Spirit descended on him at the baptism. By this means he became Christ and received the power for his special ministry. But he was still not fully God; that was achieved through resurrection. Theodotus was excommunicated by the Roman Church, and the effort of his followers to found a separate church early in the third century had little success.

Adoptionism was an attempt to explain the divine and human natures in Christ and their relation to each other. And as the great Christological debates raged during the fourth and fifth centuries, there were always a few who could be accused of taking this position. It did not flare again extensively, however, until the latter part of the eighth century, when it produced a commotion in the Spanish and Frankish churches. Elipandus, bishop of Toledo from c. 780, in his writings on the Trinity expressed the view that Christ was an adopted son; Felix, bishop of Urgel in the Pyrenees, taught a similar position soon thereafter. Numerous local churchmen opposed them; and their teachings were condemned by three synods under Charlemagne, who assumed the position of ruler of the church in his realm and who was concerned with its unity. Pope Adrian I also became involved, and the recantation of both men was obtained. They had a numerous following, however, and extensive efforts were required to bring these people back into the fold. The effects of the controversy lasted for decades in Toledo. Possibly remnants of the old Arian heresy contributed to the popularity of adoptionism at this time. A sound refutation of adoptionism was never made, and leanings in that direction appeared in some scholastic writings during the late Middle Ages.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #1

Over the years our faithful readership has learned a lot. Again we make significant strides in this current study in discerning truth from error that surrounds such very important topics for the Christian like the crucifixion of Jesus and its relationship to atonement as taught by Paul in the New Testament. Again, if you have read this ministry's materials over the last years you have come complete understanding that much that is found in the New Testament has pagan origins and often this involves such "sacred" Christian doctrines like atonement. This escapes the new believer and often the "seasoned" believer if he has never had the opportunity for such study. If you are a new reader of our ministry's materials then the above statements can be quite difficult to handle and often this diminished one's desire to even look into such subjects. But truth is truth and lies are lies and anyone's worship of the Creator demands faithfulness to our Creator's Truth.

Not often, but in this case I feel warranted to caution my readership that certain necessary foundations will be necessary to be able to comprehend, understand, assimilate, and draw the proper conclusions from the data that will be presented in this series of articles. Let me explain.

Over the years we at Bet Emet have demonstrated that the Christian Old Testaments in the vast majority of Christian Bibles are a compilation of purposeful misquotes and mistranslations of the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text which has been preserved by the Jewish people for over thousands of years. This shocking revelation is open for all to see if they only knew it existed and were interested to look. Of paramount importance for the Christian are their cardinal doctrines of atonement as much of it is taken from Isaiah 53. The problem is that Isaiah the prophet as read in the Hebrew Masoretic text in pertinent passages like Isa. 53 reads completely different than the "Christian edition". We as followers of Yeshua deserve a translation and not a fictional creationism. This purposeful errors in translation was done long, long ago and few Christians and Pastors are aware. They never knew to look! This fact alone means the Isaiah 53 that Christians read is not the Isaiah 53 that Yeshua read! This should up set you; especially since most of the New Testament's atonement teachings are grounded in a falsified text. So, before you read this series of articles, it is mandatory for you to become aware of such a terrible problem that exists with the Christian's Old Testament in the places enumerated. Understand as well that when the New Testament references Isaiah that it as well is mistaken and is quoting and referring to an adulterated text. You should understand up front that the Jews can be shown to only have translated the first five books of the Old Testament into Greek and the rest was done later by non-Jews at the religious capital of the world in that day…Alexandria Egypt. This explains how "pagan ideas" and "pagan religious beliefs" were intermixed among the pages of your Christian Old Testament and was later by default referenced by the New Testament. Our ministry has prepared a detailed expose of such conspiracy and have available on request the documentation of such errors in Isaiah 53. This material is necessary for anyone who desires to read the articles forthcoming in this current series.

Likewise, it is necessary before continuing this series of articles for one to completely understand the Sacrificial System in 'DETAIL". Over the years of my pastorate I encountered continually a level of misinformation and mis-instruction in Gentile Christianity that was of a staggering proportion. Whether one listens to the radio, tunes in on the television, or even listens to Pastors Sunday after Sunday the level of misinformation is staggering. I ought to know; I used to be part of it. I was well educated in one of the finest religious institutions in America where I obtained a Masters in theology with high honors. I continued to study and dedicated myself to such following Seminary and it was there by using the many skills acquired in Seminary that I researched almost every area of my faith. My intentions were not to prove anything wrong at all; I was just in love with God. I wanted to draw closer to Him and help my fellowship do likewise and the better equipped and prepared I made myself the better I could serve the people in this capacity. However, over the years I encountered many things that challenged my "faith" and what I had been taught to accept on "faith alone". Not wishing to be bested, I set out to prove the detractors wrong and vindicate myself and my faith. Honestly, over the years my knees had to bow to a higher truth often as I encountered facts, archeological evidence, reproducible history, and unrefutable evidence that proved that much of what I had accepted by "faith alone" was in truth "lies and error". I had been duped and never knew it; that is, until I studied my blessed assurance off. I could list almost innumerable accounts where by Christian religious belief system was shown to be in error. This is simply because my Christian religious belief system was grounded in a document that could, with just a little effort, be shown to be incompatible with the "facts". I had no choice but to repent because now God and me both knew the truth. If I had to pick an area in Christian theology where almost little light and truth resides that would be in the Christian's understanding of the Sacrificial System. My whole Christian life I had been taught that the "Jews" believe "this" and "that" about the Sacrificial System. Again, I was taught wrong. It was not until I met some Rabbis and asked them one on one about many questions that I had about the Bible that I was able to be the beneficiary of the "light" to the nations. Imagine my surprise when I found out that what I had been told by my Christian leaders that the Jews believe was just the opposite. These encounters only provoked more study on my part. I have said all this to say this: it is mandatory that you have an accurate understanding of the Sacrificial System, the dynamics involved in the role of the blood as it "represents" the soul of the sacrifice. You will come to understand that the whole of the Sacrificial System in reality did not PROVIDE ATONEMENT, it only "WITNESSED" to an already received atonement prior to the slaying of the animal! This crucial truth is mandatory for any Christian to understand even if his goal was not to read the remainder of these articles.

If you have not had the opportunity yet to acquaint yourself with this necessary knowledge, STOP right not and request these valuable and vital informative articles be sent you at once. I tell everyone to believe nothing I say or teach. You must study this out for yourself to prove to yourself these things be so. The references are available to the serious student…just ask. We will be glad to help you find the source documents that expose your "falsehoods" and that will lead you to repentance and more proper worship of God. My prayer is that you will respond and study these articles in detail and let it soak in. Use the greatest organ God ever gave man; his mind and THINK! Now and only now will you be able to handle what comes next. Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #2

It is taken for granted that the current reader has accomplished the goal of the first article: you have read the materials necessary to continue our study in this set of articles. Hopefully the goals were reached:

1. You now possess a more complete understanding of what the original Isaiah both wrote and taught. Along with this comes a major change in your understanding of "the Suffering Servant" as Israel and the role it plays in the atonement. You now know better that to read only "Jesus" into every verse!
2. You now possess a complete understanding of how atonement was accomplished prior to the sacrifice of the animal and it's blood being placed on the altar in communion and right standing with God. You now understand the whole process of animal sacrifice was but a picture of the soul of the sacrificer "at that moment". It either was "right" with God or not when then animals was sacrificed. Along with this you can now understand Isaiah 1, for instance, when such wanton destruction of animal life without the necessary spiritual dynamics at work in the heart of the sacrificer "wearied" God.

THE ORIGIN OF ATONEMENT…YOU MIGHT BE SURPRISED

Almost everyone will point to Adam and Eve and the animals skins and say: "see there, that is the first sacrifice for sin". Where is the word "sin offering" mentioned in the text? Somehow I missed it. Well, then they will say: "Cain and Abel brought offerings and these were for sin". Again, where does it say that these were "sin offerings" or that they brought atonement? We could go on and mention Noah, but again such offerings have something in common with all that went before: the complete silence or mention of : "sin offering", or "atonement". Dear one, if we choose to read into anything we read what we want to "believe" then there is no purpose in continuing our study of anything. We are to draw out, exegete, the text to discern what is meant in the event under question.

For your information the first mention of "sin offering" and "atonement" in the Bible is found FOLLOWING THE GOLDEN CALF incident:

Exod 29:14

14 But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin offering.

Exod 29:33

33 And they shall eat those things wherewith the atonement was made, to consecrate and to sanctify them: but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy.

What should concern us is if these two related incidents are the first examples of "sin offering" and "atonements" known to man.

The punishment of an individual by crucifixion, for claiming to be "King of the Jews," "Son of God," or "The Christ;" which are the causes assigned by the writers of the New Testament for the Crucifixion of Jesus, would need but a passing glance in our study, were it not for the fact that there is much attached to it of a DOGMATIC and HEATHENISH nature. Therefore this topic demands more considerably more than a "passing glance." The doctrine of atonement for sin has been preached long before the doctrine was deduced from the Christian Scriptures; even longer than the writing of the Old Testament. Before the period assigned for the birth of Christ Jesus, the poet Ovid had assailed the demoralizing delusion with the most powerful shafts of philosophic scorn: "When thou thyself are guilty," says he, "why should a victim die for thee? What folly it is to expect salvation from the death of another."

The idea of expiation by the sacrifice of a god was to be found among the Hindus even in Vedic times. The sacrificer was mystically identified with the victim, which was regarded as the ransom from sin, and the instrument of its annulment. The Rig-Veda represents the gods as sacrificing Purusha, the primeval male, supposed to be coequal with the Creator. This idea is even more remarkably developed in the Tandya-brahmanas, thus:

"The lord or creatures offered himself a sacrifice for the gods."

And again, in the Satapatha-brahmana:

"He who, knowing this, sacrifices the Purusha-medha, or sacrifice of the primeval male, becomes everything" (Monier Williams: Hinduism, pp. 36-40).

Prof. Monier Williams, from whose work on Hinduism I quoted above, brings to our attention that long before Moses and any Old Testament there existed in pagan religion mystical allusions to the sacrifice of a representative man.

THE $64,000 DOLLAR QUESTION

In the pursuit of truth I want to be above board and fair at all costs. This is not always done by those who publish or print their findings. You many not know it but many "opinions" are sold today and read as fact. This is not what we do at Bet Emet. We provide the facts and the evidence and let the reader make up his mind. I believe that you need to make an intelligent decision and that is impossible unless you have the facts.

Such a revelation of the "sacrificial representative man" means either ONE OF three things:

1. YHVH gave primeval mankind the paradigm or pattern of the sacrificial representative man for all mankind…and and there was no need for Israel to be a "light" to anyone…
2. Primeval mankind developed such a pattern of the sacrificial representative man from evolutionary beliefs connected with sun worship…and Paul and others only incorporated Yeshua within an already existing pagan religious belief system when "evangelizing" the Gentiles….these Gentile ambassadors gave the non-Jews nothing new….that that did not already believe or cherish…they only changed the names of their sun gods and elaborated upon these god's atoning deaths..
3. Having read the prior articles on Isaiah 53 and the Sacrificial System, you are beginning to see the horrible evidence that you have not the truth concerning atonement and the meaning of the death of Yeshua

WE BETTER LISTEN TO YESHUA'S WARNING

Matt 24:24

24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

First of all you need to understand the word translated "Christs" in verse 24 only means "anointed" and not what you more than likely thought….a False Messiah. The warning is not to be deceived by many who present themselves as anointed of God for this or that purpose. Believe me, this is rampant today. One only needs to listen to the multitude of conflicting doctrines emanating from over the 2000 different Christian denominations that all preach different Jesuses.

To our question in point.

Answer for yourself: It is possible that in your Christian religious belief system you have, without knowing, accepted a belief in a sacrificial representative man that originated with sun worship and paganism, and have rejected or never known up to now the truths concerning these things addressed in this article?

In the pages that follow I will present OVERWHELMING evidence to help you see the truth. I will not tell you now which of the above 3 scenarios is true. I want you to see the evidence for yourself and you make up your own mind. Understand that faith is necessary and I consider myself a man of faith. However, faith is only necessary in the absence of facts and reproducible evidence. When one deals with facts and evidence little "needs to be hoped for" as Hebrews says except the common sense to recognize truth and facts when you see it. Unfortunately to come to knowledge that dispels the darkness of doubt and error one must read and often reading is technical. In the next pages you will encounter hundreds and hundreds of facts and evidence that will paint for you a picture that will be undeniable to the mind. And before some of our detractors say that faith is not to be intellectualized, let me remind you what Yeshua said was the Greatest Commandment……

36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

Notice Yeshua said man was to love God FIRST with all his heart….what did he mean? Love God with my blood pumping organ? No!

Let us examine the Greek behind the English and see what we learn!

2588 kardia-heart

a) that organ in the animal body which is the center of the circulation of the blood, and, hence, was regarded as the seat of physical life

b) denotes the center of all physical and spiritual life

a) the vigor and sense of physical life

b) the center and seat of spiritual life

1) the soul or mind, as it is the fountain and seat of the thoughts, passions, desires, appetites, affections, purposes, endeavors

2) used of the understanding, the faculty and seat of the intelligence

3) used of the will and character

4) used of the soul so far as it is affected and stirred in a bad way or good, or of the soul as the seat of the sensibilities, affections, emotions, desires, appetites, passions

c) used of the middle or central or inmost part of anything, even though inanimate

If you read the above definitions you found something rather interesting…Yeshua said that the Greatest Commandment was to first love God with all your MIND. He tells us we are to use our seat of intelligence to understand God. So help me that is impossible from prayer alone or else there would not be over a billion Catholics in the world to day praying to Mary. So knowledge of God is very important…and let us understand we are concerned about knowledge that is true and not false.

Hosea 6:6

6 For I [God speaking] desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings.

There we find it again. More than any sacrifice, possibly more than any sacrificial representative man [but we are yet to determine that], God says He desires mankind possess the knowledge of Him more than any sacrifice. Wow! As we continue our study you will be able when finished to say unequivocally whether such sacrifices would include a "representative man" or not.

I would have you hold one thought before we move to the next article.

Answer for yourself: If it can be shown to you that this "representative man and his sacrifice" originated not with YHVH but with sun worship and pagans, then why then were not the Pagans the Lord's chosen people instead of the children of Israel who have rejected such crucified representative men since their origin and yet do so today? Wow, the implications of such a question let alone it's answers are devastating for the New Testament's doctrines and Paul's teachings. Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #3

THE ORIGIN OF SACRIFICE

The idea of redemption from sin through the sufferings and death of a Divine Incarnate Savior, is simply the crowing point of the idea entertained by primitive man that gods demanded a sacrifice of some kind, to atone for some sin, or avert some calamity.

In primitive ages, when men lived mostly on vegetables, they offered only grain, water, salt, fruit, and flowers to the gods, to propitiate them and thereby obtain temporal blessings. But when they began to eat meat and spices, and drink wine, they offered the same; naturally supposing the deities would be pleased with whatever was useful or agreeable to themselves. They imagined that some gods were partial to animals, others to fruits, flowers, etc. To the celestial gods they offered white victims at sunrise, or at open day. To the infernal gods they sacrificed black animals in the night. Each god has some creature peculiarly devoted to his worship. They sacrificed a bull to Mars, a dove to Venus;, and to Minerva, a heifer without blemish, which had never been put to the yoke. If a man was too poor to sacrifice a living animal, he offered an image of one made of bread.

In the course of time, it began to be imagined that the gods demanded something more sacred as offerings or atonements for sin. This led to the sacrifice of human beings, principally slaves and those taken in war, then, their own children, even their most beloved "first born." It came to be an idea that every sin must have it prescribed amount of punishment, and that the gods would accept the life of one person as atonement for the sins of others. This idea prevailed in Greece and Rome; areas where much of the New Testament would be written later [THINK].

In the beginning such sacrifices by one for the sins of others were found only among heroic self-sacrifice for the public good but that would change over time. Cicero says: "The force of religion was so great among our ancestors, that some of their commanders have, with their faces veiled, and with the strongest expressions of sincerity, sacrificed themselves to be immortal gods to save their country" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, Vol. I, p. 303).

In Egypt, offerings of human sacrifices, for the atonement of sin, became an almost daily occurrence. When the Egyptian priests offered up a sacrifice to the gods, they pronounced the following imprecations on the head of the victim:

"If any evil is about to befall either those who now sacrifice, or Egypt in general, may it be averted on his head" (Herodotus: bk. ii, ch. 39).

The idea of atonement finally resulted in the belief that the incarnate "Christ", the Anointed one, the representative man, the God among us, was to save mankind from a curse imposed by God. Man had sinned, and God would not and did not forgive without a propitiatory sacrifice. The curse of God must be removed from the sinful society, and the sinless must bear the load of that curse. It was asserted that divine justice required blood . Now notice this is the religious belief system of Pagans and not Moses or Joshua or David. This religious belief system occurred long, long before Moses, Sinai, or Torah. These are the beliefs of pagans as found from nation to nation as archeology and anthropology have proven. The facts of this religious system are found around the globe and the evidence confront us with the reality of what I said!

You should be curious as to how nations on the other side of the globe, deprived of cell phones in their day, was able to have almost identical copies of the same religion long before there was ever an Abraham or a Moses. The key, as you will find, as I did, was that sun worship was the tie that bonded their religious beliefs together. More on that later.

The belief of redemption from sin by the suffering of a Divine Incarnation, whether by death on a stake, pole, tree, or cross or otherwise, was general and popular among the heathen, centuries before the time of Jesus of Nazareth, and this dogma, no matter how sacred it may have become, or how consoling it may be, must fall along with the rest of the material of which the Gentile Church is built.

Julius Firmicius, referring to this popular belief among the Pagans, says: "The devil has his Christs". This will amaze you but this was the general off-hand manner in which the Christian Fathers disposed of such matters when pagans accused them of copying their pagan religious doctrines. The only resource at hand when cornered was to blame it on the Devil. The Devil was for the Gentile Church, when cornered and exposed by the facts by Pagans who confronted them about their plagiarized religious doctrines, a religious counterfeiter. The Devil, for the church, served as a prophet for things to come. Surely you see the incredibility of such a statement. But what else is new? Most Protestants resort to the same techniques today when such facts come across their path. Some, a little more original, will say that the whole this is nothing but types and figures played over and over again from nation to nation and finally culminating in Jesus of Nazareth. This sounds plausible if it were not for one thing….the existing evidence of sun worship and its inherent doctrines. When one comes to the full understanding of such Pagan worship, along with its manifested evolutionary and variegated religious doctrines, and if one happens to be a traditional Christian, then there is no nightmare worse that this in this life. The absolute horror of the reality will strike home….you are a sun-worshipper for YHVH….and the last time I looked He called people to repent of this and continually spoke very negatively about such religion and people in the Tanakh!

As I have done in prior articles, I will now present a parade of information of staggering proportion. I will first turn to India, where we shall find, in the words of M. l'Abbe Huc, that "the idea of redemption by a divine representative," who came into the world for the express purpose of redeeming mankind, was "general and popular" (Huc's Travels, Vol. I, pp. 326-327).

"A sense of original corruption," says Prof. M. Williams, seems to be felt by all Hindus, as indicated by the following prayer used after the Gayatri by some Vaishnavas:

"I am sinful, I commit sin, my nature is sinful, I am conceived in sin, Save me, O thou lotus-eyed Heri (Savior), the remover of sin" (M. Williams, Hinduism, p. 214).

Chrishna, the virgin-born, "the Divine Vishnu himself," (Vishnu Purana, p. 440), "he who is without beginning, middle or end," (Ibid.), being moved "to relieve the earth of her load," (Ibid.), came upon earth and redeemed man by his suffering…to save him. You need to understand right now we are dealing with a religious belief system of Pagans that preceded Jesus of Nazareth by some 800 years!

The accounts of the deaths of most all virgin-born Saviors of whom I shall speak, are conflicting in some areas. It is stated in one place that such an one died in such a manner, and in another place we may find it stated altogether differently. One might be so inclined to dismiss the matter because of the lack of uniformity surrounding the deaths of the various virgin-born Saviors. But let me assure you that once you come to the knowledge of the vast storehouse of religious doctrines that evolved from Sun Worship, then you will completely understand that each different variety of virgin-born Savior's deaths are nothing more different manifestations of the sun; it setting, the sun being occluded by storms, the change of seasons, eclipse, etc. This will simply amaze you when we come to it!

As the Rev. Geo. W Cox remarks, in his Aryan Mythology, Chrishna is described, in one of his aspects, as a self-sacrificing and unselfish hero, a being who is filled with divine wisdom and love, who offers up a sacrifice which he alone can make (Aryan Mythology, Vol. ii, p. 132). I hope you noticed but not all Pastors are ignorant of this deception. Some have studied to the level to see these things and have been so moved to alert and warn the flock of the terrible conspiracy which has overtaken the brethren. Such a one I believe I am as well.

The Vishnu Purana speaks of Chrishna being shot in the foot with an arrow [think], and states this was the cause of his death. Other accounts, however, state that he was suspended on a tree [think], or in other words "crucified" [think] (Vishnu Purana, pp. 274, 612). Remember this was 800 years prior to Jesus of Nazareth.

Confirmation of the above can be found from Mons. Guigniaut, in his Religion de Antiquite, where he says: "The death of Chrishna is very differently related. One remarkable and convincing tradition makes him perish on a tree, to which he was nailed by the stroke of an arrow".

Rev. J. P. Lundy alludes to this passage of Guigniaut's in his Monumental Christianity, and translates the passage as a "cross" instead of a "tree." One can often find Chrishna as represented as hanging on a cross, and we know that a cross was frequently called the "accursed tree." It was an ancient custom to use trees as gibbets for crucifixion, or, if artificial, to call the cross a tree (Higgins, Anacalypsis, Vol. I, p. 499 and Mrs. Jameson's History of Our Lord in Art, ii, 317, where the cross is called the "accursed tree").

Even later in the Old Testament the writer of Deuteronomy is so influenced as he speaks of hanging criminals upon a tree, as though it was a general custom, and says in Deut. 21:22-23:

22 And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree:

23 His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;) that thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

The subject of the verses is that if one breaks the Law of God and it just so happens to demand the death penalty, then it shall be carried out. Such a criminal must pay the price for his sin for the wages of sin is death, and in particular sometime death in this life! His body was to be hung publicly as a deterrent for others to learn not to follow such disastrous ways. Yet the body, tattered and bruised as it became, was yet made in the image of God and to allow the public display of such a body beyond a day was an affront to God and God would bring judgment on the community if such a body was not removed.

Later Paul recasts Jesus in the tradition of Chrishna when he says in Galatians 3:13: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, 'Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree.'"

It is evident, then, that to be hung on a cross was anciently called hanging on a tree, and to be hung on a tree was called crucifixion. We may therefore conclude from this, and from what we will now see, that Chrishna was said to have been crucified.

It the earlier copies of Moor's Hindu Pantheon, is to be seen representations of Chrishna, with marks of holes in both feet, and in others, of holes in the hands. Some representations show holes in both feet and some even have a round hole in his side like Jesus. Some have hanging from his collar or shirt the emblem of a heart which we often see in pictures of Jesus in the Catholic Church. Instead of the crown of thorns usually put on the head of the Christian Savior, Chrishna has the turreted coronet of the Ephesian Diana.

Rev. J.P. Lundy, speaking of the Christian crucifix, says: "I object to the crucifix because it is an image, and liable to grown in abuse, just as the old Hindu crucifix was an idol" (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, p. 128).

And Dr. Inman says: "Chrishna, whose history so closely resembles our Lord's, was also like him in his being crucified" (Ancient Paths, vol. I, p. 411).

The writers of the New Testament relates that when Jesus was crucified two others were crucified with him, one of whom, through his favor, went to heaven. One of the crucified others reviled him, but the other said to Jesus: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.: And Jesus said to him: "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." According to the Vishnu Purana, the hunter who shot the arrow at Chrishna afterwards said unto him: "Have pity upon me, who am consumed by my crime, for thou art able to consume me!" Chrishna replied: "Fear not thou in the least. Go, hunter, through my favor, to heaven, the abode of the gods." Then it is reported that Chrishna, having united himself with his own pure, spiritual, unborn, undecaying, imperishable and universal spirit, which is one with Vasudeva (God) [the same concept of John 1:1 in describing the Word with God], abandoned his mortal body, and the condition of the threefold equalities [a term used for the same concept of the Christian Trinity] (Vishnu Purana, p. 612). As it the plagiarism has not been proven satisfactorily, one of the titles of Chrishna is "Pardoner of sins," another is "Liberator from the Serpent of death" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. I, p. 72).

The monk Georgius, in his Tibetinum Alphabetum (p. 203) drew the character of a crucified god who was worshiped in Nepal. These crucifixes were to be seen at the corners of roads like the burma shave signs long ago that said "Jesus saves". The monk Georgius called this god Indra.

P. Andrada la Crozius, one of the first Europeans who went to Nepal and Thibet, in speaking of the god whom they worshipped there…Indra…tells us that they said "he spilt his blood for the salvation of the human race, and that he was pierced through the body with nails" [remember this is long before Jesus ever existed]. He further says that, although they do not say he suffered the penalty of the cross, yet they find, nevertheless, figures of it in their books (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. P. 118).

What you need to know is that although the nations of Europe have changed their religions during the past eighteen centuries, the Hindoo has not done so, except very partially. The religious creeds, rites, customs, and habits of though of the Hindus generally, have altered little since the day of Manu, 500 years B. C. (Prof. Monier Williams, Indian Wisdom, p. iv). This means that the concepts we are reading predated Jesus and by over 500-800 years at least and served as a pattern for the crucified representative man of the orient that we find recorded thought the Eastern nations. We find the same story in the New Testament. This should not surprise you. What is of major importance is the absence of such a story from a group of literature…the Jewish Scriptures. The reason is very plain…God sent His revelation to Israel as they were to be a light to these Gentile nations which all have in one way or the other an adaptation of Sun Worship with its hanged/crucified representative man. That is why the Jews have not and will never accept the Jesus' myth for that is what it is.

Answer for yourself: Can anyone wonder why the Jews will not believe the "stores" about Jesus in the New Testament?

In India, in the South at Tanjore, and in the North, at Oude or Ayiondia, was found the worship of the crucified god Bal-li. This god, who was believed to have been an incarnation of Vishnu, was represented with holes in his hands and side (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. pp. 147).

The incarnate god Buddha, although said to have expired not on a tree but at the foot of a tree, is nevertheless described as a suffering Savior, who, "when his mind was moved by pity (for the human race) gave his life like grass for the sake of others" (Max Muller, Science of Religion, p. 224).

Matt 20:28

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

John 10:11

11 I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

A hymn, addressed to Buddha could just as easily be sung to Jesus:

"Persecutions without end, revilings and many prisons, death and murder, these has thou suffered with love and patience, to secure the happiness of mankind, forgiving thine executioners" (Lilly, Buddhism, p. 93).

Buddha was called the "Great Physician" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20), the "Savior of the World" (Ibid., p. 20, 25, 35; Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 247; Huc's Travels, vol. i. pp. 326, 327, and almost any work on Buddhism), the "Blessed One" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20), the "God among Gods" (Johnson, Oriental Religions, p. 604), the "Anointed," or the "Christ" (Ibid.), the "Messiah" (Ibid.), the "Only Begotten" (Ibid.), etc. Remember again this was long, long before Jesus.

Buddha is likewise described as sacrificing his life to wash away the offenses of mankind and thereby to make them partakers of the kingdom of heaven (Cambridge Key, vol. i. p. 118). Referencing New Testament passages to show the similarity would take to much space but you are most likely well aware that this topic occupies a lot of space in the New Testament.

As a spirit in the fourth heaven, he resolves to give up "all the glory, in order to be born into the world," "to rescue all men from their misery and every future consequence of it." He vows "to deliver all men, who are left as it were without a Savior" (Bunson, Angel-Messiah, p. 20).

Most are familiar with Paul's account in Philippines where he speaks of Jesus emptying himself of his godliness as he takes upon himself frail humanity. In Seminary we called this the "Great Kenosis" passage…kenosis is Greek of empty.

Phil 2:6-8

6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:

8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

While in the realms of heaven, and when about to descend upon the earth to be incarnated as a man, Buddha said: "I am now about to assume a body; not for the sake of gaining wealth, or enjoying the pleasures of sense, but I am about to descend and be born, among men, simply to give peace and rest to all flesh; to remove all sorrows and grief from the world" (Beal, Hist. Buddha, p. 33).

M. l'Abbe Huc says: "In the eyes of the Buddhists, this personage (Buddha) is sometimes a man and sometimes a god, or rather both one and the other…a divine incarnation, a man-god, who came into the world to enlighten men, to redeem them, and to indicate to them the way of safety. This idea of redemption by a divine incarnation is so general and popular among the Buddhists, that during our travels in Upper Asia we everywhere found it expressed in a neat formula. If we addressed to a Mongol or a Thibetan the question "Who is Buddah?" he would immediately reply: "The Savior of Men!" (Huc's Travels, vol. i. pp. 326,327).

According to Prof. Max Muller, Buddha is reported as saying: "Let all the sins that were committed in this world fall on me, that the world may be delivered" (Muller, Hist. Sanscrit Literature, p. 80).

Answer for yourself: Can a Christian doubt that these Gentile sun gods, or Buddah, or even Chrishna for that matter, was the "TYPE" of the Savior of the World to which Jesus was made to fit by the writers of the New Testament?

The people of India are no strangers to the doctrine of original sin. It is their invariable belief that man is a fallen being. This is admitted by them from time immemorial (Maurice, Indian Antiquities, vol. v. p. 95, and Williams, Hinduism, p. 214). And what we have seen concerning their beliefs in Chrishna and Buddha unmistakenly shows a belief in a divine Savior, who redeems man, and takes upon himself the sins of the world; so that "Buddha paid it all, all to him is due" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. ii. P. 86). It is said of Buddha: "He in mercy left paradise, and come down to earth, because he was filled with compassion for the sins and miseries of mankind. He sought to lead them into better paths, and took their sufferings upon himself, that he might expiate their crimes and mitigate their punishment that they must otherwise inevitably undergo. The object of his mission on earth was to instruct those who were straying from the right path, expiate the sins of mortals by his own sufferings, and produce for them a happy entrance into another existence by obedience to his precepts and prayers in his name. They always speak of him as one with God from all eternity. His most common title is "The Savior of the World" (Ibid., vol. i. p. 247).

By now you should be understanding that the Sun myths were long in place and were being told over and over again from nation to nation and the similarities are astounding.

There truly is nothing new under the sun (forgive the pun)!

Shalom.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #4

The idea of redemption through the sufferings and death of a Divine Savior, is to be found in almost all the Gentile nations of antiquity. For example, lets begin with the nations of the East, in particular the ancient religions of China. One of their five sacred volumes, called the Y-King, says, in speaking of Tien, the "Holy One": "The Holy One will unite in himself all the virtues of heaven and earth. By his justice the world will be re-established in the ways of righteousness. He will labor and suffer much. He must pass the great torrent, whose waves shall enter into his soul, but he alone can offer up to the Lord a sacrifice worthy of him" (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. p. 211).

An ancient commentator says: "The common people sacrifice their lives to gain bread; the philosophers to gain reputation; the nobility to perpetuate their families. The Holy One (Tien) does not seek himself, but the good of others. He dies to save the world" (Ibid.).

I cannot read the above without thinking of the Gospel of John.

John 3:16

16 For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (KJV)

John 5:30

30 I can of mine own self do nothing. I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me. (KJV)

John 8:50

50 And I seek not mine own glory: there is one that seeketh and judgeth. (KJV)

Tien, the Holy One, is always spoken of as one with God, existing with him from all eternity, "before anything was made". Again John comes to mind.

John 1:1-3

1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

Many will think this is just coincidence. So let us continue to see what we can find.

THE CRUCIFIED "SAVIORS" OF PAGANISM

Osiris and Horus, the Egyptian virgin-born gods, suffered death (Renouf, Religions of Ancient Egypt, p. 178). Mr. Bonwick, speaking of Osiris, says: "He is one of the Saviors or deliverers of humanity, to be found in almost all lands" [only his name was changed from country to country]. "In his efforts to do good, he encounters evil; in struggling with that he is overcome; he is killed" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 155).

Alexander Murray says: "The Egyptian Savior Osiris was gratefully regarded as the great exemplar of self-sacrifice, in giving his life for others" (Murray, Manual of Mythology, p. 348).

The writers of the New Testament carry on this same idea.

Matt 20:28

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

1 Tim 2:6

6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.

Sir. J. G. Wilkinson says of Osiris: "The sufferings and death of Osiris was the great Mystery of the Egyptian religion, and some traces of it are perceptible among other peoples of antiquity (remember Sun Worship?). His being the Divine Goodness, and the abstract idea of "good," his manifestation upon earth (like a Hindu god), his death and resurrection, and his office as judge of the dead in a future state, look like the early revelation of a future manifestation of the deity converted into a mythological fable" (Rawlinson, Herodotus, vol. ii. P. 171).

Horus was also called "The Savior." "As Horus Sneb, he is the Redeemer. He is the Lord of Life and the Eternal One" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, P. 185). He is also called "The Only-Begotten" (Mysteries of Adonai, p. 88).

Attis, who was called the "Only Begotten Son" (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. xxii.) and "Savior," was worshipped by the Phrygians (who were regarded as one of the oldest races of Asia Minor). He was represented by them as a man tied to a tree, at the foot of which was a lamb (Dupuls, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 255). He is also characterized as a man nailed to the tree, or stake, for we find Lactantius making this Apollo of Miletus (anciently, the greatest and the most flourishing city of Ionia, in Asia Minor) say that : "He was a mortal according to the flesh; wise in miraculous works; but being arrested by an armed force by command of the Chaldean judges (Sadducee like), he suffered a death made bitter with nails and stakes" (Dupuls, Origin of Religious Belief, vol. ii).

In this god of the Phrygians, we again have the same myth of the crucified Savior of Paganism.

By referring to Mrs. Jameson's History of Our Lord in Art, it can easily be seen that a common mode of representing a crucifixion was that of a man, tied with cords by the hands and feet, to an upright beam or stake.

Tammuz, or Adonis, the Syrian Adonai (Lord) was another virgin-born god, who suffered for mankind, and who had the title of "Savior." The accounts of his death are conflicting, just as it is with almost all of the so-called Saviors of mankind (including the Christian Savior). As we progress we shall see that the reason for such variation is the multiple variety of Sun Myths that deal with the dying of the sun. Every nation had their own spin to the story it seems, but the basic story was the same.

As if this was not enough evidence and facts from history and the religions of the world to arouse more than an idle curiosity in the Christian believer, the ancients who honored Tammuz and Adonis as their Lord and Savior also celebrated a feast in commemoration of his death (it was their Lord's Supper). An image, intended as a representation of their Lord, was laid on a bed or bier, and bewailed in mournful hymns just as the Roman Catholics do at the present day in their "Good Friday" mass.

During this ceremony the priest murmured: "Trust ye in your Lord, for the pains which he endured, our salvation have procured" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 114).

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, after referring to what we have just stated above, says: "His other name, Adonis, is almost the very Hebrew Adonai or Lord, a well-known title of Christ."

Prometheus was a crucified Savior. He was "an immortal god, a friend of the human race, "who does not shrink even from sacrificing himself for their salvation."

The tragedy of the crucifixion of Prometheus, written by Eschylus, was acted in Athens five hundred years before the Christian Era, and is by many considered to be the most ancient dramatic poem now in existence. The plot was derived from materials even at that time of an infinitely remote antiquity. Nothing was ever so exquisitely calculated to work upon the feelings of the spectators. "His (Divine Sufferer) sorrows were endured for their salvation." The majesty of his silence, whilst the ministers of an offended god were nailing him by the hands and feet to Mount Caucasus, could only be equaled by the modesty with which he relates, "while hanging with arms extended in the form of a cross," his services to the human race, which had brought on him that horrible crucifixion (Eschylus, Prometheus Chained, Harper and Bros., N.Y.). In the myth relating to Prometheus, he always appears as the friend of the human race, suffering in its behalf the most fearful tortures. More than strange is the unique story of Prometheus' friend, Oceanus, the fisherman, as his name Petrroeus indicates. This Oceanus tries unsuccessfully to influence Prometheus to not die for mankind, but being unable to prevail on him to make his peace with Jupiter, by throwing the cause of human redemption out of his hands, forsook him and flew. Now contrast this with Matt. 16:22

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

None remained to be witness of his dying agonies but the chorus of ever-amiable and every-faithful which also bewailed and lamented him

Luke 23:27

27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

In the words of Justin Martyr: "Suffering was common to all of the sons of Jove." They were called the "Slain Ones," "Saviors," "Redeemers," etc.

Bacchus, the offspring of Jupiter and Semele, was called the "Savior" (Knight, Anct. Art and Mythology, p. 98) He was called the "Only Begotten Son," the "Slain One" (Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, p. xxii), the "Sin Bearer"(Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 169), the "Redeemer" (Dupis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 135), etc. Evil having spread itself over the earth, through the inquisitiveness of Pandor, the Lord of the gods is begged to come to the relief of mankind. Jupiter lends a willing ear to the entreaties, "and wishes that his son should be the redeemer of the misfortunes of the world; The Bacchus Savior. He promises to the earth a Liberator..and the universe shall worship him, and shall praise in songs his blessings." In order to execute his purpose, Jupiter overshadows the beautiful young maiden, the virgin Semele, who becomes the mother of the Redeemer."

"It is I (says the lord Bacchus to mankind), who guides you; it is I who protects you, and who saves you; I who am Alpha and Omega." (quoted on the monument of Bacchus)

Hercules, the son of Zeus, was called "The Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 322). The words "Hercules the Savior" were engraven on ancient coins and monuments (Celtic Druids, Taylor, Diegesis, p. 153). He was also called "The Only Begotten," and the "Universal Word." He was re-absorbed into God. He was said by

Ovid to be the sun "Self-produced," the Generator and Ruler of all things, and the Father of time (Mysteries of Adonai, p. 91, and Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. i. p. 322).

Esculapis was distinguished by the epithet "The Savior" (Taylor, Diegesis, p. 153). The Temple erected to his memory in the city of Athens was called: "The Temple of the Savior."

Apollo was distinguished by the epithet "The Savior" as well (Dupuis, Origin of Religious Belief, p. 264). In a hymn to Apollo he is called: "The willing Savior of distressed mankind" (Monumental Christianity, p. 186).

Serapis was called "The Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 15). He was considered by Hadrian, the Roman emperor (117-138 A.D.), and the Gentiles, to be the peculiar god of the Christians (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, vol. Ii. p. 86). A cross was found under the ruins of his temple in Alexandria in Egypt (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 15). And notice also that much of the New Testament was written from Alexandria, Egypt along with the translation of the LXX which is corrupted in many places when compared with the Palestinian Masoretic text. It is very evident that the pictures of Christ Jesus, as we know them today, are simply the pictures of some of the Pagan gods. A cursory study of religious art in the early days of Christianity and before will show you the resemblances. One should expect that Jesus of Nazareth to resemble a Jew and have Jewish features and these early pictures do not betray such a fact.

Mithras, who was "Mediator between God and man" (Dunlap, Spirit History, pp. 237, 242) was also called "The Savior." He was the peculiar god of the Persians, who believed that he had, by his sufferings, worked their salvation, and on this account he was called their "Savior" (Higgins, Anacalypsis, vol. ii, p. 20). He was also called "the Logos" (Dunlop, Son of Man, p. 20). According to the most ancient tradition of the East-Iranians recorded in the end-Avesta, the God of Light (Ormuzd) communicated his mysteries to some men through his "Word" (Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 75).

The Persians believed that they were tainted with "original sin" owing to the fall of their first parents who were tempted by the evil one in the form of a serpent (Wake, Phallism, p. 47).

They considered the law-given Zoroaster to be also a Divine Messenger, sent to redeem men from their evil ways, and they always worshipped his memory. To this day his followers mention him with the greatest reverence, calling him "The Immortal Zoroaster," "The Blessed Zoroaster," "The First-Born of the Eternal One," etc. (Prog. Relig. Ideas, vol. i. pp. 258, 259).

"In the life of Zoroaster the common mythos is apparent. He was born in innocence, of an immaculate conception, of a ray of Divine Reason. As soon as he was born, the glory arising from his body enlightened the room, and he laughed at his mother. He was called a Splendid Light from the Tree of Knowledge, and, in find, he or his soul was hung upon a tree, and this was the Tree of Knowledge" (Malcolm, Hist. Persia, vol. i. pp. p. 494; Nimrod, vol. ii. P. 31; Anacalypsis, vol. il. P. 649).

How much this resembles "the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints" (Col. 1:26).

Hermes was called "The Savior." On the altar of Pepi (B.C. 3500) are to be found prayers to Hermes…"He who is the good Savior" (Bonwick, Egyptian Belief, p. 102). He was also called "The Logos." The church fathers, Hippolytus, Justin Martyr, and Plutarch assert that the Logos is Hermes (Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 30). The term "Logos" is Greek and signifies literally "Word" (John 1:1). He was also "The Messenger of God" (Bell, Pantheon, vol. ii, pp. 69-71).

Dr. Inman says: "There are few words which strike more strongly upon the senses of in inquirer into the nature of ancient faiths, than Salvation and Savior. Both were used long before the birth of Christ, and they are still common among those who never heard of Jesus, or of that which is known among us as the Gospels" (Inman, Ancient Faiths, vol. ii. p. 652).

Besides the titles of "God's First-Born," "Only Begotten," the "Mediator," the "Shepherd," the "Advocate,"

the "Paraclete or Comforter," the "Son of God," the "Logos," etc., being applied to heathen virgin-born gods, before the time assigned for the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, we have also that of Christ and Jesus. This terminology can be studied out by you in detail if you acquire copies of Bunsen, Angel-Messiah, p. 119, Knight, Ancient Art and Mythology, pp. xxii and 98, Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 71, and Spirit History, pp. 183, 205, 206, 249, Bible for Learners, vol. ii. p. 25, Isis Unveiled, vol. iii pp. 195, 237, 516, etc.

THE GENTILE'S SAVIOR GODS CALLED "CHRISTS"

We now turn our attention to the many uses of the term "Christ" as used long before the time of Jesus of Nazareth and how they were previously connected with the Gentile's "Saviors".

We not continue our study by examining the terms for other Gentiles Savior-gods of which most will be unfamiliar. I am referring tot the use of the terms "Christ" as it was applied to the representative redeemer men that long predated Jesus of Nazareth.

Cyrus, King of Persia, was called the "Christ," or the "Anointed of God" (Bunsen, Bible Chronology, p. 5, Keys of St. Peter, p. 125). As Dr. Giles says, "Christ" is "a name having no spiritual signification, and importing nothing more than an ordinary surname" (Giles, Hebrew and Christian Records, p. 64, vol. ii). The worshippers of Serapis were called "Christians," and those devoted to Serapis were called "Bishops of Christ" long before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth (Ibid. p. 86; Taylor, Diegesis, pp. 202-206, 407). This fact is amazing. Eusebius, the ecclesiastical historian says, that the names of "Jesus" and "Christ," were both known and honored among the ancients (Eusebius, Eccl. History, lib. 1. Ch. iv.).

Mithras was called the "Anointed" or the "Christ;" (Dunlap, Son of Man, p. 78) and Horus, Mano, Mithras, Bel-Minor, Iao, Adoni, etc., were each of them "God of Light," "Light of the World," the "Anointed," or the "Christ" (Ibid. p. 39).

It is said that Peter called Yeshua "the Christ," whereupon "he straightway charged him (the disciples), and commanded them to tell no man "that thing" (Luke 4:21).

The title of "Christ" or "the Anointed," was held by the kings of Israel. "Touch not my Christ and do my people no harm," says the Psalmist (Psalm 105:15).

The tern "Christ" was applied to religious leaders, leaders of factions, necromancers or wonder-workers, etc. This is seen by the passage in Matthew, where the writer says: "There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:24).

The virgin-born Chrishna and Buddha were incarnations of Vishnu, called Avatars. An Avatar is an Angel-Messiah, a God-man, a Christ; for the word "Christ" is from the Greek "Christos," an Anointed One, a Messiah.

Let us continue our study in the veneration of "crosses" by the non-Jews in their worship and portrayal of their Savior gods.

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #5

You will probably find this next piece of information amazing. The holy Father Minucius Felix, in his Octavius, written as late as 211 A.D., indignantly resents the supposition that the sign of the cross should be considered exclusively as a Christian symbol, and represents his advocate of the Christian government as retorting on an infidel opponent. His words are: "As for the adoration of crosses which you (Pagans) object against us (Christians), I must tell you, that we neither adore crosses nor desire them; you it is, ye Pagans…..who are the most likely people to adore wooden crosses…for what else are your ensigns, flags, and standards , but crosses gilt and beautiful. Your (speaking of the Pagans) victorious trophies not only represent a simple cross, but a cross with a man upon it" (Octavius, c. xxix).

In this Christian's defense of his faith and theological doctrines he admits that the Pagans also have crucified saviors on crosses. When I first ran across such admissions by early Church fathers I was puzzled and disturbed to my very core. I had to find out why Pagans had the same religious belief system that my Christian forefathers did.

Answer for yourself: How could Christianity be the truth for the world when the world already had the Christian crucified Savior? Where did the Pagans get the same ideas which were held sacred by Gentile Christians let alone get them hundreds and thousands of years before the revelation of Jesus of Nazareth?

YOU ARE NOT PREPARED FOR THE INEVITABLE TRUTH

I was to discover through many tears that my whole Christian religious belief system could be traced to Sun Worship and it's many variegated forms. The next years of my study were both insightful but the hardest years of my life. The results of my inquiries yielded tons of insurmountable proofs and facts to substantiate the plagiarism of Sun Worship by the Gentile Christian Church. To make matters worse it would be these Gentile Christians which would craft the document called the New Testament which is filled with Sun Worship as masqueraded through the events of the life of Yeshua. These "sun myths" literally became personified in the personage of Jesus of Nazareth. Later such "sun myths," because they were connected with the life of Yeshua, became religious "dogmas" and "doctrines." We now look more deeply into such myths as seen in the veneration of crosses by the Christian Church over the ages.

CHRISTIAN SUN WORSHIP….THE ATONEMENT OF THE SUN… AND THE CROSS

The above declaration in the writings of Father M. Felix is a miracle. It is a miracle that it was not destroyed by Rome in the early ages of the Christian movement. Its existence is probably owing to an oversight of the destroyers of all evidences against the Gentile Christian religion that could be had. The practice of the Romans, here alluded to, of carrying a cross with a man on it, or, in other words, a crucifix, has evidently been concealed from us by the careful destruction of such of their works as alluded to it. The priests had everything their own way for centuries, and to destroy what was evidence against their claims was a very simple matter.

It is very evident that this celebrated Christian Father alludes to some Gentile mystery, of which the prudence of his successors has deprived us. When we compare this with the fact that for centuries after the time assigned for the birth of Christ Jesus, he was not represented as a man on a cross, and that the Christians did not have such a thing as a crucifix, we are inclined to think that the effigies of a black or dark-skinned crucified man, which were to be seen in many places in Italy even during the last century, may have had something to do with it (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 110).

While speaking of a "cross with a man on it" as being carried by the Pagan Romans as a standard, we might mention the fact related by Arrian the historian, that the troops of Porus, in their war with Alexander the Great, carried on their standards the figure of a man on a cross (Anacalypsis, vol. ii. p. 118). Here is evidently the crucifix standard again.

Tertullian, a Christian Father of the second and third centuries, writing to the Pagans, says: "The origin of your (Pagans) god is derived from figures moulded on a cross. All those rows of images on your standards are the appendages of crosses; those hangings on your standards and banners are the robes of crosses" (Apol. C. 16; Ad Nationes, c. xii.).

We have it then, on the authority of a Christian Father, as late as 211 A.D., that the Christians "neither adored crosses nor desired them," but that the Pagans "adored crosses," and not that alone, but "a cross with a man upon it." Jesus, in those days, nor for centuries after, was NOT represented as a man on a cross. He was represented as a lamb, and the adoration of the crucifix, by the Christians, was a later addition to their religion.

WHO WAS THIS CRUCIFIED MAN WHOM THE PAGANS ADORED BEFORE AND AFTER THE TIME OF JESUS?

Answer for yourself: Who did the crucifix represent?

If you have read these articles you now know. It was "the Savior crucified for the salvation of mankind," long before the Christian Era, whose effigies were to be seen in many places all over Italy and the world. These Pagan crucifixes were either destroyed, corrupted, or adopted; the latter was the case with many ancient paintings of the Bambino (the baby in his mother's arms named differently in almost every culture world-wide). Christians called the mother with child "Mary and baby Jesus." In Babylon it was called "Semiramis and Tammuz." You get the picture. On these paintings we often find the words "Deo Soli." Now, these two words can never apply to Christ Jesus. He was not Deus Solus, in any sense, according to the idiom of the Latin language, and the Romish faith. Whether we construe the words "the only God," or "God alone," they are equally heretical. No priest, in any age of the church, would have thought of putting them there; but finding them there, they tolerated them.

In the "Celtic Druids," Mr. Higgins describes a crucifix, a lamb, and an elephant, which was cut upon the "fire tower," so called at Brechin, a town of Forfarshire, in Scotland. Although they appeared to be of very ancient date, he supposed, at that time, that they were modern, and most likely belonged to Christianity. He would later change his mind and write: "I now date the modern date of the tower, for we have, over and over again, seen the crucified man before Christ. We have also found "The Lamb that taketh away the sins of the world,: among the Carnutes of Gaul, before the time of Christ; and when I contemplate these…I am induced to doubt my former conclusions. All these superstitions must have come from India."

On one of the Irish " round towers" is to be seen a crucifix of unmistakable Asiatic Origin (Lundy, Monumental Christianity, pp. 253, 254, 255).

Answer for yourself: As you contemplate what is being shown to you, and as God watches the uncovering of lies before your face, are you now more determined than ever to study your faith in detail and then compare it with Biblical Judaism, the faith of Yeshua of Nazareth? What is truth? Now do you think as a Christian you have it?

EXAMINING THE CRUCIFIXION OF JESUS AND PARALLELS TO CRUCIFIED SUN-GODS #6

Not forgetting what we have already learned, if we turn to the New World, we shall find, strange though it may appear, that the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians worshipped a crucified Savior as did those on the opposite side of the globe. This is utterly amazing considering in those days the limited travel and communication on this planet. Yet there is unmistakably a common denominator behind all these "crucified representative Saviors" that existed thousands of years before the time of Jesus of Nazareth.

This "crucified Savior" of the New World was the virgin-born Quetzalcoate whose crucifixion is represented in the paintings of the "Codex Borgianus," and the "Codex Vaticanus."

These paintings illustrate the religious opinions of the ancient Mexicans, and were copied form the hieroglyphics found in Mexico. The Spaniards destroyed nearly all the books, ancient monuments and paintings which they could find; had it not been for this, much more regarding the religion of the ancient Mexicans would have been handed down to us. Many chapters were also taken, by the Spanish authorities, from the writings of the first historians who wrote on ancient Mexico. All manuscripts had to be inspected previous to being published. Anything found among these heathens resembling the religion of the Christians, was destroyed when possible (Kinsgborough, Mexican Antiquities, vol. vi. pp. 165 and 179).

The first Spanish monks who went to Mexico were surprised to find the crucifix among the heathen inhabitants, and upon inquiring what it meant, were told that it was a representation of Bacob (Quetzalcoate), the Son of God, who was put to death by Eopuco. They said that he was placed on a ben of wood, with his arms stretched out, and that he died there (Kingsborough, Mexican Antiquities, vol. vi. p. 166).

Answer for yourself: Now, having read these articles what is the chance that the Jesus story of the New Testament ows much of its life to these prior crucified sungodmen myths?

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #1

If you are a Christian this is the most important piece of information you will have ever read. I behoove you to read the whole article if you want to understand the death of Yeshua as God intended. The facts presented speak for themselves. I pray you will quietly and prayerfully speak to the Father as you read this most enlightening articles. My prayers and blessings to you.

As a Christian you have been told your whole life that two great objectives were accomplished by Jesus in his mission to this world.

- The removal of the curse under which mankind labored as a result of the disobedience and fall
- The restoration of men to the image and fellowship of God.

Both of these were essential to salvation as taught by Gentile Christianity. Christianity teaches that the work of Christ in reconciling God and men is called "the" Atonement; and this doctrine lies at the very heart of the Christian system. Sadly few understand correctly this very important doctrine, the origin of Christianity's claims, nor can the Biblical teaching on Atonement be understood correctly without a proper understanding of the Hebraic roots from which it came.

We are altogether dependent on Old Testament Scripture and Jewish writings for our knowledge concerning the doctrine of the Atonement and can know only what God has seen fit to reveal concerning it.

What most don't know is that when one encounters teachings on Atonement in the New Testament, which was collected and altered repeatedly by the Gentile Church, one is reading the "Gentile pagan accounts of Atonements from mystery religions" and and not "fulfillments" of Old Testament Scripture!

Our present purpose in this series of articles is to give a systematized account of what the Jewish Scriptures, the Bible Yeshua used. the Palestinian Masoretic Text, the Tanakh, teach concerning Atonement, and to show that this fits in perfectly with the longings and aspirations of an enlightened spiritual nature.

A CHRISTIAN'S UNDERSTANDING OF THE NEW TESTAMENT IS IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT A THROUGH UNDERSTANDING OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

First of all you have to have the correct text. The Christian's Old Testament is different from the Jewish Masoretic text in over 2000 places. This should concern you immensely! If you want the facts check out: http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua. You should demand a translation and not a free creationism as doctored by non-Jews, who over the centuries, conformed the faith and writings of the Jews to suit their pagan backgrounds. Enough said. If you have been reading our materials we have made this most plain over the years. Now to the purpose at hand.

In one of Paul's most condensed and fundamental statements of Christian teaching we read: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received: that Christ (Messiah) died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried; and that He hath been raised on the third day according to the Scriptures," I Cor. 15:3.

Answer for yourself: Even in the corrupt Old Testaments in the Christian Bibles, can you find where the Old Testament prophecies that Yeshua was to die for sin and that he was to be buried and raised on the 3rd day?

What? You cannot? No wonder; it is not there anywhere! And please don't read into Isa. 53 the concept of an "individual" when the author from chapter 40 on through chapter 66 deals with a "corporate, collective, and national" Suffering Servant and never one individual. If you do so, then understand that you invalidate completely what Isaiah intended we learn from the passage. Such is reading into the text your pre-formed theology. Let us not do that. We are supposed to believe what we can draw out of the text. The text must determine our beliefs. Such is exegesis. I recommend exegesis as you can see and because of my Christian background I must fight daily to limit my eisegesis as much as possible because so much error is yet burned into my subconscious. We must struggle and fight for the truth. Such makes one Israel.

IF YOU HAD A GOOD KNOWLEDGE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT THEN YOU WOULD NOT BE MISLED SO EASILY BY THE NEW TESTAMENT

First of all understand that the word "Christ" means Messiah in Hebrew. So according to Paul, in the New Testament, his "gospel" is saying that the Messiah died for our sins.

Answer for yourself: Does the Old Testament and Jewish Scriptures teach and prepare Israel to prepare for and accept a Messiah who comes to die for their sins? No it does not in fact; it teaches just the opposite and this is where the problem lies.

You might not be able to answer with Old Testament Scripture the above question but you will be able soon enough if you continue to study our articles. The Gospel of John in the New Testament states that the "Word became flesh," meaning by most accounts that Jesus, the Messiah, came from Heaven in the form of flesh. Christianity answers the above dilemma two ways: one, there was a time the flesh was "not the Word" and a time when the "Word became flesh" in the Virgin Birth. Without going into detail, the idea which was understood and believed by the first Jewish followers concerning Yeshua; that of him "becoming" Messiah at his immersion is just another proof that the Virgin Birth teaching is incorrect. If you would like to have the detailed teachings exposing the errors in the Virgin Birth teaching request them from Bet Emet Ministries and we will be glad to see you get them. So, important for your understanding as we study atonement is that Jesus became "the" Messiah (Messiah means anointed and we have record of his anointing "without measure" when he was 30 years old at the Jordan). You and I dear one are anointed with measure, but Yeshua was anointed "without measure". You would expect one to fulfill the Messianic hope of Israel to be so equipped. Incidentally, this is exactly what the earliest Jewish followers of Yeshua/Jesus believed; namely that Jesus is the Messiah, and became the Messiah from anointing without measure at the Jordan. Such were called the Ebionites and their writings are available today as well as the records of the early Church historians which reveal to us what the earliest beliefs were concerning Jesus before being changed by the Roman Church in the fourth century and following. It is not my intention to explain in this article why the prophecies of the Jewish Scriptures were not fulfilled in Yeshua nor deal with the fictional creations of "false-fulfilled" passages in the New Testament in this article. We have that information available to those who would desire it at: http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com.

NOW LETS THINK …

Now let me ask you a question that goes to the very foundation of the core of our beliefs about salvation.

Answer for yourself: Should we not rather try to understand Paul to say that "Christ died because of our sins" instead of "for our sins?"

Critical for our understanding is if Christ's death:

- Was the result of our sins or if his death atoned for sins?
- If Christ's death atoned for ALL our sins or if his death atoned only for PART of our sins (Yom Kippur/The Day of Atonement teaches us the truth in this regard), or did his death NOT atone for any of our sins?
- If Christ's death or rather his life (life is in the blood which ended at his death and the shedding of his blood) atoned for sins, then what implication does one's "life" have for personal atonement of sin?

Before we get to the very heart of the issue we must come to a better understanding of the sacrificial system in order to correctly consider if Jesus' death can be understood as a proper sacrifice within the Law and the dynamics within it that affects the forgiveness of sin.

LAWS OF THE SACRIFICE

The terminology used with regard to the patriarchal age is that of the Torah as a whole; it is unlikely that the same words in Genesis mean something different in the other Books of Moses. Thus, Cain and Abel each brought a "gift" (minhah; Gen. 4:4f.), which was usually of a cereal nature as brought by Cain (Lev. 2). Notice this is not a sin offering! Noah offered up a burnt offering ("olah"; Gen. 8:20ff.) and the pleasing odor of the sacrifice is stressed. Job is also depicted as making burnt offerings periodically (Job 1:5) and for specific purposes (Job 42:7–9). The burnt offerings, signifying complete surrender to God, were by far the most frequent sacrifices at the Israelite sanctuary. Again these offerings by Noah and Job were not "sin" offerings and only showed the complete devotion and surrender of the "offerer's" heart to God as he demonstrated and testified to his relationship with God through such "gifts".

I need to repeat the last statement as it will have major significance as you continue to read.

These burnt offerings [olahs] as seen in Cain, Able, Noah, and Job only showed the complete devotion and surrender of the "offerer's" heart to God as he demonstrated and testified to his relationship with God through such "gifts".

The Patriarchs normally are said to have "called on the name of the Lord," e.g., Abraham (Gen. 12:8, 13–4; 21:33) and Isaac (Gen. 26:25). The association of this phrase with the building of an altar shows that it refers to the approach to God through sacrifice. With Jacob the naming of the specific altar is stressed (Gen. 33:20; 35:7). Once Abraham is said to have offered an "olah" (Gen. 22:13) but Jacob (Gen. 31:54; 46:1) offered "zevahim". Again these were NOT "sin" offerings NOR were they intended for Atonement.

Now let us look at "offerings" and "sacrifices" from Moses to Samuel. The covenant sacrifice inaugurating the relationship between the Lord and His people (Ex. 24:3–8) is not paralleled by specific rituals in the Mosaic liturgy. Burnt and peace offerings were first offered and then the blood from them (not from a sin offering) was thrown half against the altar and half upon the people. In the land of Canaan the Israelites made sacrifices at various places, e.g., at Bochim (Judg. 2:1–5) and Ophrah (Judg. 6:24–26). The human sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter (Judg. 11:30–40) was hardly normative; instead it is pointed out as evidence of Israel's sad spiritual state at that time. The main center for sacrificial ritual was at Shiloh (I Sam 1:3ff.), where faithful Israelites came for an annual festive offering. That the ritual there was highly developed and detailed is proven by the explicit description of malpractice on the part of Eli's sons (I Sam 2:13–17) in taking their portion of the meat before the entrails were burned. However, Shiloh was not the only legitimate place of sacrifice; others included Beth-Shemesh (I Sam 6:14–15), Mizpah (I Sam 7:9), Ramah (I Sam. 7:17; 9:11–24), and Gilgal (I Sam. 10:8; 11:15; 13:9). Family and clan sacrifices were commonplace (I Sam. 16:2–5).

Common to all these instances was "sacrifice" for other reasons than "sin offerings"! This is so very important. What you need to know is that in the Old Testament the first mention of animal sacrifices for "sin offerings" was AFTER the Golden Calf and the sin of idolatry by a people already possessing relational knowledge of the True God

Answer for yourself: Then how did mankind obtain forgiveness of sin up until the Golden Calf and the idolatry associated with it? Surely man sinned and must have been given a way of obtaining atonement prior to the Exodus. Well stay tuned!

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #2

HOW WERE THE SACRIFICES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT TO BE UNDERSTOOD AND INTERPRETED?

Throughout the ages attempts have been made to explain the dynamics involved in the sacrificial system of Israel. Without such an understanding of the Old Testament Sacrificial System the typical Christian is literally "crippled" in his understanding of Atonement. The proposed explanations can be divided into three categories: the symbolic, juridical, and rational.

SYMBOLIC

Philo devoted a treatise to the subject (De Victimis; see Spec. 1:112–256). He pointed out that only domesticated animals and the most gentle birds were suitable for sacrifice and that they had to be free of blemish, which he took as a symbol that the offerers must also be wholesome in body and soul. The Jew had to approach the altar with his soul purged of its passions and viciousness if the sacrifice was to be acceptable (Spec. 1:166/167, 257).

Take notice of the spiritual condition necessary BEFORE the sacrifice was to be presented at the altar…his soul had to be purged of sin IF the sacrifice was to be acceptable to God.

The reader needs to understand NOW that there were prior conditions that needed to be met by the sacrificer of the animal BEFORE the sacrifice was to be brought to the altar. Now lets pick up with Philo.

The wicked would be rejected, even if they offered hundreds of sacrifices (Spec. 1:271). The rabbis stated that the sacrificial statutes indicated that God is with the persecuted. The ox is pursued by the lion, the goat by the leopard, and the lamb by the wolf. Therefore God commanded, "Do not offer those that persecute, but rather those that are persecuted" (Lev. R. 27:5). The requirement that fowl be offered with their feathers symbolized that a poor man was not to be despised. Therefore his offering was placed on the altar in its full adornment, despite the nauseating odor normally arising from the burning of feathers (Lev. R. 3:5). Salt, an indispensable ingredient of sacrifice, was symbolic of the moral effect of suffering, which purifies man and causes sins to be forgiven (Ber. 5a). Judah Halevi declared that the fire on the altar was kindled by the will of God as a sign that the people found favor in His sight and that He was accepting their hospitality and offerings (Kuzari 2:26). Samson Raphael Hirsch explained that the Pentateuch required the person to lay his hands upon the head of the sacrifice to indicate that the "hands" that have become morally weakened "support" themselves on the resolution of the future betterment that is expressed by the offering (his commentary to Lev. 1:4). David Hoffmann declared that sacrifices are symbols of man's gratitude to God and his dependence on Him, of the absolute devotion man owes to God, as well as of man's confidence in Him (Introd. to commentary on Lev.

(Heb. ed.), 64–67).

JUDICIAL

The juridical approach is put forward by Ibn Ezra (commentary to Lev. 1:1) and to some extent by Nahmanides (commentary to Lev. 1:9). According to them, the sinner's life is forfeit to God, but by a gracious provision he is permitted to substitute a faultless victim. His guilt (not his sin) is transferred to the offering by the symbolic act of placing his hands on the victim.

The reader should understand RIGHT NOW that this is something new he has never heard in his Christian Church. It was the guilt and not the sin that was transferred to the innocent animal. Now back to Ibn Ezra.

When observing the pouring out of the blood and the burning of the sacrifice, the person should acknowledge that were it not for divine grace he should be the victim, expiating his sin with his own blood and limbs (Nahmanides to Lev. 1:9). Many Christian exegetes adopted this explanation and on it built the whole theological foundation of their Church.

RATIONAL

Quite different is the rational view of sacrifice advocated by Maimonides. He rejected the symbolist position which discovered reasons for the details of the various sacrifices. Those who trouble themselves to discover why one offering should be a lamb, while another is a ram, are "void of sense; they do not remove any difficulties, but rather increase them" (Guide, 3:26). Maimonides held that the sacrificial service was not really of Jewish origin. It was the universal custom among all peoples at the time of Moses to worship by means of sacrifices. Since the Israelites had been brought up in this atmosphere, God realized that they could not immediately completely abandon sacrifice. He therefore limited its application by confining it to one place in the world, with the ultimate intention of weaning them from the debased religious rituals of their idolatrous neighbors.

Answer for yourself: Dear one, did you hear that? God was in time to wean His people from the pagan idolatrous forms of worship that contained animals sacrifice that His people had been influenced by the example of pagan nations? This means that Atonement was to be obtained in other than "blood" and the Old Testament is full of ways by which one can obtain Atonement without "blood"! Please keep reading!

The new service of "confined sacrifice" in one place in the world stressed the existence and unity of God, "without deterring or confusing the minds of the people by the abolition of the service to which they were accustomed and which alone was familiar to them." Maimonides cited the experience of Israel, led not by the shorter way, but by the circuitous route through the land of the Philistines (Ex. 13:17). Likewise, through a circuitous road, Israel was to be led gradually and slowly to a deeper perception of religion and divine worship (Guide, 3:32). He gives the added remarkable parallel that it would be equally incomprehensible for anyone in his generation to suggest that prayer could be offered in thought alone, without the recitation of words.

Abrabanel strengthened the arguments for Maimonides' viewpoint. He explained that only within this framework can it be understood why the Torah limited the sacrificial service to one locality while prayers may be recited in all places (Introd. to his commentary on Lev., 2d). Abrabanel cites a Midrash which stated that the Hebrews had become accustomed to idolatrous sacrifices while in Egypt. To wean them from these idolatrous practices, God commanded, while tolerating the sacrifices that had been practiced by His people as influenced by pagans, that they be offered in one central sanctuary. This was illustrated by the parable of a king who observed that his son loved to eat forbidden foods. The king then decided to serve him these foods daily so that he would ultimately lose his desire for them and forego his evil habits (Lev. R. 22:8). D. Hoffmann later proposed a different explanation for this Midrash, declaring that the king insisted that the son was to eat exclusively at his table so that he would only be served proper food and thus curb his appetite for forbidden foodstuffs (Introd. to commentary on Lev., p. 61).

The reader should understand that God was going to do a new thing. He was to allow the continuation of these "pagan sacrifices" but He will instill new meaning to them. This will be seen in the development of a unique relationship between the sacrificer and God Himself. You will see how this works when we look deeper into the concept in Leviticus that "the life is in the blood". God is not concerned about blood, but the life…the soul contained within the blood!

With the destruction of the Temple and the automatic cessation of the sacrificial system, it was laid down that prayer took the place of the sacrifices because such ideas are also taught in the Old Testament. The Shaharit service was regarded as taking the place of the morning tamid and the Minhah service, the afternoon tamid. On all occasions when an additional offering was brought, the Musaf prayer was introduced (Ber. 4:1, 7; 26b). One of the rabbis later declared that prayer was even more efficacious than offerings (Ber. 32b) [remember God was progressively weaning them from animal sacrifices (the physical) with the intent of spiritual sacrifices such as prayer, repentance, almsgiving, etc.]. This is the message of the Prophets!

THE SPIRITUAL DYNAMICS OF SACRIFICE THAT WE JUST DISCUSSED …SEEN IN DETAIL

When the glory of the Lord had entered the tabernacle in a cloud, God revealed Himself to Moses from this place where He would put His Name, according to His promise in Ex. 25:22 to make known His will through him to the people. The first of these revelations related to the sacrifices, in which the Israelites were to draw near (korban) to God, that they might become partakers of His grace.

The patriarchs, when sojourning in Canaan, had already worshipped the God who revealed Himself to them, with both burnt offerings and slain offerings (we saw this above in the form of "burnt offerings"). Whether their descendants, the children of Israel, had offered sacrifices to the God of their Fathers during their stay in Egypt, we cannot tell as there is no Biblical allusion whatever to the subject in the short account of these 430 years. Yet we know from archeology that such was the case. What is certain is that they had not forgotten to regard the sacrifices as a leading part of the worship of God, and were ready to follow Moses into the desert, to serve the God of their Fathers there by a solemn act of sacrificial worship (Ex. 5:1-3; 4:31; 8:4); and also, that after the exodus from Egypt, not only did Jethro offer burnt offerings and slain offerings to God in the camp of the Israelites, and prepare a sacrificial meal in which the elders of Israel took part along with Moses and Aaron (Ex. 18:12), but young men offered burnt offerings and slain offerings by the command of Moses at the conclusion of the covenant (Ex. 24:5). Consequently sacrificial laws of these chapters presuppose the presentation of burnt offerings, meat-offerings, and slain offerings as a custom well known to the people and a necessity demanded by their religious feelings. They were not introduced among the Israelites for the first time by Moses by what he learned at Sinai, because animal sacrifices date from the earliest period of mankind.

Answer for yourself: Are you curious why we have not found "sin offering" yet and we are up to Moses in out time-line?

The subject of sacrificial laws in the book of Leviticus was not to enforce sacrificial worship upon the Israelites, nor to apply some sort of a theory concerning the Hebrew sacrifices, but simply to organize and expand the already existing sacrificial worship of the Israelites into an institution in harmony with the covenant between the Lord and His people, and adapt and promote the end for which it was established… communion and fellowship with God. You need to fully understand what was just said. Read it again please.

But although sacrifice in general reaches up to the earliest times of man's history, and is met with in every nation, it was NOT enjoined upon the human race by any positive commandment of God, but sprang out of a religious necessity for fellowship with God. These sacrifices assumed very different forms in different tribes and nations, in consequence of their estrangement from God, and their growing loss of all true knowledge of Him.

Their ideas of the Divine Being were regulated by the nature, object, and significance of the sacrifices they offered, and they were quite as subservient to the worship of idols as to that of the one true God. To discover the fundamental idea, which was common to all the sacrifices, we must remember, that the first sacrifices were presented after the fall.

Also interesting by its absence is any mention of SIN OFFERINGS, PRIESTHOOD, EXPIATION or FORGIVENESS in the PRE-Mosaic sacrifices of the Old Testament....in other words NOT before the Golden Calf incident....more on that soon.

This is very important and you need to let this fact sink deeply into your Christian theology!

There are very important reasons for the omission of "sin offerings" as you will soon discover. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #3

FORGIVENESS WAS NOT THE THEME OF SACRIFICES BEFORE MOSES AND THE GOLDEN CALF - BUT REPRESENTING FELLOWSHIP OF ONE'S SOUL WITH GOD

Before the fall man lived in blessed unity with God. This unity was destroyed by sin, and the fellowship between God and man was disturbed, thought not entirely abolished. In the punishment which God inflicted upon the sinners, He did not withdraw His mercy from men; and before driving them out of paradise, He gave them clothes to cover the nakedness of their shame, by which they had first of all become conscious of their sin. Even after the expulsion He still manifest Himself to them, so that they were able once more to draw near to Him and enter into fellowship with Him. This fellowship (NOT forgiveness) they sought through the medium of sacrifices, in which they gave a visible expression not only to their gratitude towards God for His blessing and His grace, but also to their supplication for the further continuance of His divine favor. It was in this sense that both Cain and Abel offered sacrifices [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?], thought not with the same motives or in the same state of heart toward God. In this sense of fellowship and not forgiveness Noah also offered sacrifice [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?]. After Noah's deliverance from the flood; something changed in the offering of sacrifices. Whereas the sons of Adam offered their sacrifices to God from the fruit of their labor, in the tilling of the ground and the keeping of sheep, Noah presented his burnt offering from the clean cattle and birds that had been shut up with him in the ark (those animals would from that time forward be assigned to man as food…Gen. 9:3). Noah was probably led to make this selection by the command of God to take with him into the ark not one or more pairs, but 7 of every kind of clean beasts. Noah may have discerned in this an indication of the divine will, that the 7th animal of every description of clean beast and bird should be offered in sacrifice to the Lord, for His gracious protection from destruction by the flood. Also notice the distinction of "clean and unclean" foods long before the Sinai experience. Moses, in Leviticus revelation, also received a still further intimation as to the meaning of the animal sacrifices. We see this in the prohibition which God appended to the permission to make use of animals as well as green herbs for food: "flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat " (Gen. 9:4-5). This prohibition is because the flesh still contained the blood as the animal's soul (the soul lives in the blood of the animal). In this there was already an intimation, that in the bleeding sacrifice the soul/life of the animal was given up to God with the blood; and therefore; that by virtue of its blood as the vehicle of the soul, animal sacrifice was the most fitting means of representing the surrender of the human soul to God. THIS IS VERY IMPORTANT! You will quickly come to see that the "blood" accomplished nothing; rather it was a picture of the soul of the person who brought the animal to the altar.

THE SOUL OF THE ANIMAL AS FOUND IN IT'S BLOOD REPRESENTED, WHEN PRESENTED ON THE ALTAR, THE SURRENDER OF THE HUMAN SOUL TO GOD

It is not the "blood" but the "soul" in the blood which demonstrates surrender to God and it is later to be understood as seen as placed on the altar where we see the "soul of the offerer of sacrifices" on the altar in lieu of the animal which is but a substitute for the person bringing the animal for sacrifice. The animal was literally the extension of the person bringing the sacrifice. God would not have a human sacrifice his life and blood and place it upon the altar as a demonstration of "communion" and "fellowship" with God; instead the animal was the extension of the person's life. The person bringing the animal had fed, groomed, and cared for the animal usually. It was part of his life and his life and energy had been invested into the care of the animal. So when the "soul" of the animal was taken and offered upon the altar in the release and placing of the animal's blood on the altar, then the person by proxy was represented on the altar in communion with God as well. Understand the animal was innocent having never sinned. This was supposed to be a picture of the spiritual position of the person bringing the sacrifice. The person bringing the sacrifice was ALREADY to have repented of his sin, confessed his sin, prayed, and made restitution to his fellowman if needed BEFORE he ever brought the animal to the altar. Then when he had done these spiritual necessities PRIOR to bringing the animal to the altar, then the person's soul was AT-THAT-MOMENT (atonement) right with God. He was forgiven and his repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution had accomplished for him atonement PRIOR to the animal being offered. "At that moment" his soul was again in right standing and relationship with God. In order to make such a declaration to the world and his fellowman, as well as to God, then he would take an animal and it would be slain and its blood placed on the altar. In so doing, the animal was a CORRECT PICTURE of the spiritual state of the person {if he had previously before bringing the animal repented, confessed, prayed, made restitution if possible, given alms, etc.] making the sacrifice for the animal's soul (in the animal's blood) was on the altar in communion with God and was NOW a true picture of the sacrificer's soul in communion with God if had repented as stated above before he came to the altar!

Besides this, if anyone wanted to eat meat, the animal's soul had to be given back to God before the flesh could be consumed. So you see in the sacrificial system there were two dynamics at work: atonement and the conditions necessary to eat meat which also contained the Divine image which had to be given by to God.

Answer for yourself: Did you notice we have not mentioned "sin offerings" yet?

HOW IS JESUS RELATED TO ALL THIS?

What I just described in the sacrificial system is an aspect of the death of Yeshua that most likely you have never even considered. This truth may possibly have been only dimly surmised by Noah and his sons; but it must have been clearly revealed to the patriarch Abraham when God demanded the sacrifice of his only son, with whom his whole heart was bound up, as a proof of his obedience of faith, and after he had attested his faith in his readiness to offer this sacrifice, supplied him with a ram to offer as a burnt-offering [burnt offerings and NOT sin offerings…remember?], instead of his own (Gen. 22). In this the truth was practically revealed to him, that the true God did not require human sacrifice from His worshipers, but the surrender of heart/soul and the denial of the natural life, even thought it should amount to a submission to death itself. This act of surrender was to be perfected in the animal's sacrifice; and that it was only when presented with these motives that sacrifice would be pleasing to God. Yeshua was willing to die if need be for the kingdom to come. The problem was that Israel did not merit the kingdom; even during the 40 years following his death. Simply said: no kingdom, no King!

That means prophecies not fulfilled. So we wait!

PURPOSE OF OFFERINGS

The word "korban" is commonly translated either "sacrifice" or "offering", but the truth is that the English language does not possess a word that accurately expresses the concept contained in the word. The word "sacrifice" implies that the person bringing it is required to deprive himself of something in order to satisfy someone else's need, but God finds no satisfaction in inflicting pain or deprivation upon His children. The word "offering" is closer to the mark but it too fails to convey the true meaning of a "korban". "Offering" implies that the Recipient of the gift must be appeased, that He requires a tribute that will somehow appease His wrath or make Him receptive to the entreaties of a supplicant, or that He has a need that can only be satisfied by someone other than Himself. As if God required our gifts! "If you have acted righteously, what will you have given Him! (Job 35:7); God does not become enriched by man's accomplishments.

The Hebrew word itself provides the answer. The root of the meaning is "to come near." Again the idea carries the concept of fellowship. The person bringing an offering does so in order to come closer to God, to elevate his level of spirituality thereby approaching God in the Spirit.

Now remember the person brought the animal as a picture of himself in that through his repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution he was "coming near" to God and the sacrifice of the animal and the placing of the animal's soul on the altar was a demonstration that he, the person bringing the sacrifice, had ALREADY "drawn near to God" and the soul of the animals was a true picture of himself NOW since repenting previously before coming to the altar. The offering was a picture of that spiritual fact to all the world as well as for God to see!

When Adam was deposited in the Garden of Eden, his first responsibility was to work it and guard it (Gen. 2:15). That means that Adam was commanded to plant, work, cultivate; everything that was necessary to keep the Garden as a Paradise. Before Adam's sin, man had no need to be a peasant; everything grew for him at God's command, with no need for him to exert himself in any way. It was only after his sin that he was expelled from Eden and required to earn his bread through the sweat of his brow.

How then was he to work and guard Eden? Through the study of Torah and the performance of positive and negative commandments. His livelihood would come in return for his obedience to God's will. God will always respond to man's righteousness by blessing his material efforts.

Adam's mission was to make himself an offering in his lifetime, by dedicating himself unreservedly to God. On God's Throne of Glory, there is an image of a man (Ez. 1:10). Every human being has his own image above, his ideal spiritual self, which represents his goal and his potential. Man's soul is placed in an earthly body so that he can surmount the challenges of material life and raise himself up to his personal, heavenly self; to unite his earthly self with his higher self. Just as everyone has a body and a soul, and his mission is to triumph in the eternal struggle of body versus soul, so, too, many must struggle to live up to the summons of his higher self.

Man is religious yet he sins! How can he defy the Creator he believe in? He is kind and generous, yet he is sometimes mean and stingy. He is moral, but has lapses in conduct. Whatever man is, he is often inconsistent, and if he is honest with himself, he knows that he is far from living up to his inner image. He wants his body to come closer to his soul; on a yet higher level, he should also want his soul to live up to its counterpart on high.

Similarly, there is a Temple in heaven that corresponds to the Temple on earth. The masters of Kabbalah teach that the good deeds of the people of God accumulate to build a spiritual replica of that heavenly Temple, and when there are enough such good deeds, the heavenly Temple will come down to the Temple Mount, signaling the end of the exile and the beginning of the perfect world foretold by the prophets. This is similar to the striving of the individual soul. There is a higher ideal we must see to capture in our mundane lives. Possibly it is best expressed by the Psalmist: "the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth He has given to mankind (Psm.

115:16). The heavens are already heavenly; God does not need man to improve upon them. But He has given us the earth that we might make it heavenly, as well. God gave mankind the Torah as instruction to bring heaven to earth through obedience of God's will as expressed in His living Word. This is best expressed through acts of Loving Kindness (Gemilut Hasadim) and Repairing of the World (Tikkun Olam). Adam was the offering, and for him to devote anything less than his maximum to God would have been to steal his Divinely conferred potential and misappropriate it for himself. The sin of eating from the Tree of Knowledge was such a misappropriation because he would be flouting the will of God. The truest offering is when the owner brings "himself" to God, making himself and his desires subservient to the teachings and guidelines of the Torah. The symbolism of the offerings is based on this concept; that the animal is secondary; that is but an indication of what its owner feels and toward what he strives.

REASONS FOR THE OFFERINGS

The function and purpose of the offerings are not concepts that man can grasp rationally. Especially in modern times when anything not measurable, observable, or replicable is questioned and denied, the idea of offerings is not an easy one to understand. It is necessary, therefore, to understand that they and their efficacy are manifestations of God's plan and wisdom. They are reality, even though we have never seen them and have no personal experience through which to know their potency.

We cannot understand why the slaughter of a sanctified animal, the placing of its blood and the burning of its flesh on the Altar; why these acts should bring God's Presence down to earth (accomplishes fellowship). Had the Jewish people been asked about the possibility of this happening before they had seen it, perhaps even they would have been skeptical. But they saw it happen! They saw the cloud of God's glory descend upon the Tent of Meeting. They saw a heavenly fire descend to their Altar and remain there for hundreds of years. They saw a Divine glow on Moses' face. To them, these were demonstrable, visible, tangible facts.

This is incomprehensible to our rational, scientific minds. But so was the splitting of the atom to rational minds a hundred years ago.

Various reasons for the offerings are given by classic commentators. The reason for the offerings is so profound that it is beyond human comprehension and the best efforts of the greatest of Jewish thinkers can yield only a drop in the ocean of God's intent.

OFFERINGS AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR MAN…BUT WE ALREADY SAID THAT

The offerings were seen to elevate three parts of every human deed: thought, speech, and action. When a person sins and then brings an offering, all three of those elements are used to take the sinful use to which he had previously put them, and transform it into the instrument of doing God's will. The person bringing the offering performs the commandment of leaning, by placing his hands on its head and leaning on it, thereby dedicating his strength and activity to God. He purifies his thought and intentions, by confessing his sin, pronouncing the spiritual goal that he hopes to attain, or uttering praises to God. As a further way of purging his sinful thoughts, the innards of the animal; representing the human organs that are the seat of desire and through, are burned on God's Altar. In the case of an elevation-offering, which is completely burned, the animal's feet symbolize the hands and feet with which man ran and acted to defy his Creator. The animal's blood (containing its soul), representing man's soul, was placed on the Altar (notice it is the soul that is placed upon the Altar; just not the blood).

Let's look at Leviticus 17:11 in context in order to make sure we understand the "central" idea of the passage.

"And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life [SUBJECT OF THE SENTENCE] of the flesh is in the blood [DIRECT OBJECT OF THE SENTENCE], and I have given it [THE LIFE] to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood [LIFE IN THE BLOOD REMEMBER?] that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, `No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'"

Answer for yourself: Did you know that "blood" was not the subject of the sentence? Did you notice what was? Did you understand that it was the "life" that was placed on the altar for atonement and not the blood?

In other words it is not the blood that atones, but the "soul" [LIFE] that atones..a life that repents, prays, confesses sin, makes restitution, gives alms, etc....!!!

Answer for yourself: Are you aware that as a Christian you whole understanding of the sacrificial system in the Bible is wrong because you have focused on "blood" for atonement instead of the "life" in the blood which is the real atoning agent?

BUT ISAIAH 53 SAYS....OR DOES IT?

Well not it does not say what you think it says. Why? You are reading most likely from your Christian Bible which is a very poor translation, or should I say, a very good mistranslation of Isaiah 53. This is why I spend so much time on the text. The Bible Jesus used and read did not read anything like our Christian Old Testament in hundreds of places. Isaiah is a good instance. Below is what the Palestinian Jewish Scriptures, called the Tanakh, reads for verse 10 of Isaiah 53:

Isa. 53:10 states " HaShem desired to oppress him and He afflicted him; if his soul would acknowledge guilt..."

WOW!

That sure is different from what your Christian Bible says:

Isa 53:10...IN THE KJV CHRISTIAN BIBLE...WHY IS IT DIFFERENT FROM THE HEBREW?

10 Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand. (KJV)

Simply said, this Christian translation has been "Jesusized" by having the concept of guilt removed, for in Christian "theology" Jesus can have no guilt and many try to make him the subject of the passage when the real uncorrupted Hebrew Scripture define the suffering servant as the corporate nation of Israel and not one individual

Back to the subject at hand.

In one of the greatest passages in the Bible, we are told by Isaiah the prophet that if the "soul" of the "suffering servant" would acknowledge guilt…confess sin, pray, repent...

Answer for yourself: What do you do when you acknowledge guilt?

You confess and then repent. This is the subject of the verse. You literally turn around your "life". Your life changes direction; from sin to righteousness. You no longer continue your sinister ways. Now you can see how such a life, after repentance and confession of sin, was understood, even as the Christian Bibles say: "soul/life an offering for sin"! One's life, when turned to God and away from sin, was the atonement that Leviticus 17 speaks about.

Answer for yourself: Could we have missed this understanding when looking at the death of Jesus or, as Isaiah said, the martyrdoms of millions of Israelites (remember Jesus is paradigm of all Jews)?

While this procedure (placing the animal's soul on the alter in substitute for yours) is being accomplished with one's offering, the sacrificer meditates upon his sin, for the offering service teaches him graphically that he has sinned against God with body and soul. He contemplates that justice would have dictated that his human body by burned on the altar as a penalty for sin and his soul required by God in lieu of the animal's blood be placed upon it. It is only God's graciousness that permits the animal to become his substitute. Then, parts of the offering are given to the Kohanim (priests/teachers), so that those who dedicate their lives to study and teach the Torah are sustained through him and so that they will pray for him. It is an act of supreme graciousness that God is prepared to accept an offering from us instead of punishing us directly for our misdeeds. This is why the offerings are described throughout Leviticus as a satisfying aroma to God, because God is pleased when His children repent and seek to change their lives for the better.

When one brings an offering with such noble thoughts he has truly made himself an offering. The Sages have said of one who brings a humble meal-offering, it is as if he had offered his own life upon the altar. He thereby raised his mundane desires and makes them worthy of being placed on the heavenly altar.

More to follow. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #4

WHAT PICTURES CAN WE NOW SEE MORE CLEARLY AS CONTAINED IN THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM OF ISRAEL?

Let us not forget what we just have learned. It was the soul of the animal as found in it's blood, which when presented in a sacrifice AFTER the prior repentance, confession, and prayer of the sinner, was understood by God as the surrender of that person's soul toward Him. This is what it is all about, and will always be about.

A SHORT REVIEW

It is not the "blood" but the "soul" in the blood which demonstrates surrender to God and it is later to be understood as seen as placed on the altar where we see the "soul of the offerer of sacrifices" on the altar in lieu of the animal which is but a substitute for the person bringing the animal for sacrifice. The animal was literally the extension of the person bringing the sacrifice. The person bringing the animal had fed, groomed, and cared for the animal usually. It was part of his life and his life and energy had been invested into the care of the animal. So when the "soul" of the animal was taken and offered upon the altar in the release and placing of the animal's blood on the altar, then the person by proxy was represented on the altar in communion with God as well. Understand the animal was innocent having never sinned. This was supposed to be a picture of the spiritual position of the person bringing the sacrifice. The person bringing the sacrifice was ALREADY to have repented of his sin, confessed his sin, prayed, and made restitution to his fellowman if needed BEFORE he ever brought the animal to the altar. Then when he had done these spiritual necessities PRIOR to bringing the animal to the altar, then the person's soul was AT-THAT-MOMENT (atonement) right with God. He was forgiven and his repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution had accomplished for him atonement PRIOR to the animal being offered. "At that moment" his soul was again in right standing and relationship with God. In order to make such a declaration to the world and his fellowman, as well as to God, then he would take an animal and it would be slain and its blood placed on the altar. In so doing, the animal was a CORRECT PICTURE of the spiritual state of the person making the sacrifice for the animal's soul (in his blood) was on the altar in communion with God and was NOW a true picture of the sacrificer's soul in communion with God. Besides this, if anyone wanted to eat meat, the animal's soul had to be given back to God before the flesh could be consumed. So you see in the sacrificial system there were two dynamics at work: atonement and the conditions necessary to eat meat which also contained the Divine image which had to be given by to God.

WHAT DID BOTH GOD AND THE SACRIFICER KNOW THEN THAT

WE DON'T TODAY?

When, when making sacrifice properly, knew that he had attained something special with God. Christian teaching today is completely devoid of this knowledge and I thank I over the years in my studies He allowed me to find and recover this most needed part of instruction. This knowledge, when properly understood, will go a long way in helping the Christian separate error from truth as he hears taught in his churches.

UNION WITH GOD AND FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD RESULTED

Whenever the Torah commands that offerings be brought, these commandments use only God's Four-letter Name (yod-hey-vah-hey); the "Tetragrammaton" (I AM). If other names were used, some might err, thinking that there are many Gods or forces, one demanding this offering and another demanding some other offering. Since the Name Elokim represents God as the One Who controls nature, that Name might be taken to imply that there is an angel or a power who has dominion over a particular land or aspect of existence, and that that power requires the offering. The Four-Letter Name is formed of the letters that spell, was, is and will be, meaning that God is eternal. This is not God as He appears in a particular manifestation (Judge, Provider, Life-giver) but God as He is.

This is His Name as the God of Mercy. No one should think that God requires offerings to feed or appease Him. The Eternal One has no needs that man can satisfy for everything is His and nothing is beyond His power!

Answer for yourself: What then is the purpose of the offerings?

You should have seen by now that these offerings provided man an opportunity to unite himself to God to whatever extent it is possible for mortal man to do so through repentance, confession, and restitution.

Similarly, there is a humanly created fire below on the altar and there is the Heavenly fire from above, which God has placed upon Israel's altar. Both of these flames are fed by the offerings of the Jewish people, symbolizing the union of man's spiritual aspirations with God's goals for him. Thus the offerings provide Israel a means for spiritual elevation [drawing closer to God].

THE SACRIFICER HAD AN ACCURATE UNDERSTANDING OF HIMSELF BEFORE GOD....ACKNOWLEDGING "ONE'S OWN" NOTHINGNESS

All creatures emanate from God and have no independent existence on their own. Man has freedom of choice and his intellect puts great achievements within his reach, but all of this is possible only because God gives him the power to do so. Man could not function or even exist without God. The goal of creation is for man to acknowledge this basic fact; to recognize and proclaim that everything exists because of God and nothing can survive without Him. There are many ways for God's glory to be revealed and recognized. The highest recognition of all is for man to know The Oneness of God, meaning that there is nothing aside from Him. He achieves his ultimate greatness when he recognizes that there is none beside Him (Deut. 4:35). An offering is a demonstration of this concept. It says that its owner is surrendering his possessions to their Source (God). Theoretically, one might expect him to be ready to give even his very life in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty, but that is not His will. God wants man to live, to grow, to thrive, to serve; and God ordains the offerings as man's way to recognize His Oneness. Thus, by offering his possessions [as seen in the animal presented to God in sacrifice], one symbolizes that he has no existence but for God's will.

UNITING BODY AND SOUL...BEING ONE WITH GOD

The efficacy of offerings in obtaining God's favor is comparable to the way food makes it possible for the soul to maintain its attachment to the body. Material food cannot provide nourishment to the soul, which is not a physical entity. It is this nourishment of the body that enables it to remain healthy enough to play host to the soul. Likewise, the "food of the Altar's fire" somehow effects the process that enables the Shechinah to remain among Israel.

The food of the soul is not measured in calories, vitamins, and minerals. Only intellectual and spiritual pursuits can nourish the soul. Torah study, prayer, even meals in celebration of such events as Sabbath and Festivals all have a sacred content that is capable of nourishing the soul. Only in this sense do the offerings constitute food for God. Man's dedication to Him and His commandments provides the nourishment that enables the Shechinah to attach itself to human beings and their handiwork. We think of food in terms of nutritive value, but that is not what sustains life. Man does not live merely because of the bread (material component). He lives through the bread's spiritual component; what emanates from the mouth of God. This is what holds together body and soul and what holds together Godliness and Israel through the agency of the offerings.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

Having now come to the understanding that it was a life lived above sin that was so pleasing to God that He accepted such a life as an offering and atonement for one's sin, it should behoove you to rethink what you believe about atonement as a Christian. If you were to do some comparative religious study you will see the preponderance of evidence of how pagan concepts of salvation are woven into Pauline theology. I have shown you the Biblical teachings of atonement and have not mentioned Paul's theology once. The reason I have not is that nowhere in the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text are such Pauline concepts of atonement found. Only when you read the fraudulent and mistranslated Greek Scriptures, which the Rabbis did not translate, do you begin to find such ideas surfacing in the text (http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua). But never fail to understand that such concepts cannot be found in the Jewish Scriptures from which the Greek translation emanated. Somebody "fixed" the Greek translation to read differently.And sadly for you, these altered and paganized Greek mistranslation became the foundation for your Christian Old Testament. To make matters worse, your New Testament quotes from the fraudulent Old Testament (http://www.faithofyeshua.faithweb.com). Over and over as you read your Christian Bible you only reinforce and rehearse error! You need to know that. But that happened over 2000 years ago and who knows? Well I do, and others do who have studied enough to see it! The Jews have always known. It is the secularized Jews of today who don't. It is time someone told you! The righteous Jews know this and have known this since 200 BC when the Greek translation was understood by them to be a corruption of the Jewish Scriptures. History records 3 attempts of the Jews to correct such a forged Greek translation but sadly their efforts were not to overtake the popularity of the already translated LXX (Septuagint).

Understand an animal's soul represented the soul of one making the sacrifice, and we, as non-Jews, today are beneficiaries of having the Jew's soul (Jesus) given in place of ours along with their prayers for our sin. Jesus is the archetype for all of Israel. He is the greatest of all the "Suffering Servants" of the God of Israel. But in this lesson we must no longer overlook the importance of a life lived above sin which procures one's redemption and not the inert blood of the animal or of Jesus. Lives lived honoring God through faith and obedience atones. Your Covenant requires it! Such is the message of Bet Emet as we are called to live like Jesus and not just "believe in Jesus." It has been my experience as a Pastor over the years to encounter multitudes of Christians who trust in Christ's blood instead of understanding the importance of his life, symbolized by his soul in his blood, as lived in obedience to God as a form of atonement, or even their own lives, as lived pleasing to God for their OWN atonement. We must walk out our salvation with fear and trembling. We are co-laborers with God in our own salvation through faith and repentance. Such a mistaken understanding of our redemption since not being taught the truth from a Hebraic perspective has caused multitudes of Christians to trust in the acclaimed miraculous powers of the blood of Jesus instead of focusing of the miraculousness of a life lived above sin. Such a false sense of security in "blood" instead of "lives lived holy before God and man" unconsciously causes the believer to not regard sin with revulsion as he should. We tend to view sin as less harmful than it is, and compromise with sin lies at the door.

The bottom line for all Christians to understand is that we have heard way too much preached about Jesus and far too little studied from the texts of the Jewish Bible which tell us exactly and accurately who he is as well as his original mission. If we had studied the original sources available to us, we would not be so mixed up theologically in Christianity today which boasts over 2000 different denominations all maintaining they have the truth about Jesus while at the same time being the most violent and crime ridden nation in the world.

SOMETHING IS WRONG WITH THE MESSAGE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…LOOK AT THE FRUIT OF THIS MESSAGE IN OUR COUNTRY WITH A CHURCH ON EVERY CORNER AND TELEVISIONS FILLED WITH THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE OF GRACE WITHOUT ACCOUNTABILITY FOR ONE'S OWN SIN! JUST LOOK OUT YOUR DOOR AND ASK IF THAT IS THE BEST THE HOLY SPIRIT CAN DO????????

I don't plan to get into why the Christian message at this time but suffice to say that the Christian message is corrupted due to it's pagan content over Jewish content as we see for example in the alteration of Jewish texts in the real Hebrew Isaiah for example but let it suffice to say as shown beyond question on many of our other sites that we are in this sad state today because instead of being a true follower of Jesus and his Jewish faith we are camped at the feet of pagan Rome and Paul's antinomianism (anti-Law). May God forgive our laziness of letting others tell us what to believe instead of us studying to show ourselves approved unto God. I just showed you part of the problem. Implicitly we are led to not revere the Laws and Commandments of God because of the solar teaching that "Jesus died for me" and my get out of jail card saves me. This comes straight out of sun worship as you have seen on this site and others. As a Pastor I saw such falsehoods lived out in the lives of the congregation year after year. When there is no Law, no Commandments, no requirements, no accountability, then there is no righteous fruit and we have our newspapers filled with horror story after horror story. And sadly few can count on their lives being a sufficient atonement for their sin because they have been taught a pagan sun-godman story which allows his followers to get away with anything. Emotionalism is a sorry substitute for knowledge.

Answer for yourself: For after all if saved by the blood of Jesus, what need do I have to live like Jesus and not disobey the commandments of God? Isn't Jesus my "grace card"?

Answer for yourself: If saved by the blood of another, what does a little sin mean…what can it hurt?

Answer for yourself: See the tragic thinking involved in focusing upon the blood of Jesus instead of the life of Jesus lived above sin? Now look out your window to the world and see what the fruit of 1700 years of erroneous teaching has grown!

THINK!

Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #5

LOOKING AT PAUL'S THEOLOGY….WHAT IS TRUTH?

We must not forget what we just learned. As the reader you must understand that what you learned is the "theology" of sacrifice and any other "sacrifice" must fit this mode of understanding. This means when viewing the death of Yeshua one must be equipped with this understanding before trying to evaluate the meanings that might be attached to his death. Along with this one must equally be equipped with sufficient information concerning comparative religions and the death of their "gods". Only if one comes to the "Jesus materials" possessing this information can he be guaranteed to be able to discern the true meaning of his death or at least see if concepts from "pagan mystery religions" have been attached to his death. This is especially important when reading Paul's writings. With what we have just learned as a background let us return to Paul's statement that "Christ died for our sins" which was the fundamental fact of the early Gentile Christian message, the corner-stone of early Gentile Christianity (but not Jewish Christianity or Messianism). But as soon as this simple fact is stated a number of vital questions are bound to arise. In order that we may have an intelligent and correct understanding of this important doctrine it is necessary that we know precisely what occurred and did not occur when Jesus died on the cross. We cannot rest content with teaching that leaves the central doctrine of the Christian faith shrouded in mystery and uncertainty. This does not mean that all mystery can be removed. But the Scriptures do supply the interpretation of the death of Christ that the inquiring mind legitimately asks for, and the salient factors concerning it should be known by all Christian people. Believing that the Hebrew Scriptures (the Palestinian Masoretic Text and not the corrupted LXX from which your Christian Old Testament originates) is God's word to man, and that the statements of Scripture regarding the death of Jesus in the Greek New Testament are often mistranslated on purpose (http://geocities.com/faithofyeshua),then if you, ordinary Christian men and women, are to even find the truth concerning the death of Jesus, then we must deal with some rather difficult information at times. It is not my wish to destroy anyone's faith, only to expose the changes made to the text as well as the lies that have been passed down about the death of Jesus which his original follower never "believed". We hold it to be our task and privilege under the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit to "search the Scriptures", the Jewish Scriptures that Yeshua himself accepted, until we reach that understanding which satisfies the mind and heart and conscience, and leads to certainty and finality.

According to the New Testament, especially the writings of Paul, we are told, for instance, in broad terms that we are members of a fallen race, that God has given His only-begotten Son for our atonement, and that salvation is through Him (Messiah) and not through any works which we ourselves are able to do.

Answer for yourself: How correct is this statement when compared with the teachings of the Hebrew Scriptures concerning atonement and forgiveness?

Let us not forget what we just learned in the prior articles.

Certainly anyone who accepts these facts and acts upon them will be "saved" because the fruit of the Christian message leads to Godliness. Yet, accepting these facts and acting upon them would appear to represent only a minimum of faith, and God has made it possible for us greatly to enrich and expand our knowledge of the way of salvation if we will but give careful attention to His word. But the problem is great; you first have to know if you, the Christian, even has His Word, or if your Old Testament is corrupted in special places. For example, the Isaiah translations in the Old Testament of your Christian Bible read completely different in many "messianic" passages as opposed to the Jewish Tanakh. You should ask yourself "why" your Christian Old Testament reads so much different from the Jewish Scriptures from which it was supposedly taken! Most likely you never knew this. It is time to awaken to such sad facts, for it is these alterations which have led to false beliefs concerning Yeshua, his life, and his death.

ANOTHER LOOK AT LEVITICUS 17:11 …POSSIBLY THE MOST IMPORTANT THING YOU CAN EVER LEARN

Christians generally insist that the absolute need for a vicarious blood sacrifice is rooted in the Torah (first five books of the Old Testament), and cite as proof Leviticus 17:11 "For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul." The sad fact of the matter is that most Christians and Pastors don't understand the verse at all.

As a Christian, you have probably heard many sermons on the topic of atonement, and have undoubtedly read many studies which support the contention that there is "no atonement without blood." But the truth of the matter is that neither the Book of Hebrews [it says "almost all things"..not "all things"] or the Old Testament says that. Of course you are also aware that this is a teaching which is not shared by traditional Jews and for a very good reason which has escaped the Gentile Christian church because of their mistranslation, alteration, and therefore misinterpretation of the passages in their Bibles as well as because of superficial reading of the whole Bible.

Answer for yourself: Have you ever wondered how the Jewish people could reject what to you seems so clear? Why would anyone reject a "free" salvation? It does not make sense to the rational mind.

You might remember that in junior high school, we were often given an assignment to write the title for a story; what is the central idea of a passage. Let's look at Leviticus 17:11 in context in order to make sure we understand the "central" idea of the passage.

"And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, `No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'"

What should immediately be apparent is that the topic of this passage is NOT how to secure atonement from sins, but the prohibition against consuming blood. We are told parenthetically that the reason for this prohibition is that the blood contains the vitality (soul) of the animal (Genesis 9:4, Deuteronomy 12:23) and consequently, when we bring an animal sacrifice, its soul (life) which is in its blood serves as the atoning agent, and not another part of its body [the blood]. The writer of Leviticus informs us that it is the soul, one's life, which is in the blood [blood is the object of the preposition "in"] which was offered to God daily and even in death which was pleasing to God and which God accepted as an "atonement" and as an "offering for sin". Notice that it is not the "blood" which was accepted for an offering for sin, but rather the "life/soul" which was "in" the blood. "Blood" is not the subject of the sentence. This might be a shock to you but "life" is the subject of the sentence. Or better said, it is the "life" which is the subject of the sentence. That means it is not the "death" or "the blood" which accomplished anything, but rather the life of one which provided atonement. Such a life is one lived in repentance, confession, prayer, and restitution as shown earlier in these articles and as attested by the Jewish Bible. Even your Christian Old Testament will teach you the same things if you are aware of it. It just so happens that the "life of the one bringing the sacrifice" is "pictured" in the life of the animal as the animal's blood is placed on the altar.

The Hebrew word for "life" which is in the blood is the word for "soul". Such a life, if it was to be accepted as an atonement, was one which was lived completely obediently to God's Commandments [by which he never sinned]. Such a life that turned from sin was so pleasing to God that He accepted such a life as an offering for one's own sin. Such a life was lived in a constant intent to live the commandments of God and when one fell short through sin one was preoccupied to repent and then recapture one's right standing with God. After repentance, "at that moment", one was restored into right standing and relationship with God and the placing of the blood of the animal was representative of the sacrificer's soul before God since he had ALREADY repented. The animal was a picture of him at that time. The soul of the animal was a picture of the sacrificer's soul, but only if he had repented PRIOR to bringing the sacrifice. Now you can understand why God at times tells us that He is wearied by the sacrifices of the people. They were just killing the animals and there was no repentance in their hearts!

Isa 1:10-17

- 10 Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah.
- 11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats.
- 12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?
- 13 Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.
- 14 Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.
- 15 And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.

Notice that God is tired of ritual without repentance.

Notice what God says next and the remedy to this sad state of spiritual affairs He finds in His people. Notice what God tells them what they must do!

- 16 Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil;
- 17 Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

There you have it. Through repentance, confession, and a return to obedience to the Laws and Commandments of God the people could again be received by Him. Nowhere did God say He did not want the people to continue bringing the sacrifices if their hearts were contrite and repentant. Only then, as you have learned, was their hearts to be represented by the animal's blood and soul on the altar. Anything else was a lie. Such was a waste of life; not only theirs but the animal's as well.

LET US LOOK A LITTLE MORE CLOSELY

The Hebrew word for "soul" is as follows as seen in Strong's Concordance:

5315 nephesh (neh'-fesh);

from 5314; properly, a breathing creature, i.e. animal of (abstractly) vitality; used very widely in a literal, accommodated or figurative sense (bodily or mental):

KJV-- any, appetite, beast, body, breath, creature, X dead (-ly), desire, X [dis-] contented, X fish, ghost, + greedy, he, heart (-y), (hath, X jeopardy of) life (X in jeopardy), lust, man, me, mind, mortally, one, own, person, pleasure, (her-, him-, my-, thyself-), them (your)- selves, + slay, soul, + tablet, they, thing, (X she) will, X would have it.

The Hebrew word for "soul" is as follows as seen in Brown-Drivers-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

5315 nephesh-

- soul-self,, life, a creature, a person, an appetite, a mind, a living being, a desire, an emotion, a passion
- what breathes, the breathing substance or being, a soul, the inner being of man
- a living being
- a living being (with life in the blood)
- the man himself, a-self, a person or an individual
- the seat of the appetites
- the seat of emotions and passions
- the activity of mind
- the activity of the will
- the activity of the character

My whole life I was told that I was "saved" by the blood of Jesus, yet Leviticus tells me that atonement which brings salvation is accomplished by my life before God!

Looking at the definition above, one quickly sees that the activity of one's will, mind, and character [one's soul] was said to be accepted in Leviticus 17 as an atonement for one's sin [life and not blood remember?].

Jesus, like all Jewish people who came before him who were devoted to God and His Torah, as well as those who lived after him, comprise the "suffering servant Israel". Let us remember that Isa. 53 speaks of the nation and corporate Israel as the Suffering Servant and not an individual even if singular pronouns are often used among plural pronouns. It is this "Suffering Servant" who is "the" light for the non-Jewish nations. With this perspective, we now can come to understand that the blood of Jesus carried the life force of Jesus (his soul). Jesus was totally committed and surrendered to the will of God and His Torah. That instead of Jesus' death, in reality it was his life, a life lived pleasing to God as part of the Israel of God which God accepted as atonement for sin. In particular Israel is the priest for the Gentile world, and they bring sacrifices for the sins of the Gentile world. THINK! Israel's "soul", not only Yeshua's, but all of righteous Israel, past and future, "atones" for sin. These righteous lives are accepted by Hashem on the altar, according to Leviticus 17, as atonement for sin, the sin of the Gentile nations who know not God. Such in reality "atones and saves". When I as a non-Jew comes to the knowledge of God and His commandments, then when lived before Him I identify with Israel and join Israel in making atonement with my life.

Remembering what we have already learned...that singular pronouns in the Servant Songs of Isaiah refer to the nation of Israel and not to only one person like Jesus. In so doing we can find the following verses even the more astonishing.

Isaiah 53:6

6 We all went astray like sheep, we have turned, each one on his own way, and the Lord accepted his [the corporate nation of Israel] prayers for the iniquity of all of us.

Now let us never again under estimate the importance of the prayer service in the Jewish synagogues of the world for by it atonement came for Gentile sins.

Now it become a little more clear. When one looks at Jesus, or other righteous Jews as the Suffering Servant of the LORD, then we see their lives and understand them as "lights to the nations". Then it is easy to understood such righteous lives and deaths as lives lived as examples which were in complete submission to the Commandments of God as demonstrated by one's complete submission of the mind, will, and emotions to God and His desires for his people. Such examples when followed by me, literally "saves"! Such lives atoned for sins of the Gentile world and serve as an example to me and you…by which if we follow such examples….provides atonement for our sins. Literally the "corporate" example of Israel is to be individualize in each believer's life when one comes into personal relationship with God. This is explained when one reads Isaiah 53 from the Jewish Scriptures and not the corrupted Christian Old Testament.

Jesus lived a God-honoring life to such a degree that God accepted his life, as he had all Jews devoted to Him. In Jesus' life God could tabernacle in a way He never had before with any man and the "Word/Messiah became flesh" at the immersion and anointing of Jesus. Let us never forget that Israel has had many "anointed" (messiahs) messengers of God as was Jesus. Then subsequently his God-honoring life (soul) was later accepted as an offering for sin in behalf of mankind as had others of Israel before him (and those of Israel who would follow him). His soul was pure and could be accepted upon the altar of God in lieu of us. God accepted his prayers for the iniquity of us .

34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do… (KJV)

So it was not Jesus' death so much as his God-honoring life-style which was lived in complete submission to the Father and His Commandments which not only brought Jesus to tabernacle within God "without measure", but shows us the way to both live and die in a way which honors both man and God and procures for us our atonement when we live our lives by his example. The death of Yeshua was not so much a sacrifice for us but an example for us.

BUT IN A WAY THE "BLOOD" OF JESUS DID SAVE US….IF WE CAN SEE THE TRUTH OF WHAT HE TAUGHT?

Had Jesus not died then there most likely would not have been a movement catalyzed from within a Gentile

hating Judaism of the 2nd Temple period which would reach out to the nations with the Torah and the Laws of Noah. The death, where the blood of Jesus was shed, was the catalyst that caused a mission into all the world where the Covenant of Noah was extended to the Gentile World. We call this the Great Commission today. Now understand which is said next. For in the wake of Yeshua's death would come a movement into all the world which aimed at taking the Torah to the nations whereby non-Jews could learn how to live lives pleasing to God as had Israel through faith and acceptance of the commands of God respective of their Covenant. Messianic Israel took to the non-Jews and the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel God's Covenant made with the non-Jews since before Noah. Faith and obedience to the Covenant stipulations brought salvation to the non-Jewish world. In others words Jesus traded his life for ours as previous Suffering Servants of God had done in preserving the truths of God for all mankind, and God accepted the bargain. This understanding is what Isaiah understood about the sacrifice of the Suffering Servant. Because of the death of Jesus, and I believe his resurrection, the teachings by which non-Jews could enter Covenant with God and live by the Commandments of God was to be taken into all the world. Along with these teachings would come the understanding that repentance from sin and a return to God provides a life pleasing to God which He then accepts as atonement for sin. Through the ages of the Christian Gentile Church this teaching was lost! Your example of being a Christian today which does not understand the sacrificial system of the Bible is proof.

Now you are ready to read our articles on Isaiah to fully understand Isa. 53 correctly

The vast majority of Christians in the world today have not been told this and wander in fables because they lack the correct understanding which only can come from in-depth Bible study. And you have to have the right text before you start. Sadly Christians for the most part cannot find the truth because they are working from a corrupted text. They only reinforce error. Buy yourself a Stone Edition Tanakh. Then you will have the Bible Yeshua used.

So it was the Suffering Servant, Israel, composed of many Israelites, whose lives lived daily in complete obedience to their God which was so pleasing to God that they could be accepted by God as an offering for sin and not their red corpuscles (blood) which Christianity sadly focuses. And the Lord accepted his [the corporate nation of Israel] prayers for the iniquity of all of us. What makes this even more remarkable is that in this very passage from Isa. 53 it is the GENTILE KINGS OF THE WORLD SPEAKING & NOT THE JEWISH PEOPLE OR THE JEWISH PROPHETS! The Gentiles will one day understand the role played by the righteous Jewish people in expiation of their sin! This is prophetic but you can fulfill it today if you open your heart and head to the facts presented in this article.

Such is the teaching of Isaiah and Leviticus.

Because of the proliferation of bloody rites in Gentile paganism, the Gentile converts to Jewish Christianity would in the first centuries, inherently revert back to pagan backgrounds. Thus the emphasis today on blood instead of a God-honoring life as the offering for sin has been inherited by the Gentile Church. Such falsehoods as taught by Paul was a "bridge" to the non-Jewish nations as he attempted to "be all things to all that he might win some". Paul gave the non-Jew nothing more that what they already had; for in the pagan mystery religions, of which Troas was the capital of Mithraism, Paul's home town, the old pagan concepts were rolled into Jesus by Paul for Gentile acceptance. They did not have to accept Judaism per se, he would simply remold Jesus into a neo-pagan to which they could relate. Such is the reckless acts of one desperately trying to be received and accepted because of his rejection by the Jerusalem Church. When Jerusalem would be notified of what Paul was teaching, he would be repeatedly summoned to answer charges. Finally, in Acts 21 he was arrested, but his submission to the Jerusalem church was never in question. They just never accepted "Paul's" gospel. Neither should you! Paul's gospel could not "preach" in Israel, only 1500 miles away when few knew little of a Jewish Jesus or the Torah. Such a clever tactic by Paul only made Yeshua the head of the non-Jewish pantheon which were already filled with pagan gods which gave their body and blood for their followers for salvation. SUCH A TEACHING AS SHARED BY PAUL

IS NOT JEWISH NOR IS SUCH A TEACHING BIBLICAL! IT IS PAGAN TO ITS CORE AND YOU NEED TO KNOW THAT! JAMES AND THE JERUSALEM CHURCH DID! The whole sorry affair can be seen as I have detailed it in this web-site if you read it thoroughly.

I just gave you the Biblical teaching on atonement.

Answer for yourself: Have you noticed we have not discussed "sin offerings" yet but have covered the gamut of atonement? Sin offerings only began after the terrible sin of idolatry and blasphemy of the Name of the LORD when Israel rejected YHVH at Sinai. Now God would add a new law that had not existed prior to that time. Request our article on "The Law That Was Added" to further your understanding in this area.

NOW…WHAT ABOUT SIN OFFERINGS?

Really I don't have much to say except they were instituted after the golden calf incident. Then a whole priesthood and tabernacle was required. But even looking at sin offerings, the same spiritual dynamics that we have learned are applied; namely, the soul or life of the sacrificer is placed on the altar as a picture of his renewed relationship with God and the accuracy of such a demonstration was determined if he had repented, confessed, and made restitution PRIOR to bringing the sacrifice.

CONCLUSION

Having now come to the understanding that it was a life lived above sin that was so pleasing to God that God accepted such a life as an offering and atonement for one's sin, it should behoove you to rethink what you believe about atonement as a Christian. If you were to do some comparative religious study you will see the preponderance of evidence of how pagan concepts of salvation are woven into Pauline theology. I have shown you the Biblical teachings of atonement and have not mentioned Paul's theology once. The reason I have not is that nowhere in the Jewish Masoretic Palestinian text are such Pauline concepts of atonement found.

Only when you read the fraudulent and mistranslated Greek Scriptures, which the Rabbis did not translate, do you begin to find such ideas surfacing in the text. But never fail to understand that such concepts cannot be found in the Jewish Scriptures from which the Greek translation emanated. Somebody "fixed" the Greek translation to read differently. And sadly for you, these altered and paganized Greek mistranslation became the foundation for your Christian Old Testament. To make matters worse, your New Testament quotes from the fraudulent Old Testament. Over and over as you read your Christian Bible you only reinforce and rehearse error! You need to know that. But that happened over 2000 years ago and who knows? Well I do, and others do who have studied enough to see it! The Jews have always known. It is the secularized Jews of today who don't. It is time someone told you! The righteous Jews know this and have known this since 200 BC when the Greek translation was understood by them to be a corruption of the Jewish Scriptures. History records 3 attempts of the Jews to correct such a forged Greek translation but sadly their efforts were not to overtake the popularity of the already translated LXX (Septuagint).

Understand an animal's soul represented the soul of one making the sacrifice, and we, as non-Jews, today are beneficiaries of having the Jew's prayers for our sin on Yom Kippur. Jesus is the archetype for all of Israel. But in this lesson we must no longer overlook the importance of a life lived above sin which procures one's redemption and not the inert blood of the animal or of Jesus. Lives lived honoring God through faith and obedience atones. Your Covenant requires it! Such is the message of Bet Emet as we are called to live like Jesus and not just "believe in Jesus." It has been my experience as a Pastor over the years to encounter multitudes of Christians who trust in Christ's blood instead of understanding the importance of his life, symbolized by his soul in his blood, as lived in obedience to God as a form of atonement, or even their own lives, as lived pleasing to God for their OWN atonement. We must walk out our salvation with fear and trembling. We are co-laborers with God in our own salvation through faith and repentance. Such a mistaken understanding of our redemption as seen from Paul, since not being taught the truth from a Hebraic perspective, has caused multitudes of Christians to trust in the acclaimed miraculous powers of the blood of Jesus instead of focusing of the miraculousness of a life lived above sin. Such a false sense of security in "blood" instead of "lives lived holy before God and man" unconsciously causes the believer to not regard sin with revulsion as he should. We tend to view sin as less harmful than it is, and compromise with sin which lies at the door.

The bottom line for all Christians to understand is that we have heard way too much preached about Jesus and far too little studied from the texts of the Jewish Bible which tell us exactly and accurately who he is as well as his original mission. If we had studied the original sources available to us, we would not be so mixed up theologically in a Christianity today which boasts over 2000 different denominations all maintaining they have the truth about Jesus while at the same time being the most violent and crime ridden nation in the world.

SOMETHING IS WRONG WITH THE MESSAGE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH…LOOK AT THE FRUIT OF THIS MESSAGE IN OUR COUNTRY WITH A CHURCH ON EVERY CORNER AND TELEVISIONS FILLED WITH THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE. JUST LOOK OUT YOUR DOOR AND ASK IF THAT IS THE BEST THE HOLY SPIRIT CAN DO?? ??????

May God forgive our laziness to let others tell us what to believe instead of us studying to show ourselves approved unto God. I just showed you part of the problem. Implicitly we are led to not revere the Laws and Commandments of God because "Jesus died for me" and my get out of jail card saves me. As a Pastor I saw such falsehoods lived out in the lives of the congregation year after year. When there is no Law, no Commandments, no requirements, no accountability, then there is no righteous fruit and we have our newspapers filled with horror story after horror story and many of these atrocities are being committed by clergy.

Answer for yourself: When was the last time you saw a Rabbi skip off with the funds of the synagogue or be caught with a prostitute? When was the last time a Rabbi was found molesting a child? Are they any different that non-Jews; or is it because they have a fear of God that is lacking in the Christian Church because we have "implicitly" been sold a bill of goods that we are "already" forgiven and can get away with it because "Jesus paid it all?"

And sadly few can count on their lives being a sufficient atonement for their sin when your whole life the Church has taught you to live without Law and the Commandments of God. This the legacy of Paul and his mystery religions superimposed upon a Rabbi names Yeshua/Jesus. You were taught these "laws and commandments" were a curse. Emotionalism is a sorry substitute for knowledge.

Answer for yourself: For after all if saved by the blood of Jesus, what need do I have to live like Jesus and not disobey the commandments of God? Isn't Jesus my "grace card" that allows me to live anyway I want to and not fear the end-result of such non-accountable behavior?

Answer for yourself: If saved by the blood of another, what does a little sin mean…what can it hurt; for after all, did not Jesus die for me as the Roman document ...the New Testament states?

Answer for yourself: See the tragic thinking involved in focusing upon the blood of Jesus instead of the life of Jesus lived above sin?

THINK!

Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #6

IS BLOOD REQUIRED TO ATONE FOR SIN?

"...without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness." (Hebrews 9:22)

Answer for yourself: Is this statement from the epistle to the Hebrews really true or is it a contradiction of the Eternal Word of God and the Bible Jesus used?

The central theme of Christianity and the New Testament (NT) is the sacrificial offering of the blood of 'Jesus Christ' as atonement for the sins of the entire world. "The blood of 'Jesus' was shed in our stead and is the only means of atonement for sin."

Answer for yourself: Is this claim truly consistent with The Holy Scriptures (OT)?

Before you say "yes" you might possibly need to be honest with yourself by answering this question: "Just how well do I really know the Old Testament Scriptures and their meanings since I am a New Testament Christian?"

Christians claim that the absolute need for blood is rooted in the Law of Moses (the Torah). Traditionally they will often cite the book of Leviticus as proof:

"And whatever man of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn among you, who consumes any blood, I will set My face against that person who consumes blood, and will cut him off from among his people. For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that makes an atonement for the soul. Therefore, I say to the children of Israel, 'No one among you shall consume blood, nor shall any stranger who sojourns among you consume blood.'" (Leviticus 17:11)

What should immediately be apparent is that this passage is concerned first and foremost with the prohibition against consuming blood. The subject of atonement here is secondary. We are told that the reason for this prohibition is that the blood contains the life or vitality of the animal. Strong's number 3722 is the Hebrew word "Kaphar"; Gesenius' Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon explains this to mean (1) to cover over, to over spread as with pitch. (2) to obtain forgiveness. (3) to make expiation for an offender, to free him from charge.

Another reason is that consuming blood was a very important part of the idolatrous religious practices of the people and nations surrounding Israel (Gen. 9:4 and Deut. 12:23).

Israel was clearly instructed by The Holy One of Israel through Moses not to imitate this abhorrent pagan practice in any manner (and this has serious implications for Christian communion, both Catholic and Protestant). Although the actual blood was later to be substituted with wine in many of the sacred banquets of pagan religions, there is ample evidence to support the claim that literal blood was consumed as part of the ritual worship of pagan deities, and this as a form of atonement.

Please listen to this! Since this passage from Lev. 17 is predominately concerned with the prohibition against consuming blood, we must look elsewhere in the Bible for instructions concerning atonement for sins. This passage in Leviticus will become clearer later on. The passage does say that since blood symbolizes the life of the animal, it can be used as a means of atoning for our sins. It does not say, however, that blood is the only means of atoning for sins. Indeed, The Holy Scriptures tell us of several other things that can be used instead of the blood of a sacrificial ram or bullock.

OTHER MEANS OF ATONEMENT…..IS THIS NEWS TO YOU?

"And Moses said unto Aaron, 'Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from [YHVH]; the plague is begun.' And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people: and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people." (Numbers 16:46-47)

Here, incense can be used to atone for sins in the same manner as the blood sacrifices of animals.

Notice what else could be used in place of blood:

"The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less than half a shekel (offering of money), when they give an offering unto [YHVH], to make an atonement for your souls. And thou shalt take the atonement money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before [YHVH], to make an atonement for your souls." (Exodus 30:15-16)

Here, one's offering to the LORD can be used to atone for sins in the same manner as the blood sacrifices of animals.

The phrase "to make atonement for your souls" in these verses is the same expression as in Leviticus 17:11:

"We have therefore brought an oblation [again items of worth and money] (Deut. 12:23-25, 30) for [YHVH], what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before [YHVH]." Numbers 31:50)

In these passages, money could be used to make atonement for the children of Israel. The principle here is not that atonement can be bought [this was the practice of the great universal church whose priests routinely sold forgiveness]. Rather, this is about doing charitable things with money. In this case, the money was to be used for the physical maintenance of the temple building.

DOES BLOOD COVER ALL SIN?

According to the Bible, blood sacrifices held only limited atonement capabilities. Foremost among it's limitations was that blood sacrifices were only brought for unintentional sins. If a person committed some sin out of ignorance, such as doing work on the Sabbath when perhaps they mistakenly thought it was Sunday, then atonement could be made through a sacrificial sin offering. Sacrifices did not help to atone for sins that were done intentionally. Notice the instructions to the priests concerning this:

"And [YHVH] spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of [YHVH] concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them: If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people; then let him bring for his sin, which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto [YHVH] for a sin offering. And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before [YHVH]; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before [YHVH]. And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation: And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle of the blood seven times before [YHVH], before the veil of the sanctuary. And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before [YHVH], which is in the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation" Leviticus 4:1-7)

This claim that only blood could atone for sins raises many questions. What happens if someone could not afford to purchase a ram or bullock for his sin offering? Is it possible that a loving CREATOR would institute a system of atonement that could only be used by the wealthy?

"And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring for his trespass, which he hath committed, two turtledoves, or two young pigeons, unto [YHVH]; one for a sin offering, and the other for a burnt offering." Leviticus 5:7)

Here, if a person could not afford the sacrificial ram or bullock for a sin offering, certain types of small birds could be used instead.

Answer for yourself: However, what if someone was so destitute, that he couldn't afford even these small birds?

"But if his means are insufficient for two turtledoves or two young pigeons, then for his offering for that which he has sinned, he shall bring the tenth of an ephah of fine flour for a sin offering; he shall not put oil on it or place incense on it, for it is a sin offering." (Leviticus 5:11)

This is very interesting, but seriously damaging to the Christian doctrine. If birds could not be afforded, some simple flour could be used instead and would be just as effective in the eyes of Israel's CREATOR. The scriptures are quite clear on this. Since flour could be used for a sin offering, it is evident that blood was not the sole means of atonement. The Christian position that only the shed blood of 'Jesus' could atone for sins is falling by the wayside in light of the Holy Scriptures. Actually, considering the beating and torture which 'Jesus' is said to have suffered at The hands of the Romans, you have to wonder why he didn't just bring a sack of flour to the Romans and let them whip, beat, mock and crucify it instead!!!

WHAT IF THERE WAS NO TEMPLE OR AARONIC PRIEST …HOW WAS ATONEMENT ACHIEVED?

While the Temple stood, sacrifices without question served as part of the atonement process. If you read the first articles in this series then you understand the meaning of the presentation of the "blood" on the altar within the Temple.

Answer for yourself: What, though, was to be the fate of the people who did not have access to the Temple?

Answer for yourself: What were the Israelite people supposed to do after 586 B.C.E. when the first Temple was destroyed and they were exiled to Babylon?

Answer for yourself: What did the Jewish people do in the times of the Maccabees when the Syrian-Greeks were in control of the Temple and did not allow sacrifices?

After king Solomon completed the spectacular temple building in Jerusalem, he dedicated it with a very moving speech. This lengthy and very beautiful speech can be read in the books of 1 Kings 8 and II Chronicles 6. Notice, however, that Solomon doesn't speak about sacrifices at all! If sacrifices were the focal point of the temple, this omission would be very curious. Rather, the focus of the Temple was shown to be the Ark, containing the Laws which our CREATOR wanted us to live by. The Temple was first and foremost a symbol of the Shechinah, or presence of The Holy One of Israel.

"I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever. (I Kings 8:13)

"And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them" (Exodus 25:8).

Toward the end of the speech, Solomon addresses the subject of the Israelite people being denied access to the temple:

"If they return to You with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their enemies who have taken them captive, and pray to You toward their land which You have given to their fathers, the city which You have chosen, and the house which I have built for Your name; then hear their prayer and their supplication in heaven Your dwelling place, and maintain their cause, and forgive Your people who have sinned against You and all their transgressions which they have transgressed against You..." (I Kings 8:46-50)

This passage helps us understand Leviticus 17:11 properly. The Bible clearly teaches that blood sacrifices were not necessary in order to atone for sins. Prayer and repentance are shown to be the effective means of atonement. Certainly, when the Temple stood, and if one could afford an animal, a sacrifice was brought as part of the atonement process for unintentional sins. What Leviticus 17:11 teaches us is that when we bring such an animal as a sacrifice, we are not allowed to consume its blood, because as the life force, it is the part of the animal that affects our atonement. In addition, we were not to consume the blood because this was the practice of the pagan people who worshipped the sun-god 'baal.'

WAS YESHUA AN ACCEPTABLE SACRIFICE?

Another focal point of the NT is the Christian claim that the crucifixion of 'Jesus' served as the final atoning sacrifice for the sins of the world. However, if the sacrificial instructions set forth by the Law of Moses are examined closely, and you see the guidelines set forth for how sacrifices are to be brought, it will be clear that 'Jesus' could never serve as an atoning sacrifice. Clearly, not just any blood shed in any manner would satisfy the biblical requirements for atonement. Notice the instructions set forth in the Torah concerning sacrifices:

"For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls..." (Lev. 17:11)

Notice that the blood of the acceptable sacrifice was to be shed upon the holy alter of the temple, and not on the pagan phallic symbol of the cross. Besides Yeshua died on a stake without a crossbar as was customary of the Romans. Clearly, not just any spilled blood is acceptable as a sacrifice. YHVH set forth very meticulous rules and laws governing acceptable sacrifices brought to Him. "Jesus'" crucifixion may qualify as an atonement according to theGreek Testament of Mithraism but since his blood was not offered on the altar, it is not in compliance with what The Holy Scriptures of Israel's CREATOR requires.

There are many other factors that would render the crucifixion of 'Jesus' an unacceptable sacrifice according to scriptural guidelines. According to the Biblical rules in Leviticus, all sacrifices had to be offered by a Levite

Priest, a descendant of Aaron. According to the "gospel" accounts, 'Jesus' was killed by pagan, gentile Roman soldiers.

Biblical law also prohibited any sacrifice that was blemished or maimed:

"Ye shall offer at your own will a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you. And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace offerings unto [YHVH] to accomplish his vow, or a freewill offering in beefs or sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein. Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen [cyst], or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto [YHVH], nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto [YHVH]. (Leviticus 22:19-21).

Now we have a problem. The "gospels" of the NT clearly teach that 'Jesus' was beaten and whipped, which would have made him blemished and maimed and therefore an unfit sacrifice. Frequently, Christians react to this line of reasoning by protesting that it is improper to be so literal, and that "Jesus'" death was more of a symbolic or spiritual sacrifice. Christians will insist, indeed the NT itself makes the claim, that 'Jesus' was literally our Passover sacrifice. Remember in the book of John, when the Roman soldiers pierced 'Jesus' [after he was already dead, mind you]? Here we are told that they did not break his legs because this would violate the rules of the proper Passover sacrifice (Matthew 27:26, Mark 15:19, and John 19:3). The legs of the crucified were sometimes broken to hasten death. It was necessary that crucifixion victims must prop themselves up using their legs in order to facilitate breathing. This could prolong death for days at times. The legs were broken so that proper breathing could be prevented, and the lungs crushed the diaphragm and breathing was extremely difficult.:

"But coming to 'Jesus,' when they saw that he was already dead, they did not break his legs...in order that the Scripture might be fulfilled: Not a bone of him shall be broken." (John 19:33-36)

The gospel of John portrays 'Jesus' as the Passover lamb which was not supposed to have any of its bones broken (cf. Exodus 12:46, Numbers 9:12). If Christians insist that 'Jesus' was the literal Passover sacrifice, and his blood atoned for our sins, then 'Jesus,' as that sacrifice, was subject to the literal guidelines set by the Law of Moses given by CREATOR of Israel governing an acceptable sacrifice. Christians always seem to want to have it both ways. The NT itself proposes that 'Jesus' was a literal sacrifice. When confronted with the clear Biblical instructions on how acceptable sacrifices were to be offered, however, they will complain that this is just legalistic nit picking.

You may wonder why I present this material to you, our readers. Simply, knowing what I know and what I have uncovered which is not taught to the Christian Church but which Jews seem to have always known, behooves me to share it with my brothers and sisters in hopes that they might learn as well the truth behind the New Testament and repent thereby accepting the true faith of Yeshua. Such honors God and guarantees acceptance when we die. More to follow. Shalom.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #7

WHY WAS YESHUA PATTERNED AFTER THE PASSOVER SACRIFICE...SHOULD IT NOT HAVE BEEN YOM KIPPUR?

It really does not make sense to type 'Jesus' as the Passover sacrifice anyway. We know from Exodus 12 that the Passover sacrifice did not serve as atonement for sins, it merely commemorates the exodus from Egypt. Even when the lamb was slaughtered in Egypt and its' blood smeared on the door-posts, the blood did not serve to atone for the sins of anyone. It was a sign for the angel of death to pass over Israelite homes during the plague of the first born. The only people in danger were first-born males. The blood wasn't a help to other people in the family, and didn't serve as an atonement for the first born or save the mothers or sisters of any family.

It would have made much more sense to type 'Jesus' after the Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) sacrifice, which actually was an atonement for the sins of all the people. The problem here was that according to Leviticus 16:10, 21-22, the animal that atoned for the sins of the nation was not killed, but sent live out into the desert. (THINK)...it was not killed...it lived...as we saw earlier in the real Isaiah...."life" atones..not death!

Now the followers of 'Jesus' had another problem. According to the prophecies of ancient Israel, the Messiah was not supposed to die before completing His mission. The followers of 'Jesus,' who claimed that he was Israel's Messiah, now had to deal with 'Jesus'' embarrassing death at the hands of the Romans. So they correlated him with the slain Passover sacrifice. This tap dance around the scriptures to try and legitimize 'Jesus' as the Messiah cannot negate the clear lesson from Leviticus and the Day of Atonement that the shedding of blood is not a pre-requisite for atonement.

CAN YESHUA OR ANY OTHER PERSON ATONE FOR YOUR SINS?

Answer for yourself: Where did this idea originate that one man, or that anyone for that matter, could atone and pay for the sins of one or more people?

Maybe you don't know or have never read on the subject. Many don't and have not done adequate study to know the answer. Others have. It should be perfectly clear to you, if you have ever looked into the subject, that such notions stem from the Babylonian mystery religion of ancient Mesopotamia. The Greeks and Romans, as well as their ancestors, had multiple legends whereby heroes died for followers, cities, friends, for the law, for the truth, etc. Many such “deaths” were thought to bring atonement to those who believed in such sacrificial acts. This is fact when can be demonstrable to anyone who inquires.

What is certain is that the idea that an innocent person can be killed instead of those who are guilty is not consistent with what the Bible teaches. After the sin of the Golden Calf, YHVH was so outraged that His intentions were to totally annihilate and destroy the Israelite people. Moses offers to die in their place. Notice the response to Moses suggestion:

"Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin...; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And [YHWH] said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." (Exodus 32:32-33)

Throughout the Bible, YHVH says that one person cannot die for the sins of another:

"Fathers shall not be put to death for their sons, nor shall sons be put to death for their fathers; everyone shall be put to death for his own sin" (Deuteronomy 24:16)

"But everyone will die for his own sin; each man who eats sour grapes, his teeth will be set on edge" (Jeremiah 31:30)

"The person who sins will die. The son will not bear the punishment for the father's iniquity, nor will the father bear the punishment for the son's iniquity; the righteousness of the righteous will be upon himself, and the wickedness of the wicked will be upon himself" (Ezekiel 18:20)

"He who justifies the wicked, and he who condemns the righteous, both of them are an abomination to the Lord" (Proverbs 17:15).

"No man ['Jesus' included] can by any means redeem his brother, or give to 'God' a ransom for him" (Psalms 49:7)

Unlike the Greek Testament in the Christian Bible, The Holy Scriptures of the One True CREATOR of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob clearly teach that we are responsible for our own actions and sins. We alone must account and pay the price. God does not change! No virgin born savior deity from Babylonian mythology can contradict the clear instructions of CREATOR of Israel.

Answer for yourself: Why are there two theologies concerning atonement in your Bible; one in the Old Testament by the God of Israel who says He changes not, and then the Pauline corpus of material in the New Testament that contradicts it by paralleling pagan mystery religions and their false atonements of their false gods? This is very evident when the Old Testament is compared with the NT, and if you say you never saw it dear one you never looked deep enough for it is there!

NOW FOR THE REALLY BIG QUESTION

Here is a question that Christian ministers have danced around for two thousand years, but have never truthfully answered. This question bothered me all the years I pastored.

Answer for yourself: If indeed 'Jesus' came as the final sacrifice to atone for the sins of the world, why do The Holy Scriptures proclaim that the Third Temple will be built and sacrifices resumed during the Messianic era?

The vast majority of average Christians are completely ignorant of these prophecies, as they have been cleverly hidden by their ministers. Notice the clear teachings of The Holy Scriptures regarding this:

"Even those I will bring to My holy mountain, and make them joyful in My house of prayer. Their burnt offerings and their sacrifices will be acceptable on My altar; for My house will be called a house of prayer for all the peoples." (Isaiah 56:7)

"From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia My worshipers, My dispersed ones will bring My offerings." (Zephaniah 3:10)

"All the flocks of Kedar will be gathered together to you, the rams of Nebaioth will minister to you; they will go up with acceptance on My altar, and I shall glorify My glorious house." (Isaiah 60:7)

"And I will make a covenant of peace with them; it will be an everlasting covenant with them. And I will place them and multiply them, and will set My sanctuary in their midst forever." (Ezekiel 37:26)

"And He will sit as a smelter and purifier of silver, and He will purify the sons of Levi and refine them like gold and silver, so that they may present to [YHWH] offerings in righteousness. Then the offering of Judah and Jerusalem will be pleasant to [YHWH], as in the days of old and as in former years." (Malachi 3:3-4)

LET THERE BE NO DOUBT

(Ezekiel 45:17) "And it shall be the princes part to provide the burnt offerings, the grain offerings, and the libations...to make the atonement for the house of Israel."

Apparently, dear reader, 'Jesus' sacrifice did not make atonement for the sins of all the world. If the death of 'Jesus' had atoned for all sins for all time, why will atonement need to be made during the messianic era?

Answer for yourself: How do you answer the true words of Israel's CREATOR, Mr. Christian minister? These questions caused me to study like I never had to find the answers. The root of the whole problem lies in the texts and their authority. As a Christian Pastor I came to realize after many years of serious study following Seminary that the New Testament was little more than a propagandist Roman document full of anti-Semitic ideas and teachings. Considering all the manuscripts available to day totally a little less than 6000 pieces, there are over 300,000 contradictions and no two are "identical" or "read the same". Surely God could do better. As if that was not enough, my heart broke within me when I discovered my KJV Old Testament was a purposefully falsified and altered translation of the Jewish Masoretic text which had been "doctored" as had the New Testament. It took over ten years to substantiate these discrepancies beyond any doubt and were a major factor in my resignation from my Pastorate. I was an ordained Pastor of an apostate faith. Such shame no man can know. I had believed "the" lie and the "very elect" was deceived. I accepted everything on "faith" never questioning anything. I was gullible for the LORD until YHVH put in my heart and head the desire to study out the conflicting errors of my Christian theology. The fruit I lay before you for your inspection as a gift to God and as a love offering in hopes your hunger for truth is greater than you commitment to tradition.

YHVH AND MERCY

The Christian claim that only through bloodshed can atonement be made show that Christians are unfamiliar with how compassionate and merciful the Holy One of Israel really is. Sometimes, He forgives us simply because He is kind, loving, compassionate and merciful. Even when we don't seek our LORD appropriately, He has the ability to reach out to us with love and forgive us:

"Who is a [Elohiym] like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not His anger for ever, because He delighteth in mercy." (Micah 7:18)

"Their heart was not steadfast toward Him, nor were they faithful in His covenant. But He, being compassionate, forgave their iniquity...remembering that they were but flesh." (Psalms 78:36-39)

"You have not brought Me the sheep of your burnt offerings...or the fat of your sacrifices, but you have burdened Me with your sins...Nevertheless, I will wipe out your transgressions for My own sake, and I will not remember your sins." (Isaiah 43:23-25)

Truly, truly the Holy one of Israel is a just and merciful CREATOR.

WHAT DO THE PROPHETS HAVE TO SAY?

Answer for yourself: If the Christian claim that one must be covered by the shed blood of the Messiah in order to make atonement for his sins is valid, why can this claim not be validated by the writings of the prophets?

Time and time again, the writings of the prophets emphasize prayer and repentance as the method to atone for sins. I challenge any Christian to produce a scripture from Unaltered Holy Hebrew Scriptures (OT that Jesus used) that teaches us that we must believe in the atoning blood of a Messiah in order to obtain salvation [even the Christian Bible does not say it]. What the prophets teach us is that our own obedience to the laws of Israel's CREATOR combined with sincere repentance and prayer for forgiveness will atone for sin if done with the proper attitude of humility.

- "That every man will turn from his evil way, then I will forgive their iniquity and their sin." (Jeremiah 36:3)
- "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to [YHWH], and He will have compassion on him; and to our [Elohiym]. for He will abundantly pardon." (Isaiah 55:7)
- "And if My people who are called by My name humble themselves and pray, and seek My face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." (II Chronicles 7:14).
- "But if the wicked man turns from all his sins which he has committed and observes all My statutes and practices justice and righteousness, he shall surely live; he shall not die. All his transgressions which he has committed will not be remembered against him; because of the righteousness which he has practiced he shall live...When a wicked man turns away from his wickedness which he has committed and practices justice and righteousness, he will save his life...Repent and turn away from all your transgressions, so that iniquity may not become a stumbling block to you (Ezekiel 18:21- 22,27,30).
- "By loving kindness and truth iniquity is atoned for..." (Proverbs 16:6).
- "If you return to [Elohiym] you will be restored; if you remove unrighteousness far from your tent...then you will delight in [Elohiym]..." (Job 22:23-27).

Clearly, the central teaching of The Holy Scriptures is that we must break away from our sinful past and sincerely repent. This is the only way to restore our relationship with the Holy One of Israel. If one strays from the path set forth by the laws of our God, one must repent and return to the path. This is how forgiveness is obtained. Even when sacrifices were offered, they in and of themselves did not effect atonement. You now have see that in the first articles in this series. The sacrifice was part of the process but only a "picture" of the sacrificer after his repentance. What is repentance? Returning to ETERNAL by forsaking our evil ways and praying for forgiveness. The prophets were constantly correcting the Israelite people for relying on blood sacrifices as the essential element of atonement instead of or without repentance and obedience to ETERNAL's laws:

- "What are your multiplied sacrifices to Me? says [YHWH]. I have had enough of burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed cattle. And I take no pleasure in the blood of bulls, lambs, or goats...Wash yourselves, make yourselves clean; remove the evil of your deeds from My sight. Cease to do evil, learn to do good; seek justice, reprove the ruthless , defend the orphan, plead for the widow. Come let us reason together says [YHWH], 'Though your sins are as scarlet, they will be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they will be like wool, if you consent and obey..."(Isaiah 1:11-18).
- "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord." (Proverbs 15:8).
- "To do righteousness and justice is more acceptable to [YHWH] than sacrifice." (Proverbs 21:3)
- "For I delight in loyalty rather than sacrifice, and in the knowledge of [Elohiym] rather than burnt offerings." (Hosea 6:6).
- "Has [YHWH] as great a delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken more than the fat of rams." (I Samuel 15:22)
- "With what shall I come to [YHWH], and bow myself before the [Elohiym] on high? Shall I come to Him with burnt offerings, with yearling calves? Does [YHWH] take delight in thousands of rams, in ten thousand rivers of oil? Shall I present my firstborn for my rebellious acts, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He has told you, O man, what is good; and what does [YHWH] require of you but to do justice, to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God" (Micah 6:6-8)

Answer for yourself: Do you now begin to see what the very wise king Solomon was trying to explain in 1 Kings 8, when he said that even though the Israelite people may not always have access to the sacrifices and the Priesthood, they would always have access to the Holy One of Israel?

Solomon, the wisest man who ever lived, understood that repentance and not blood is the Scriptural form of atonement.

Answer for yourself: Remember the story of Jonah?

He was sent to the evil city of Nineveh {non-Jews) to warn them of their impending destruction. Jonah does not come into the city and tell the people that unless they begin offering sacrifices they are doomed. He does not tell them that unless they accept on faith that the shed blood of Israel's Messiah will atone for their sins they are lost. No! He warns them to repent. Their response to his warnings is: they fast, pray, and turn from their evil.

Answer for yourself: What is YHVH's response to their repentance?

"When [Elohiym] saw their deeds that they turned from their wicked way, then [Elohiym] relented concerning the calamity which He had declared He would bring upon them, and He did not do it." (Jonah 3:10).

EVEN NEBUCHADNEZZAR IS TOLD HOW TO ATONE FOR HIS SINS….VERY INTERESTING....

"Therefore, O king, may my advice be pleasing to you: Redeem your sins by doing righteousness, and your iniquities by showing mercy to the poor." (Daniel 4:27).

THE POWER OF PRAYER FOR ATONEMENT

After the ten northern tribes split away from Judah, a civil war prevented most of Israel from Temple worship. The prophet Hosea addressed this situation and instructed the people accordingly:

"Return, O Israel, to [YHWH] your God, For you have stumbled because of your iniquity. Take words with you and return to [YHWH]. Say to Him, 'Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously, for we will render as bullocks the offerings of our lips'." (Hosea 14:1-2)

We are able to approach our god directly with prayer, which is possible at all times and regardless of the size of our bank accounts; and He assures us that sincere prayer can achieve forgiveness for our sins:

- "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O [YHWH], the [Elohiym] of my salvation. And my tongue shall sing aloud of Your righteousness. O [YHWH], open my lips, and my mouth shall show forth Your praise. For You do not delight in burnt offerings. The sacrifices of [Elohiym] are a broken spirit, a broken and contrite heart. These, O [Elohiym], You will not despise." (Psalms 51:14-17)"
- "I will praise the name of [Elohiym] with a song, and will magnify Him with thanksgiving. This shall please [YHWH] better than an ox or bullock that has horns and hoofs." (Psalm 69:30-31)
- "For You, [YHWH], are good, and ready to forgive, and abundant in loving kindness to all who call upon You. Give ear, O [YHWH] to my prayer, and give heed to the voice of my supplications." (Psalm 86:5-6)
- "And listen to the supplications of Your servant and of Your people Israel, when they pray toward this place; hear from heaven Your dwelling place, hear and forgive." (II Chronicles 6:21)

The Holy Scriptures of Israel are very clear. Prayer, a humble attitude, and above all, sincere heartfelt repentance is what the Holy One of Israel requires of His people in order to atone for sins. No doubt He knew thousands of years in advance that there would come a time when some would wrongly rely on the blood of a deified human sacrifice to vicariously replace obedience to His laws. It is evident to anyone with eyes to see that a comparison between The Holy Scriptures of Israel and the Greek NT to 'Baal' will reveal two entirely different religions. One is dedicated to the One True ETERNAL of Israel; the other is dedicated to just another of many mythological savior gods of the Babylonian mysteries.

The time will come when Israel's true messiah will usher in an era of peace when all nations will believe in and seek to worship the one true Holy One of Israel of our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. At that time, the proponents of Christianity will deeply repent of the day when they taught the beloved nation of Israel and the descendants of Abraham to break the first commandment and worship another besides the Holy One of Israel.

THOUGHTS ON THE DEATH OF JESUS AS RELATED TO THE SACRIFICIAL SYSTEM #8

Bet Emet stands for "truth" as the name implies; House of Truth. Such truth has been dug out of man-made traditions and anti-Semitic teachings held sacred by millions for almost 2 millennia. What I am going to do next is somewhat dangerous but I want you warn you ahead of time. I am going to make an assumption that I know is totally false for the purpose of teaching another truth which will shed even more light upon the truths of atonement.

LET'S ASSUME.....ALTHOUGH IT IS WRONG....JUST FOR A MINUTE.....

Let us assume that the traditional Christian teaching about Jesus' death being a sacrifice for atonement was true. So we approach what is said next with the erroneous assumption that that Jesus' death was for our sin. Now lets proceed.

ATONEMENT FOR BOTH TABLETS OF THE LAW OR ONLY FOR THE FIRST TABLET? THIS WILL SURPRISE YOU!

Answer for yourself: As a Christian, being told your whole life that Jesus' death was an atonement for your sin, then is this "atonement" as seen in his sacrifice (a type and shadow of sin offerings) an atonement for all kinds of sin?

Honestly, the answer is "NO" not all sin, because in the sacrifice of lambs, on Yom Kippur for instance, they only atoned for sins of the First Tablet of the Law and not the Second Tablet of the Law.

This is very important to recognize especially when one makes parallels to Jesus as a "type and shadow" of Old Testament truths regarding atonement. And few Christians have ever studied enough to know this....but the Jews did!

You can be a Christian you whole life and go to church your whole life and NEVER know that even when sacrifices were brought to the Temple that they not only ONLY atoned for unintentional sins....but also ONLY atoned for the sins of the First Tablet of the Law and not for ANY sins committed which were violations of the Second Tablet of the Law!

Answer for yourself: Even if Jesus' death was an atonement for sin, then if being truthful to the rule of "types and shadows" how is it possible that his death and shed blood atoned as the "Lamb of God" for sins that never were atoned for by any animal sacrifice?

THINK!

Knowing this, that Jesus is type and shadow of the Suffering Servant of God, instead of a representative of the "many" "Suffering Servants" of Israel as he really was, then you can see how a false security in focusing on the blood could, and does lead, others to think light of sin and compromise with sin much more than they should (not knowing that such sins of the Second Tablet of the Law are not handled by the sacrifices for atonement).

Answer for yourself: What? Is this news to you? Did your pastor ever tell you this? Mine never did!

Answer for yourself: Then how are we to get atonement for such things we do when we sin if sacrifices NEVER covered it before?

Answer for yourself: Did God give us a "way" for atonement for such sins and because as Christians and followers of Jesus in Christianity he we failed to understand the sacrificial system correctly and miss this important message?

Such knowledge comes only if you study the Sacrificial process in detail. If Christians trusting the blood for "everything" only knew that the atonement provided by the Suffering Servant Israel (as typified in Jesus) atoned only for the First Tablet of the Law they would most likely think twice before sinning, thus understanding they are not "under the blood" for all things, that their moral responsibility and fear of God is a requirement in being co-laborers with God in their own salvation. Now you should better understand the passage which says "work out YOUR salvation with fear and trembling

If we truly understand the Sacrificial system, and you should now if you have been reading these articles, then you know that Jesus, and the Suffering Servant of God (Israel) did not die for atonement for ALL SINS! Without this knowledge of sins atoned only for the First Tablet of the Law (sins between man toward God) we will not have a strong enough deterrent to avoid sinning sins involved in the Second Tablet of the Law…sins between man and man. Thus, understanding the Sacrificial system and the dynamics involved, the more correct interpretation would be "Christ died because of sins." And in this death of Yeshua as a paradigm of all of Israel [Suffering Servant] was efficacy for sins of the First Tablet of the Law ONLY and not the Second Tablet of the Law. The Second Tablet of the Law is atoned for by your repentance, confession, prayer, restitution, alms, etc., as Isaiah and other Prophets teach in the Hebrew Scriptures where were later altered by the Alexandrian Essenes and later Romans to exclude such concepts from the Hebrew Scriptures when translated into the Greek and Latin!

Let us not forget that Israel is a Holy Nation and a Royal Priesthood. A Priest's function is to make intercession for another and aid in another's reconciliation. As you saw earlier that prayer was one of the several forms of atonement, then this should renew your appreciation for the Jewish people who, on Yom Kippur, stand in the gap for the world in their prayer services. They literally, as Priests to YHVH, pray for the world and their sins that God would be merciful and forgive their sin. This is such a Holy thing which is not understood by Christians let alone Christian missionaries who are fixated on converting every Jew to Christianity?

Answer for yourself: If such a demonic and diabolical plan was ever to succeed, God forbid, then who would stand in the gap for the world on Yom Kippur.....Baptists, Catholics, Charismatics? Christianity does not ever recognize or observe the commanded Holy Days in the Bible.

ARE YOU GUILTY OF BREAKING THE SECOND TABLET OF THE LAW.....AND NOT KNOWING IT?

So many might have read this article so far and say…"so what…I don't break the commands of the Second Tablet of the Law?"

Not so fast now.

Christians, because of their perverse theology, break them at will, and what is so devious, is that they do it without ever knowing. My purpose is not to offend anyone, but if I could be honest with you and God for a moment I want you to grasp this next sentence. When I graduated from Seminary I had learned a lot, but most was religious propaganda to support a particular denominational position. It was only after years of intense study following Seminary did I come to the knowledge of the truth that I had hoped to find there but didn't. And if I can say that then what is the the level of understanding of the typical pew setter in the Churches who never reads books or studies his own faith in-depth?

If you were aware of what is contained in the Second Tablet of the Law you would be overwhelmed and I would hope, once realizing the magnitude of such violations of God's will by the typical Christian following "Christian doctrine" then your tears would run like rivers and your conduct change.

TAKE TITHING FOR EXAMPLE

This is a commandment between man and man, as the Bible commands that the tithe be used for certain things only. These "things" were always "people" in one way or another, for only if the giving of one's finances was to God and Godly pursuits would the Kingdom of Heaven be manifested on earth as it is in Heaven. God does not need our money; other do. For example the Tithe is commanded every 2 our of 6 years to be given wholly to the poor, the lame, blind, sick, infirm, widows, orphans, etc. Only is these needy people, make in the image of God, receive your blessings and care will they experience the love of God the way He intended. God intended their need be met; not miraculously from heaven, but by you!

Two years out of six you were commanded by God to "keep" your tithe and use in for "whatever your soul lusted after." Now, understand this was to be in a Godly pursuit. For example the celebration of the Sabbaths and the Seven Biblical Festivals. Also, you were commanded to share it with the poor as they again might experience in "earnest" the Kingdom of Heaven God had prepared for them. Notice it was you again who were to give to these people.

Lastly, two years out of six you were to give your tithe, and I paraphrase, to the choir, the janitors, and the levities. The levities basically are the choir. They also taught the people. They were NOT preachers but teachers. Notice also this is one of the gifts to the body as Paul states. Conspicuously absent from such a list of gifts is a "preacher." Understand if I am a good teacher, then you the student, become the proclaimer or the "preacher." That is how God intended it to work.

Now, the vast, vast majority of Christian Churches do not allocate their funds in the above manner as taught by the Holy Scriptures. Ask for our teachings on the Tithe and you can quickly see in detail of what I speak. This means that no matter how much you give to your church, if your spiritual authorities do not obey the Commandments of giving and appropriate your monies in areas not sanctioned by God in His Word then they have robbed from God not matter what Scriptures they read when they take up the offering. And you become an accomplice to stealing from God as you are accountable for His Word whether you know His Word or not. You will be judged by it.

Now as you can see, you can give to your Christian Church all day long and "feel" good about it, but you violate the Commands of God in doing so. Now understand you violate God Commandments of giving by so trusting your Church with your money.

Answer for yourself: If you have believed in Jesus' death for your sin, as if such "death" and "shed blood" does not and never did atone for violations of the Second Tablet of the Law....then you do realize you die in your sin and never know until you see God face to face?

Answer for yourself: You really have two problems. You didn't know well enough the Commandments about tithing to even questions what your Church is doing and you did not know well enough the Sacrificial System to know that some sins are never covered by it. Then do you realize that your erroneous understandings of such things as caused you to ignorantly continue to rob God and assure your rebuke when you meet up with Him since the work of Jesus you have been taught to "trust" in never applied in the first place?

Answer for yourself: Do you grasp the horrible consequences of such ignorance of the truths of God's Word and the sure fate that awaits you because Christianity has not studied hard enough to see the truth since blinded by anti-Semitism of the Church Fathers since the 2nd century?

Well if you tithe according to the manner of most Christian Churches today you not only rob from God but from those created in His image as well. If you continue to give to churches which don't obey the Laws and Commandments concerning tithing you are a partaker of their sins and there is no atonement for that sin for you when you die unless your repent now of such behavior! Sadly few Christians know what the Jewish Scriptures command regarding "how to tithe". Giving your tithe to the Christian Church where the elders fail to appropriate the correct percentages into the designated areas commanded by the Torah guarantees you that your rob God! While pastoring in Dallas as a Staff Pastor on staff of a mega church, the last two years I could no longer tithe to the church where I Pastored having learned the truth about the tithe. Contention was an understatement but when truth comes error must leave

Repentance toward that sin, a new obedience, a new conduct, and confession of that sin is our only methods of atonement and if not done, will ensure we enter into the World to Come with sins in those areas where atonement has not been proved.

PUTTING IT ALL TOGETHER

You have see that it a life, you life, that makes atonement for sin. Such repentance, confession, prayer, and new obedient conduct is the only reassurance that at-that-moment you are right with God. Being so, and having done so, then you have the right to be on the altar of God and you are ...in your heart. You need not bring an animal sacrifice for you and your life are already one! The animal, if you remember, was only a physical demonstration of the atonement you already have acquired by your actions. Such is the mercy of God to reveal to us, His people, how we can cleans ourselves.

The Gentile Christian Church, over the centuries, has stolen such truths from you and corrupted the truth and recorded it in their anti-Semitic document...the New Testament

There is no atonement for the sins of the Second Tablet of the Law unless you make it for yourself!

You now understand our lives, or our "souls", will be devoted to error instead of truth and our lives will not provide atonement unless we repent. But one must know the truth in order to repent or else he never knows he is wrong. That is why study is so important. This is only one small example.

After years of dedicated intense study I found that worshipping according to Christian teachings often is sin as the vast majority of Christianity today has changed the Sabbath as well as made obsolete the Holy Days and Festivals of God and there are commandments regarding Gentile believers keeping them. Remember your poor tithe goes to these observances as well.

You might not be a murderer with a gun, but our word "kill" is equated by the Rabbis to mean gossip, slander, blasphemy, as well as the failure to take care of the poor, widows, and the orphans. The Rabbis group this with murder which again is sin of the Second Tablet of the Law.

Answer four yourself: Can you see how involved this can get and how important for the Christian who loves God to know and make adjustments with his life while he can?

"FAITH OF JESUS" OR "FAITH IN JESUS"

In discussion of these aspects of the Sacrificial system, we must never forget that we are called to accept the "faith of Jesus" and not just have "faith in Jesus." In these articles I have presented the faith of Yeshua in light to his views on atonement. Yeshua believed the Tanakh (Law, Prophets, Writings). If we are to approximate holiness by living Christ-like that means we have to have a new understanding of how we are to live and we must become familiar with the Laws of God which regulate man's conduct in life. Only then will our lives, lived in conformity to the Laws of God, result in atonement. At your death you will appreciate the atonement your life procured through your obedience and repentance when shown your lives and conduct are in error. Such Laws, statutes, and ordinances reveal to us, in 248 positive commandments, what God is and does, and in 365 negative commandments what God is not and what He does not do. Only in incorporating them into our lives can be assured that what we do and believe is correct. Only then can our lives [souls] be an atonement. Failure to measure our conduct as compared with these commandments only assures we live by our own understanding, and that cannot be trusted for our hearts, according to Jeremiah are desperately wicked and we cannot know them for sure. Having this knowledge, the rest is up to you. Shalom.

GNOSTICISM AND THE MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD #3

THE TERMS OF THE NEW-RENEWED COVENANT

We shall see shortly how the writer of the Book of Hebrew purposely misquotes Jer. 31:31 and uses a different word to express "new" that was not used in the Hebrew. Instead of "renewed, reaffirmed, reestablished" the writer of the Book of Hebrews conveyed to his readers that this "new" Covenant promised by Jeremiah was one that "replaced" the former Covenant. Yet that being a fact we should focus on something the writer of the Book of Hebrew does get correct. In both of these Covenants, whether "renewed" or "replaced" both tell us that God will put His Laws in our minds and our hearts. Let us not loose sight of that since most of us grew up in Pauline Churches that have had instilled in our minds a great dislike for the Law and Torah of God.

For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, says the LORD: I will put My laws in their mind and write them on their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people. -- Hebrews 8:10

Hopefully we have learned much in the three prior articles. We should have seen by now the radical theology espoused by the writer of the Book of Hebrews simply does not hold water when compared with the Hebrew Scriptures. We have seen purposeful misquotes by this writer and the out right misrepresentation of the Hebrew Scriptures to his readers which in that day and time had little resources available to themselves to verify that what the writer of this Book was saying was true. Such resources are available to us today and we are without excuse.

Answer for yourself: As a Gentile Christian, have you allowed God to put His Laws in your mind and write them on your heart as seen in the above passage, or have you ascribed to "another Gospel" by misunderstanding true Biblical Faith in listening to such teachings espoused by the writer of the Book of Hebrews and Paul and other doctrines taught in the New Testament which teach that the Old Covenant has passed away instead of being "RENEWED"?

Notice that we cannot readily identify any reciprocal terms within this above Scripture. God is active in three ways in this covenant:

- I will put My laws in their mind
- and write them on their hearts
- I will be their God

The only response by the second party of this covenant is a passive one - "they shall be My people".

Answer for yourself: Who will be God's people?

Answer for yourself: Everyone? No!

Only those with whom the New [Re-Newed] Covenant is made. That is the House of Israel and Judah. God has not promised salvation for all.

"Not everyone who says to Me, 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father in heaven. -- Matthew 7:21

But God has promised salvation for the House of Israel.

And so all Israel will be saved, as it is written: "The Deliverer will come out of Zion, And He will turn away ungodliness from Jacob; -- Romans 11:26

Answer for yourself: Has Paul quoted the passage correctly in Romans 11:26? Has Paul misled us in the above verse and has he purposefully misquoted the Torah? Can a "Pharisee of Pharisees" who is understandably familiar with his own Hebrew Scriptures accidently misquote such a passage and teach a false atonement?

Answer for yourself: What does the Hebrew Scriptures in Isaiah 59:20-21 really say in this passage misquoted above? Let us look at what the Bible Jesus used has to say before it was corrupted by Christians.

20 And a redeemer will come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD. 21 And as for Me, this is My covenant with them, saith the LORD; My spirit that is upon thee, and My words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the LORD, from henceforth and for ever.

I hate to be hard on Paul for it stirs anger in people but I cannot help it. Paul changes the whole verse and purposefully misquotes the verse. We have the strong admonition of God to not change His Holy Word.

Deut 4:2 2 Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God which I command you. (KJV)

Deut 12:32 32 What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it. (KJV)

But we find Paul violating this commandment of God and passing off a "theological" misquote as if God had said it when He never did! Look at the theological implication here.

Paul would have us believe that when Messiah, the presumed redeemer, comes that he will personally cleans Jacob and the Jews from ungodliness, wickedness, and sin. But Isaiah never said the Messiah is coming to turn men from sin by some action on his part [like dying for them] nor was he coming for the wicked. Isaiah never said that the redeemer and messiah was to cleans men of sin. In fact Isaiah said just the opposite of what Paul says! Paul has lied to the Gentiles and Jews who could not longer read or speak Hebrew. They would never know. And neither would we Gentile Christians unless for some reason you knew Hebrew or consulted a Hebrew Bible!

The Covenant had provided the way for men to turn from sin and be accepted once again with God. It has been the same since the beginning of time. God commanded men everywhere to repent, confess their sin, pray, bring restitution for sins of the Second Tablet of the Law, bring alms, etc. Contrary to what Paul says the redeemer is coming for those who have turned from ungodliness, wickedness, and sin; not those who practice it! In fact Isaiah tells us that the redeemer is coming for those who has kept God's Covenant and kept His words in their hearts and minds. Let me remind you that this Covenant and God's words are "FOREVER" according to Isaiah. But we saw in the prior article that the writer of the Book of Hebrews has done away with not only the Covenant but replaced it with a "NEW" Covenant, a NEW Priesthood from his own Gnostic ideas, and sets aside God's Law and Words in lieu of his Gnostic "special revelation" that supposedly "saves." The writer of the Book of Hebrews lies as well!

The writer of the Book of Hebrew also misrepresents Jeremiah 31 and changes completely the meaning of the word "new" which he uses in Hebrews 8:8:

Heb 8:8 8 For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: (KJV)

Thayer's Greek Lexicon gives us the word used by the writer of the Book of Hebrews:

2537 kainos- new

- a) as respects form: recently made, fresh, recent, unused, unworn
- b) as respects substance: of a new kind, unprecedented, novel, uncommon, unheard of

Here we see the writer of the Book of Hebrews is using a word that conveys the meaning of "New" as in something that has never been before, unprecedented, never heard of before, a new kind, etc. This carries the idea of "new"as in never existing previously. This is not the idea carried by the word "New" used by Jeremiah however!

Answer for yourself: Do you know what the Hebrew word meant that was used by Jeremiah in chapter 31 in describing the "new" Covenant from which the writer of the Book of Hebrews alludes? Let us look at it to see if the writer of the Book of Hebrews had been truthful to us or not. Let us look at the Hebrew of Jeremiah 31 from which we are to believe that the writer of the Book of Hebrews has made a faithful quote. First let us look at the original Hebrew that came first:

Jer 31:31 31 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

The Strong's Concordance records for us that the Hebrew word for "new" as used in this verse means: (KJV) 2319 chadash (khaw-dawsh'); from 2318; new: KJV-- fresh, new thing.

The Strong's Concordance also shows us that the word also carries the meaning of the "root" word from which it was taken (play close attention):

2318 chadash (khaw-dash'); a primitive root; to be new; causatively, to rebuild: KJV-- renew, repair.

Answer for yourself: Do you see the Hebrew word, from which the New Testament quotes, means to renew and repair something that is existing, and not replace with another "something"?

The Hebrew carries not idea that we find in the Book of Hebrews; namely, a "replacement" that is of a new kind, unprecedented, novel, uncommon, unheard of. Instead it says just the opposite. Jeremiah was speaking of an existing Covenant which was to be "rebuilt, renewed, repaired; NOT REPLACED as the writer of Hebrews states. Again we have been lied to!

No where does Jeremiah talk about a "Covenant" passing away, its Laws passing away or being replaced, its Priesthood being replaced with a replacement Melchizedek Priesthood. He knew better; it is we Gentile Christians which are so unfamiliar with the Hebrew Scriptures and the Bible Jesus knew and used which don't know any better.

The only way to be a party to the New [Re-Newed] Covenant is to be grafted into the Israel of God whereby as repentant Gentile believers in God we become members of God's Divine Family. We must be spiritually reborn into this existing Covenant relationship. Understand as well that the Covenant of Noah for the non-Jew is the foundation upon which the Covenant of Moses was built!

Answer for yourself: Now what part does God's law play in the new [renewed] covenant? The writer of the Book of Hebrews tells us that they don't!

Answer for yourself: How can I know for sure that when you refer to the New Covenant in the New Testament that your references to it being "renewed" is correct?

As if that were not enough let us look at Brown, Driver, Briggs Hebrew Lexicon for there meaning of Jeremiah's "new" covenant:

2318 chadash- to be new, to renew, to repair

a) (Piel)

- 1) to renew, to make anew
- 2) to repair

b) (Hithpael) to renew oneself

Answer for yourself: Dear Christian, can you see for yourself that there is NOT a NEW COVENANT at all like you have been told and believed your whole life, but rather you are under the SAME COVENANT which God renews and repairs through the renewing of the individual by repentance based upon correct knowledge?

Answer for yourself: Did you notice also that God is NOT REPLACING His Covenant, like your Pastors and Churches have done, but rather is desirous of your renewal to obedience to His Covenant Laws, statutes, and commandments [as He has always been with Israel]?

Remember that the Lord says "I will put My laws in their mind and write them on their hearts" in His Covenant.

Answer for yourself: What is this law and why has it been placed in the mind and written on the heart of every child of God?

Let's deal with the first part of this question.

Answer for yourself: Where do we find out what "MY LAW" is?

Now remember that when the promise of the New [Re-Newed] Covenant was given by God through the prophet Jeremiah, reference was made to the Old Covenant by way of contrast. The writer of the Book of Hebrews again misrepresents the passage in question:

Hebrews 8:9

"Behold, the days are coming, says the LORD, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt;

because they did not continue in My covenant, and I disregarded them, says the LORD.

We saw previously how the writer of the Book of Hebrew conveys the false idea of God's rejection of the Jewish people by inserting the word "disregarded" in applying to Israel when the original Hebrew used the word "married them."

In the Old Covenant God asked the Israelites to keep God's law. In the New Covenant "My law" is imparted by the Holy Spirit of God as a free gift - placed in the mind and written on the heart. In this covenant, the Law is not just written by the finger of God on tablets of stone to be obeyed but on our hearts. Rather, by the Spirit of God it becomes the inherent will, and desire of every regenerated believer. It is written on the heart and mind of God's people. It is a shame that most of us grew up in Christian Churches that failed to understand this and taught just the opposite.

Answer for yourself: How can we any longer call ourselves a New Testament or New Covenant believer if we do not have God's Torah and His Laws written in you mind and heart, let alone obey them [remember we are not speaking of the sacrificial laws]? Although most Christians say that they love God and their neighbor, few understand that it is these very Laws of our Covenant that God desires to write in our minds and in our hearts. These very Laws are the commandments regarding our respective Covenant with God.

Most Christians are not acquainted with most of the Laws of God concerning Gentiles as part of believing Israel. It is within these Laws and other examples that we find examples teaching the non-Jew to observe the Passover and the Biblical Feasts, and most of our experience in most Christian Churches have been to neglect them.

I could go on for hours, but hopefully you get my point. God has set standards for our obedience to be in good standing in His Covenant. While we may be in "good standing" in our Christian Churches and circles, that is no assurance we are in "good standing" with Him, and without the proper knowledge and repentance when we learn then we as typical Christians and followers of Jesus are facing at our deaths rebuke and not reward. Listening and learning from such as the writer of the Book of Hebrew that is in the New Covenant guarantees such rebuke!

Jesus explained how the Old Covenant law relates to the New Covenant believer. You'll find it recorded in the opening chapters of Matthew's gospel.

"Do not think that I came to destroy the Law or the Prophets. I did not come to destroy but to fulfill. "For assuredly, I say to you, till heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle will by no means pass from the law till all is fulfilled.

"Whoever therefore breaks one of the least of these commandments, and teaches men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whoever does and teaches them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

"For I say to you, that unless your righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, you will by no means enter the kingdom of heaven.

"You have heard that it was said to those of old, 'You shall not murder, and whoever murders will be in danger of the judgment.' "But I say to you that whoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment. And whoever says to his brother, 'Race!' shall be in danger of the council. But whoever says, 'You fool!' shall be in danger of hell fire. "Therefore if you bring your gift to the altar, and there remember that your brother has something against you, "leave your gift there before the altar, and go your way. First be reconciled to your brother, and then come and offer your gift. "Agree with your adversary quickly, while you are on the way with him, lest your adversary deliver you to the judge, the judge hand you over to the officer, and you be thrown into prison. "Assuredly , I say to you, you will by no means get out of there till you have paid the last penny.

"You have heard that it was said to those of old, 'You shall not commit adultery.' "But I say to you that whoever looks at a woman to lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart. -- Matthew 5:17-28

The opening words in this passage clearly explain the relationship Jesus had with the law of God. He was the expounder and rightful interpreter of the law; not the replacer of it like later writers such as the writer of the Book of Hebrews.

Now when Yeshua proclaimed that "Whoever therefore breaks one of the least of these commandments, and teaches men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven; but whoever does and teaches them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven", he was referring to the commandments of the Law (verse 17). There was no New Testament at that time and would not be for another 400 years! He confirms which law he is talking about by listing some examples and showing their application to the Spirit filled believer. Messiah [Christ] referred to "these commandments" of the Law collectively and warned against breaking even the least of them.

God's law is the law of the Ten Commandments and the law of the Old Covenant. The laws of God are unchanging and timeless.

Abraham, a non-Jew, knew God's Laws and Commandments which framed his Covenant with God and he knew them long before Sinai and Exodus 20.

"because Abraham obeyed My voice and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws." -- Genesis 26:5

Israel knew them.

And the LORD said to Moses, "How long do you refuse to keep My commandments and My laws? "See! For the LORD has given you the Sabbath; therefore He gives you on the sixth day bread for two days. Let every man remain in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day." So the people rested on the seventh day. -- Exodus 16:28-30

"You came down also on Mount Sinai, And spoke with them from heaven, And gave them just ordinances and true laws, Good statutes and commandments. You made known to them Your holy Sabbath, And commanded them precepts, statutes and laws, By the hand of Moses Your servant. -- Nehemiah 9:13-14

King David knew them.

"Therefore, LORD God of Israel, now keep what You promised Your servant David my father, saying, 'You shall not fail to have a man sit before Me on the throne of Israel, only if your sons take heed to their way, that they walk in My law as you have walked before Me.' -- 2 Chronicles 6:16

King Solomon knew them.

Keep my commands and live, And my law as the apple of your eye. Bind them on your fingers; Write them on the tablet of your heart. -- Proverbs 7:2-3

Sadly, occasionally the nation of Judah rejected them.

Hear, O earth! Behold, I will certainly bring calamity on this people; The fruit of their thoughts, Because they have not heeded My words, Nor My law, but rejected it. -- Jeremiah 6:19

And the LORD said, "Because they have forsaken My law which I set before them, and have not obeyed My voice, nor walked according to it, "but they have walked according to the dictates of their own hearts and after the Baals, which their fathers taught them," therefore thus says the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel: "Behold, I will feed them, this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink. "I will scatter them also among the Gentiles, whom neither they nor their fathers have known. And I will send a sword after them until I have consumed them." -- Jeremiah 9:13-16

Let us learn from these examples.

Answer for yourself: Dear Christian brothers and sisters, what would be your fate if after having God's Laws written on our hearts and minds you reject that knowledge and choose to walk according to your own fleshly desires?

"For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance [without their own repentance]; ..." Heb 6:4-6 (KJV)

"For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses...For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Heb 10:26-31 (KJV)

Remember the law has now been placed in our minds and written on our hearts. Lord teach us to read our hearts!

WHAT ARE THESE LAWS?

God's law is simply a reflection of His nature. God does not lie. Therefore godly people don't lie. God is faithful therefore godly people do not commit adultery. When we are obedient to God's law we are simply following the example of our Creator.

Answer for yourself: Why should we have no other gods and make no graven images to worship? Because in obedience to this law we acknowledge that there is no other God but Him.

Answer for yourself: Why should we never take his name in vain? Because we should reverence and respect Him.

Answer for yourself: Why should we keep the Sabbath day holy? Because "in six days the LORD made the heavens and the earth, the sea, and all that is in them, and rested the seventh day. Therefore the LORD blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it". (Exodus 20:11) By keeping the Sabbath we follow his example as an acknowledgment of Him as our Creator.

Because He loves us we should love God and our fellowman. There is nothing mystical about how the written law came into being. It simply expresses the nature of God. These Laws reveal to us what God is and what he does; what God is not and what He does not do. God is just, God is faithful, God is love. These Laws are the greatest gift that God ever gave mankind; God gave us the blueprint of Whom He is and made it simple for us to be like Him if we only adopt and follow these guidelines/Laws/Commandments which make us like Him in thought and action.

We don't need to search the New Testament to find confirmation of each commandment. You won't find it as it is not there. Only a few Commandments and Laws are listed among the large volume of anti-Law rhetoric found in the New Testament.

Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think of anything as being from ourselves, but our sufficiency is from God, who also made us sufficient as ministers of the new covenant, not of the letter but of the Spirit; for the letter kills, but the Spirit gives life. -- 2 Corinthians 3:5-6

The above passage is very confusing. It says in the beginning that we cannot be our own authorities on religious matters since lacking proper understanding; yet it goes on to say that obtaining of such knowledge from these Hebrew texts on the Law, for instance, is but the "letter" which kills. It writer goes on to make us believe that we can claim our own individual thoughts and ideas are of the "Spirit" and that is all we need to be New Covenant ministers. Our own understanding is sufficient to be competent ministers of this New Covenant. The sad fact is that without such knowledge everyone will have different ideas on what is and what is not "of the Spirit" and this has been proven out beyond any doubt by the existence of over 2,200 different Christian denominations with conflicting and contradicting doctrines concerning the "one" Jesus. Such a premise guarantees error; yet Paul said it. Many accept such things on face value having never thought it out or looked closely to such fruit of such perverse wisdom. Many of our actions might seem "good" but when compared with the Commandments which are the absolutes in regard to belief and conduct then our actions, as good as they might be intentioned, are shown to be anything but love. The Tithe as practiced by the vast majority of Christianity today is a perfect example. The Law commands that such moneys be used in ONLY certain ways and most Christian Churches uses the Tithe anyway they desire. Back to our point, not everything in the New Testament is "truth" and is to be believed without serious scrutiny and comparison with the Hebrew Scriptures.

As stated above let's not be deceived into thinking that we have the right to interpret what the Law is in terms of our own intellect. Without such study we simply don't know or can understand the depth of what these Commands instruct. The Rabbis teach us these things in their excellent commentaries. To believe and accept the miracle of the "heart-written law" is to seek the Holy Spirit's interpretation of them as expounded to Moses and his successors. This information is known best today by the Jewish people and their scholars. Only by study of the "Letter" of these Laws can one ever hope to fully understand them and their prescribed conduct for all of God's children. It will be a sad day when we wake up "dead" and learn that as Gentile Christians we are to "depart" from God because our lives were full of "good intentions" that missed the mark of obedience toward Him and His Commandments and His Covenant with us. We can look to find the writer of the Book of Hebrew on that day and try to blame this whole thing on him and others like him who, being Gnostics and anti-Semites, rejected true Biblical Faith for one of their own making.

Remember this is "My law" (God's law) not "our law".

Trust in the LORD with all your heart, And lean not on your own understanding; -- Proverbs 3:5

Paul, in his letter to the Romans, describes two groups of people. Those who walk according to the flesh, and those who walk according to the Spirit. For those who walk according to the Spirit there is no condemnation. The righteous requirement of the law is fulfilled in them and they set their minds on the things of the Spirit.

There is therefore now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, who do not walk according to the flesh [there is condemnation if you walk according to the flesh and reject God's Laws and Covenants of obedience], but according to the Spirit...he condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteous requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit. For those who live according to the flesh set their minds on the things of the flesh, but those who live according to the Spirit, the things of the Spirit. For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, nor indeed can be. So then, those who are in the flesh cannot please God. -- Romans 8:1-8

On the other hand the carnally minded person who walks according to the flesh is promised death. The carnal mind is at enmity with God and cannot please Him.

Answer for yourself: It is a scary though, isn't it, to know you have attended church you whole life and believed another Gospel, and that your belief system is carnal in that it rejects the sum total of what God has commanded you…to obey His Laws as a manifestation of your love for Him and your fellow man?

Answer for yourself: It is a scary though, isn't it, to know you have attended church you whole life and never heard this message, but because of our lack of study, as well as your Pastor's, have been led into deception and developed carnal minds that have believed a lie instead of God's truth?

Now there is an interesting fact about these two groups. The carnal mind is said to be "not subject to the law of God, nor indeed can be". Yet the carnal mind is under the condemnation of death.

The spiritually minded are free from the law of sin and death and are under no condemnation.

You cannot be Spiritually minded and not be submitted to the Laws of God!

The function of the law is clearly spelled out in this passage. The carnal person is under the condemnation and curse of the law. The intent of this passage is that this "death" is not physical but "Spiritual." Yet violation of certain of God's Laws can end in one's physical death. The spiritual person is set free from the condemnation of the Law because he attempts to obey God's Laws and repents when he fails to live up to them. The carnal mind is "not subject to the Law of God" in that it rebels against God's law. The spiritual mind is "subject to the law of God" and the righteous requirement of the law is fulfilled in those who attempt and make honest effort to walk in the Spirit by applying these Laws to one's life.

So the Law of God is unchanged. It deals out the curse of death to the lawless person but to the one who lives a life of obedience and repentance such a one is forgiven by God and is considered righteous and accepted with God.

Answer for yourself: What then should be the response of those who walk in the Spirit to the heart-written Law of the New Covenant?

I say then: Walk in the Spirit, and you shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. For the flesh lusts against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary to one another, so that you do not do the things that you wish. But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. Now the works of the flesh are evident, which are: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lewdness, idolatry, sorcery, hatred, contentions, jealousies, outbursts of wrath, selfish ambitions, dissensions, heresies, envy, murders, drunkenness, revelries, and the like; of which I tell you beforehand, just as I also told you in time past, that those who practice such things will not inherit the kingdom of God. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control. Against such there is no Law. And those who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. Let us not become conceited, provoking one another, envying one another. -- Galatians 5:16-26

CONCLUSION

Rigorous commandment keeping was never offered as a means of salvation. Yet there is no salvation outside of obedience. James 2:17 17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. (KJV) Thus we see that true saving faith culminates in "works" and obedience. We seek to be saved from the curse of the Law (ie the penalty of sin) so an acknowledgment of sin is a prerequisite for salvation. Let's look at the book of Hebrews and select a few pertinent verses which might be true for a change.

For who, having heard, rebelled? Indeed, was it not all who came out of Egypt, led by Moses? Now with whom was He angry forty years? Was it not with those who sinned, whose corpses fell in the wilderness? And to whom did He swear that they would not enter His rest, but to those who did not obey? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief [culminated in disobedience]. Therefore, since a promise remains of entering His rest [through obedience], let us fear lest any of you seem to have come short of it. For indeed the gospel was preached to us as well as to them; but the word which they heard did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in those who heard it. -- Hebrews 3:16-19, 4:1-2

Answer for yourself: What was this "gospel?" Was it the progressive and evolving theology of Paul and Rome that says to "eat the body and drink the blood of a god" like Jesus? Was it to believe in all the successive theology created around Jesus by the Roman Church? Or was it simply a message of faith in God and obedience to the Word of God? This should not be a hard one to figure out! If you have a problem just look at Matt. 19:

Matt 19:16-17 16 And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do*, that I may have eternal life? 17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life,* keep the commandments*. (KJV)*

Paul tells us that the gospel of Jesus Christ was preached to Israel in the desert! Paul would have us believe that it is his gospel which he preached. No, it is not the Pauline gospel and the later Roman gospel which Paul calls "my gospel". No it was the the SAME message that God has always given His people: Believe and obey and repent when you fall short and return to God with a contrite and broken heart and return to obedience to God and His Commandments. It was not a gospel of works, it was a gospel that required faith that responded in accepted behavior in all facets of life. Commandment keeping alone never constituted the gospel without first faith in God. Certainly if you could keep all the commandments of God in every respect then you would escape the penalty for sin (the curse of the Law). But this curse was abated if one who failed the Law responded in repentance and obedience. Atonement was effected in one's life through repentance, obedience, confession, prayer, restitution, alms, etc.

For whoever shall keep the whole Law, and yet stumble in one point, he is guilty of all. -- James 2:10

So every individual who sins received the death penalty of the Law. The penalty for such disobedience was separation from God but the remedy for such a condition that affects all of mankind was a return to God effected through repentance, obedience, confession, prayer, restitution, alms, etc. Abraham did not have access to the elaborate Levitical system that was set up under Moses yet we know he is saved.

"And I say to you that many will come from east and west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. -- Matthew 8:11

Abraham's salvation, like ours, is granted on the grounds of faith and obedience.

"because Abraham obeyed My voice and kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws." -- Genesis 26:5

Yet Paul has a different take on the whole thing:

For what does the Scripture say? "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness." Now to him who works, the wages are not counted as grace but as debt. But to him who does not work but believes on Him who justifies the ungodly, his faith is accounted for righteousness, just as David also describes the blessedness of the man to whom God imputes righteousness apart from works: "Blessed are those whose Lawless deeds are forgiven, And whose sins are covered; Blessed is the man to whom the LORD shall not impute sin." -- Romans 4:3-8

Answer for yourself: When does God justify the ungodly? What God is Paul teaching to us?

Exod 23:7 7 Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked. (KJV)

The Hebrew word of "justify" seen from Brown-Drivers-Briggs Hebrew Lexicon:

6663 tsadaq- to be just, to be righteous

a) (Qal)

- 1) to have a just cause, to be in the right
- 2) to be justified
- 3) to be just (of God)
- 4) to be just, to be righteous (in conduct and character)

b) (Niphal) to be put or made right, to be justified

c) (Piel) to justify, to make to appear righteous, to make someone righteous

d) (Hiphil)

- 1) to do or bring justice (in administering law)
- 2) to declare righteous, to justify
- 3) to justify, to vindicate the cause of, to save
- 4) to make righteous, to turn to righteousness

e) (Hithpael) to justify oneself; to make oneself righteous

We just read that Paul says God "justifies the ungodly" in the highly touted Book of Romans in 4:3-8.

But yet the word used for "justify" in the Hebrew shows that the concept of "justification" involves a person's own initiative in turning from sin to righteous behavior. A person justifies HIMSELF through repentance, returning to obedience of God's Laws and Commandments that affects one's conduct and behavior. This is a personal decision. If Paul was really a Pharisee of Pharisees then he should be very familiar with this concept and surely not teach it wrong; unless of course he is spreading his own "gospel."

If I did not know better Paul is saying that "belief" alone without necessary obedience attains Eternal Life.

Jesus says just the opposite in Matt. 19 which we saw above.

Answer for yourself: Which "gospel" are we to believe since they are opposite?

Let us summarize what we have learned in prior articles. The Levitical system served a purpose, in that it was a ritualistic symbol and representation of the whole atonement process that involves repentance, obedience, confession, prayer, restitution, alms, etc. But adherence to the Levitical process did not offer salvation; it was only a picture of it IF a man "justified himself" before God. Again we saw in Acts 21 thirty years after Jesus' death James, the Jerusalem Church, and Paul continued to operate within the Levitical system operating at that time thus nullifying any possible belief that the Melchizedek Priesthood had replaced the Levitical Priesthood in Jesus. Obviously the Jerusalem Church did not accept the theology that the writer of the Book of Hebrews was espousing. Paul, if you remember, was commanded to make an open show of his support of the Torah by submitting to the Nazarite Vow which required his obedience to the Levitical Priesthood since being charged by others that he was preaching a different "gospel" other than that of Jesus and the Jerusalem Church in preaching that God justifies the ungodly and that the Law was replaced by grace.

Speaking of the Levitical Law (the Law that was added because of transgressions) Paul says,

What purpose then does the Law serve? It was added because of transgressions, till the Seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was appointed through angels by the hand of a mediator [angelic meditation is another mark of Gnosticism...Paul is a Gnostic and few Christians notice this]. Now a mediator does not mediate for one only, but God is one. Is the Law then against the promises of God? Certainly not! For if there had been a Law given which could have given life, truly righteousness would have been by the Law.

Hey Paul...righteousness comes by obeying the Law! Moses and Jesus teaches we make ourselves righteous and accepted with God

But the Scripture has confined all under sin, that the promise by faith in Jesus Christ might be given to those who believe. But before faith came, we were kept under guard by the Law, kept for the faith which would afterward be revealed. Therefore the Law was our tutor to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after faith has come, we are no longer under a tutor. -- Galatians 3:19-25

This all sounds so nice until you find out that such progressive anti-Law theology was written after 180 A.D. and the whole of Galatians chapter 3 excluding one verse is NOT PRESENT IN ANY SURVIVING MANUSCRIPTS OF GALATIANS THAT CAN BE DATED PRIOR TO 180 A.D. AND IRENAEUS WHO GIVES US THE SECOND NEW TESTAMENT [most likely written by Irenaeus].

This is a major problem once you see this for yourself. Having established that the Law was never offered as a way of salvation in the past or the present, we now ask the question, "Why did God deliver the commandments to his chosen people"?

The Law of God not only teaches us the nature of God but it also teaches us what sin is. The Law is to function as a guide to life of what is acceptable and not acceptable conduct by God from His creation.

HOW MIXED UP CAN PAUL GET AND HOW CONFUSED ARE WE BECAUSE OF HIM?

Therefore by the deeds of the Law no flesh will be justified in His sight, for by the Law is the knowledge of sin. -- Romans 3:20

(For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified. (KJV)
Romans 2:13 13

Answer for yourself: Did you see that Paul contradicts himself completely in the above passages? That should not be surprising since we already saw Paul contradict Moses and Jesus. What is terrible is that 2/3 of the New Testament is written by this man or written later by his followers in his name!

Whoever commits sin also commits Lawlessness, and sin is Lawlessness. -- 1 John 3:4

Answer for yourself: Is this a New Testament verse? It sure is and it contradicts Paul. Or vice versa Paul now also contradicts James and the Jerusalem Church. This is again not surprising as we have already seen this in Acts 21. The gospel of Jesus Christ is a gospel of faith and repentance. Jesus emphasized repentance in his preaching. The word "repentance" was the first word in the New Testament by John the Immerser, Peter, and Jesus.

From that time Jesus began to preach and to say, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." -- Matthew 4:17

Peter preached it.

"Repent therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, so that times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord, -- Acts 3:19

John the Baptist preached it.

Matt 3:1-2 1 In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judaea, 2 And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. (KJV)

To repent unto obedience of the Law and the Commandments means to turn from sin.

Answer for yourself: How can we be convicted of sin unless we have the Law of God in our minds to tell us what sin is? Dear child of God you must study and study was the highest form of worship in the first century church!

What shall we say then? Is the Law sin? Certainly not! On the contrary, I would not have known sin except through the Law. For I would not have known covetousness unless the Law had said, "You shall not covet." But sin, taking opportunity by the commandment, produced in me all manner of evil desire. For apart from the Law sin was dead. I was alive once without the Law, but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died. And the commandment, which was to bring life, I found to bring death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it killed me. Therefore the Law is holy, and the commandment holy and just and good. -- Romans 7:7-12

Here again we have confused reasoning by Paul. According to Paul the only purpose of the Law was to define what is and what is not sin. This of course is correct but far short of its true purpose of training men and women to live before God acceptable lives reflective of Laws and Commandments which reveal accepted behavior and conduct before God. These Laws show mankind how to justify themselves before God. If we truly turn from sin then the evidence of the indwelling Holy Spirit will be obedience to the Law of God.

"..... He condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteous requirement of the Law might be fulfilled in us who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit. -- Romans 8:3-4

Now that is better Paul. Obedience of the Law of God is the Fruit of the Spirit.

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control. Against such there is no Law. -- Galatians 5:23

Obedience to the Laws and Commandments yield the fruit mentioned above. The scriptures plainly tell us that love is the essence of the Law of God. As stated earlier each Law and Commandment is the absolute authority in what Love is and what it is not. The Law and the Commandments in the Covenant that the writer of the Book of Hebrews quotes which God desires to write on our hearts and minds teach us what Love does and does not do. Absolute Divine Love is expressed in and through God's Laws; both positive and negative Commandments. These Laws are manifestations of Whom God is and does and Whom God is not and does not do. The fruit of these Laws when acted out in one's life yields the fruits of the Spirit which Paul mentions in Gal. 5.

Then one of them, a Lawyer, asked Him a question, testing Him, and saying, "Teacher, which is the great commandment in the Law?" Jesus said to him, " 'You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your mind.' "This is the first and great commandment. "And the second is like it: 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' "On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets." -- Matthew 22:35-40

Love does no harm to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfillment of the Law. -- Romans 13:10

For all the Law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: "You shall love your neighbor as yourself." -- Galatians 5:14

If you really fulfill the royal Law according to the Scripture, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself," you do well; -- James 2:8

Here Paul gets it right and agrees with James. Understand not all Paul writes is wrong for much is later penned in his name. Yet before we think Paul sinless and not responsible for another Gospel we need only look to Gal. 2 where he slanders the Apostles and shows them great disrespect, the Antioch incident where is later called upon the carpet by James for teaching idolatry and breaking the Noahide Laws and Covenant which will precipitate the Acts 15 Council later, and the Acts 21 accusation that Paul had taught the abolition of the Law and the Covenant to Jews and Gentiles in order to replace it with one of his own making; "my gospel." If our lives show the fruit of the Spirit, love firstly to God and love to our fellowman then we are in harmony with God's Law, but let us not be so simple to fail to understand that it is these very Commandments which define for us what God considers love. What man considers love is often not love to God. For example, if we give our moneys to churches in our Tithe and the church fails to used these gifts according to the Commandments concerning them, then have we truly loved our neighbor if we have not fed or clothed him with all the Tithe from 2 out of 6 years (1/3 collected), but rather remodeled the church auditorium or got another satellite for the television ministry, etc.? It only begins here. What we consider "good" or is defined for us by others as "good" is not always obedience of the Laws and Commandments which render us "righteous" and which "justifies ourselves." We can give our Tithe to our Church all day long and be disobedient and most of are since few if any Christian Churches practice Tithing according to the Commandments of God.

But he who looks into the perfect Law of liberty and continues in it, and is not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, this one will be blessed in what he does.* -- James 1:25

Blessed is the man whom You instruct, O LORD, And teach out of Your Law, -- Psalms 94:12

Praise the LORD! Blessed is the man who fears the LORD, Who delights greatly in His commandments. -- Psalms 112:1

Blessed are the undefiled in the way, Who walk in the Law of the LORD! -- Psalms 119:1

Blessed are those who do His commandments, that they may have the right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the city. -- Revelation 22:14

Answer for yourself: Now shall we believe the writer of the Book of Hebrews that the Covenant was replaced, that the Levitical Priesthood was replaced, that the Melchizedek Priesthood has replaced anything, that Jesus is the new Melchizedek Priesthood, that God disregarded Israel, that God justifies the ungodly, that we have a "New" Covenant that replaced the Covenant of Moses and Noah, etc.? If you up to now never thought seriously about study of the Christian Faith and the origin of its theologies the time is now.

Hopefully now you understand the role that the Sacrificial System played as the "Law that was added" and its role in atonement. Along with that we saw enough to make us rethink a lot of Christian theology. I wish that did not have to happen but it seems our religious documents are less than credible.
